15. "She is more precious than rubies, and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her." So also in chapter viii, 11. And again, in Job xxviii, 18, it is written, "The price of wisdom is above rubies." When Mary sat at Jesus' feet and heard His word, and Martha seemed to find a little fault with her, Jesus said, "But one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her." Whatever He meant by those words we certainly know that He Himself, the wisdom of God, is to us the one thing needful, and in Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily (Col. ii, 9).

16. "Length of days in her right hand, and in her left hand riches and honor." In chapter viii, 18, it is written, "Riches and honor are with Me; yea, durable riches and righteousness." There are riches which perish, which are of use only in this world, and there are durable riches, which only He can give. "There is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing; there is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches" (xiii, 7). He made Himself poor that we might be rich. We may be poor, yet make many rich (II Cor. viii, 9; vi, 10).

17. "Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." They are also paths of righteousness (Ps. xxiii, 3), and the work of righteousness shall be peace, and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever (Isa. xxxii, 17). The path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day (iv, 18,). He Himself is the way as well as the wisdom, and to abide in Him is the secret of it all.

Do You Realize It?

Chautauqua and Chautauquans are becoming very numerous all over the land. The word is a synonym of something good. It stands for knowledge, progress, advancement. Knowledge is a power to accomplish something. It is obtained in many ways and in various channels. Newspapers, books and magazines are the greatest educators of the people, and we think it is safe to say that newspapers play a most important part in disseminating knowledge to the masses of the people. Not all have yet learned that there is something to be gained by reading all parts of a paper. Do not think that the editorials and telegraphic reports are all there is of value in a newspaper. The live paper of today has much that is interesting in advertisements. The very best talent is employed to write them. More real hard work is often shown in a good advertisement than in many articles which appear in the paper. No part of the paper has more hard labor bestowed upon it. These advertisements tell wonders, and are an important factor in imparting knowledge and general good to the public. They are the medium by which manufacturer and dealer or consumer are brought together. Many of them, in fact, are as much an item of news as anything in the paper. Such an advertisement as the one of The Larkin Co., in this issue, is all we have described. This Company are reliable. Their offers are genuine. We have known the Company for years and can vouch for them. Read their advertisement and order one of their combination boxes and get the Chautauqua Chair or one of their other useful premiums.

ILLINOIS MELANGE.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

Charles A. Ewing Dead.

Decatur, Ills., Nov. 7.—Charles A. Ewing, chairman of the Illinois gold standard Democratic committee, and one of the leaders in that movement from the first, died Friday morning at 6:30 of heart failure. He had been sick about three days. He was a cousin of Vice President Adlai D. Stevenson and has been for years one of the leaders at the Macon county bar and in central Illinois politics.

That Was Dead Easy; That Was.

Metropolis, Ills., Nov. 7.—Judge James C. Courtney fulfilled his election agreement with Miss Jane Neftsger Thursday afternoon. It was that if McKinley was elected he was to wheel her from her home to the postoffice and return, after first kissing her, the programme to be reverse in the event of Bryan's election. About 1,500 people witnessed the parade, and the judge was lustily cheered.

Lawler for Pension Commissioner.

Rockford, Ills., Nov. 7.—This city will have a candidate for the office of commissioner of pensions under the new administration in the person of Colonel Thomas G. Lawler, ex-commander-in-chief of the G. A. R. His friends are preparing for energetic work in his behalf.

State Notes.

Wilburt Fox, 20 years old, while showing his nerve handling a revolver in the presence of some of his friends, near his home at Oakdale, Ills., pointed it toward his head and pulled the trigger. He is dead. He was a member of one of the oldest and best known families in the county.

Chicago polled 46,055 more votes for president in Tuesday's election than did New York city.

The sum of $547,637.87 will be apportioned among the 698,231 children in Michigan at the rate of 77 cents per capita for school purposes.

Governor-Elect John R. Tanner and a party consisting of Supreme Court Justice I. N. Phillips, Thomas N. Jamieson and James Van Cleave, all of Illinois, have gone to Ocean Springs, Miss., to recuperate.

SIX MEN LOST IN THE GALE.

But One of the Crew of the Waukesha Alive and He Saved Unconscious.

Muskegon, Mich., Nov. 9.—The schooner Waukesha broke up while trying to ride out the gale at anchor here Saturday night, and only one survivor of her crew of seven has been rescued. He is still too weak to talk. At 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon she was sighted running with the gale under a torn mainsail. An attempt was made to enter Muskegon harbor, but the schooner drifted a mile south of the piers and then the anchor was dropped. She was riding three-quarters of a mile from shore at dark. The engineer and fireman of the city pumping station watched the lights until 9 p. m. Saturday, when they disappeared.

Shortly afterwards wreckage began coming in, and Sunday nothing could be seen of the lost boat. All night long wreckage continued to come up on the beach, and five bodies have been recovered. The names of the dead cannot be learned, as nothing about their clothing will identify them. The surviving sailor was washed ashore unconscious.

Later.—Last evening Frank Delach, the only survivor of the wreck, regained consciousness and made affidavit to the effect that there were seven men aboard the Waukesha, Captain Duncan Corbett, the mate, four seamen and a colored cook. When they arrived off Muskegon, Delach said, the captain mate and some of the sailors were very drunk.

MRS. CASTLE GETS THREE MONTHS.

Her Sentence, However, Will Almost Certainly be Remitted.

London, Nov. 7.—A few minutes was all that was necessary at the Marlborough police court, after all the evidence was in—with a plea of guilty for Mrs. Castle and one of not guilty for Mr. Castle—for the magistrates to bring in a verdict of guilty as to the wife and not guilty as to the husband. This was inevitable, but when the judges went on to send Mrs. Castle to prison for three months the unfortunate woman made the court room resound with her moans which were continued and could be heard in the court as she was led away to the jail. It was intimated by the magistrate that the sentence would not be exacted of Mrs. Castle in full.

The medical testimony was emphatic and conclusive that Mrs. Castle is possessed of a mania, taking the form of a desire to steal.

When Mrs. Castle arrived at the prison she was at once taken to the hospital, the doctor saying her case was undoubtedly one for the home office. She will surely have her punishment remitted.

The Vote in Michigan.

Detroit, Nov. 6—The total vote of Michigan appears to have been, in round numbers, 485,000, of which for governor Pingree received 275,000; Sligh, 205,000. Pingree's actual plurality has increased to 70,300. McKinley's is about 16,000 less, on account presumably of the "Bryan and Pingree" votes, which shows that a considerable element which favored Bryan also voted for Pingree. The legislature is now estimated to stand as follows: Senate, 26 Republicans; 6 fusionists; house, 80 Republicans, 20 fusionists.

Wm. H. Vanderbilt's Widow Dead.

New York, Nov. 7.—Mrs. Mary Louise Vanderbilt, widow of the late William H. Vanderbilt, died at 1:30 o'clock yesterday at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Eliott F. Shepard at Scarboro, in West Chester county. She was stricken with heart disease and died suddenly and unexpectedly. She was 75 years old.

JUDGMENT OF THE PEOPLE.

The Present Tendency Toward the Disfranchisement of the Propertyless.

The class struggle is already desperate. On the industrial horizon a vast array of power is standing over against them and their interests. When they inquire how the forces of labor are ordered, the gifts of reason and nature controlled and the produce of industrial energy distributed, they find all this is largely under the manipulation of men who know nothing by experience of the actual toilers of the land and are indifferent to the experience of the masses. These men are careless of the abominations of sweatshops, and, sitting far from the scenes of real and productive labor, manage to win gains by the device of their wits and to put a tax for their enrichment on every shovel, every hammer, ever tool indeed, that is wielded by the hand of toil. Labor sees the various industries dominated by trade combinations, trusts, syndicates and monopolies almost innumerable. There are institutions that make a chattel of labor and are designed to control the production and prices of commodities in all lines. Incalculable sums of money back and maintain them for the functions which they are intended to perform. In view of such facts it is no wonder if the toiling hosts, beholding this array of power and judging it to be inimical to their freedom and welfare, feel called upon to oppose it by a pool of their ballots in self defense.

There is something far worse arising in the American horizon, something that threatens even far more worse than corporate greed and the arrogance of wealth, to bring about a bitter and uncompromising conflict of class with class. This is the growing distrust of the principle of democracy itself. It was contended at the Unitarian club the other evening, and the contention was greeted with applause, that it is not safe to yield ourselves sympathetically to the mind and heart of common humanity. What the people at large think was declared to be fit matter only for calm, cool, scientific investigation. We should know the attitude of the common people only to be intelligent teachers of them, showing them the follies of their crude ideas which we as better men perceive.

I am obliged to confess that always when I hear such things said I can see finally that they mean the uprising again of that old consciousness of aristocracy. This was made clear to me when I heard it declared that whosoever makes common cause with the popular mind and heart does so at the sacrifice of those best personal qualities which we admire and honor. The tendency of democracy, it is said, is to put the control of public affairs into the hands of the ignorant and the propertyless, and when that is done it is bound to result in attempts to procure money fraudulently.

At once I fell to wondering what had become of our favorite Unitarian doctrine of the dignity of human nature, the trust not only in God, but in man, and I am glad to raise a voice once more in behalf of even the ignorant and the propertyless, to stand out for a democracy which shall give and preserve to them and for each of them a voice in our public affairs on equal terms with the wisest sage in America and with millionaires of the Pacific railroads and Standard Oil, for no man can make sure of his own right to voice and vote except by granting and defending the right of each other to utter his own word and record his vote as the expression of his will.

This is a false cry that we frequently hear now, declaring that universal suffrage is a radical mistake, that the door has been thrown too wide open and that it would be well to restrict the right to vote to a lesser circle. If we heed that voice and attempt to act upon it, modern civilization is doomed and will go down under revolution.—Rev. E. B. Payne, Berkeley, Cal.

A Shorter Workday.

Wages vary with the value of labor. In order to increase the value of labor or wages we must either increase the demand or decrease the supply or both. Wage earners are consumers and are therefore a demand for labor to the extent of their wages. Labor saving machinery, by supplanting wage earners, decreases the demand for labor, and by adding to the number of unemployed increases the supply of labor. Anything that decreases the demand for a commodity and increases the supply will surely cheapen that commodity. The logical result of machinery is pauper wages.

A reduction in the hours of labor without a reduction in wages will cause an increase in the number of wage earners, as it will require more men to do the work. An increase in the number of wage earners is an increase in the number of consumers or demand for labor and a decrease in the number of unemployed or supply of labor. Anything that increases the demand for a commodity and decreases the supply will surely increase the value of that commodity.—Cor. Chicago Record.

Costa Rica Wants Immigrants.

In order to foster agricultural enterprise, such as tobacco planting, raising of bananas, cocoa, coffee and sugar, the government of Costa Rica has recently decided to spend $50,000 every year in increasing desirable immigration. The introduction of labor is left to private initiative, but the government after an interval of two years pays to the planter for every immigrant introduced by him the cost of his passage to Costa Rica and freight expenses for his equipment. These inducements make it advisable for Americans to own plantations in Costa Rica and cultivate thereon part of the coffee, cocoa, bananas, sugar, etc., wanted in the United States. Since the Cuban revolution immense shipments of coffee and bananas have been made to New Orleans and New York, from over 100 plantations near Port Limon and along the railroad.

He Preaches For Labor.

Wholesome labor is a blessing, but toil, in the true sense of the word, is a burden which Christian leaders should endeavor to remove. Excessive toil, merely for bread, will be unnecessary when civilization is truly humane. No poor man should be compelled to work more than eight hours a day, and the week's labor should cease on Saturday noon and the laborer should receive a fair living wage. Labor is underpaid because the exigencies of trade compel an employer to buy his labor hands at the lowest price offering—in too many instances the foreigner, who has no love for our country or our God. Rightly organized California might easily feed 20,000,000 people; as the state is, it has overplus labor in all of its cities.—Rev. Dr. Birch of San Francisco.

Address W. I. PHILLIPS,

RICHARD RUSH: "Hooker, personifying law, eloquently exclaims, 'her seat is the bosom of God, her voice the harmony of the world; everything on earth does her homage, the highest as not beyond her control, the least as claiming her protection.' Masonry has overset this primordial system. She has dethroned this image of God upon earth. To reinstate it over so insolent a victor, we must have a political organization. There is no other way of assaulting, there is no other hope of vanquishing, there need be no other dream of humbling such a foe. It fights with desperation."

JOHN MARSHALL: "I never did utter the words ascribed to me, nor any other words importing the sentiment they convey. I never did say, 'Freemasonry is a jewel of the utmost value, that the pure in heart and life can only appreciate it fully, and that in a free government it must, it will be sustained and protected.' The fact mentioned in the resolution, that I have been in a lodge but once, so far as I can recollect, for nearly forty years, is evidence that I have no disposition to volunteer in this controversy, as the zealous partisan which this language would indicate."—Letter to Hon. John Bailey, Oct. 18, 1833.

Hon. Edward Blake, Leader in Canadian Parliament, in a Debate, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

Gen. Henry Sewell, a Companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army..... I was led by the influence of this 'Perfect Rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its character appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion, deism, because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity, unsustainable; its titles, tulsome; its rites, barbarous and absurd; its oaths, extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken; and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

Hon. William H. Seward, Speech in the Senate: "Secret societies, sir? Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men, in a secret lodge, order, class or council, and bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow men. Swear, sir! I, a man, an American citizen, a Christian, swear to submit myself to the guidance and direction of other men, surrendering my own judgment to their judgments, and my own conscience to their keeping! No. No, sir. I know quite well the fallibility of my own judgment, and my liability to fall into error and temptation. But my life has been spent in breaking the bonds of the slavery of men. I, therefore, know too well the danger of confiding power to irresponsible hands, to make myself a willing slave."

GEORGE WASHINGTON, in Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish Government, pre-supposes the duty of every individual to obey the established Government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive to this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction, to give it an artificial and extraordinary force, to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation, the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community..... However combinations and associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely, in the course of time and things, to become potent engines, by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men, will be enabled to subvert the power of the people, and to usurp for themselves the reins of Government; destroying, afterwards, the very engines which had lifted them to unjust dominion."

IT'S MIGHTY CLOSE

Vote on Presidential Electors in "Old Kaintuck."

FOR MCKINLEY BY LESS THAN 500.

So the Republican State Chairman Confidently Telegraphs the Major and Hanna—Indiana Is Safe for the Ohio Man and Bryan Carries His Own State—Wyoming Still in the Doubtful Column, Both Parties Claiming the State.

Louisville, Nov. 9.—The following statement was given out last night from the Republican headquarters:

"Practically complete official returns give McKinley 444 plurality in Kentucky, unofficial advices indicating that the four missing counties will increase rather than decrease these figures. The Republicans elect four members of congress and a judge of the highest court of the state for an eight-year term, and by the filling of vacancies have secured a majority of two in the general assembly on joint ballot, which insures a Republican successor to Senator Blackburn. The total vote in the state will approximate 425,000, an increase of 70,000 over last year's vote and 25,000 more than the highest estimates before the election. The Republican vote increased about 40,000 over Governor Bradley's vote a year ago, which was 17,000 higher than ever before cast in a presidential election, and the Democratic vote was 29,000 higher. These figures will give some idea of the intensity of the political struggle through which Kentucky has just passed."

Sends the Major and Hanna the News.

This is signed by Samuel J. Roberts, chairman of the Republican state committee, who also sent a telegram to Chairman Hanna containing the pith of the foregoing and another to President-Elect McKinley, which is as follows:

"Kentucky, for the first time in its history, has been carried by the Republicans in a presidential year. After four days of anxious watching and waiting the official returns today show that you have carried the state by about 500 plurality. Four years ago Kentucky gave Cleveland 40,000 plurality and cast 23,500 Populist votes. The fusion of Populists and Democrats this year was complete, and our victory means a reversal of 64,000 votes based on the figures of 1892. On behalf of Kentucky Republicans and thousands of patriotic Democrats who joined in our common cause permit me to congratulate you on your great victory and the breaking of a time-honored record in Kentucky. As a former townsman and devoted admirer for twenty years it is scarcely necessary to add my personal congratulations."

Republican Senator from Kentucky.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 9.—There is no longer any talk of the Republicans uniting witht the gold Democrats on Carlisle, Breckinridge or any other Democrat to succeed Senator Blackburn. All negotiations and talk to this effect were based on the probabilities of another dead-lock. Now that the Republicans are confident of a majority on joint ballot they state that a Republican will be elected senator. Governor Bradley, Congressman Hunter, St. John Boyle and others are mentioned for the place.

SUMMARY OF ELECTION NEWS.

Brief Paragraphs That Give Pluralities and Other Facts of Interest.

West Virginia is certainly Republican by 8,000 to 10,000, perhaps more.

New Jersey's plurality for McKinley reaches 85,000.

The McKinley plurality in Iowa is closely estimated at 67,633, on a vote of over 510,000, the largest ever cast in the state.

North Carolina is pretty safely Democratic.

The latest from Tennessee is that Taylor, Dem., is elected governor by 10,000, and that Bryan will have 20,000.

California's legislature will be Republican on joint ballot.

Minnesota, estimated closely as to the counties not yet officially reported, gives McKinley 48,812 plurality and Clough 10,115.

Indiana, with 74 counties reported out of 92, gives McKinley 20,252 plurality, which may be reduced to 18,000.

Idaho gives Bryan probably 13,000, with a Bryan legislature.

Massachusetts gives McKinley 165,132 plurality, thus depriving Illinois of the third place, she giving only 138,716, for McKinley, and 112,845 for Tanner.

In Colorado Waite, the "middle-of-the-road" Populist has only 3,000 votes.

North Dakota's plurality for McKinley is about 5,000.

Ohio's McKinley's plurality is declared to be from 52,000 to 53,000.

California has gone Republican by about 6,000.

Illinois is now quoted at 144,149 for McKinley.

Official returns in Indiana do not change the previous figures materially. McKinley's plurality will be nearly 20,000. The state ticket runs behind about 8,000.

Republicans give up Kansas entire. Bryan and the Populists get everything.

Complete returns in Nebraska give the following results: Bryan, 79,714; McKinley, 72,250.

The Virginia Republicans charge that McKinley was beaten out of the state by 20,000 plurality "by the most infamous frauds even perpetrated."

North Carolina's legislature has 55 Republicans, 48 Populists, and 45 Democrats and doubtful

Oregon gives McKinley 2,042 plurality..

The count in Delaware gives McKinley 3,837 plurality.

Texas goes for Bryan by 100,000 plurality. The Democrats have twelve representatives and the Republicans one.

Missouri with ten counties to hear from is estimated for Bryan by 60,000 plurality.

Bryan has addressed a brief letter of thanks and encouragement to eastern silver men.

General Warner, president of the American Bimetallic union, has isued an adress to silver men to gird up their loins for 1900.

With all of South Dakota complete except two counties and three unorganized counties Bryan's plurality is 45. It will take the official canvass to decide.

McKinley will get but two of the Delaware electors, unless the court decides otherwise. This is the result of a Republican factional fight.

BOTH STILL CLAIM WYOMING.

Democrats Say They Have Bryan Returns—The Republican Dependence.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Nov. 9.—Chairman Blydenburgh, of the Democratic state committee, yesterday received returns from the Jackson Hole precincts, Uintah county, giving the Republican state, electoral and congressional tickets 27 and the Democratic ticket 64 votes. Complete returns were also received by the committee from Johnson county, showing an average Democratic majority of 168. Returns were also received from one-third of the precincts in Big Horn county, showing decided majorities for the entire Democratic ticket. Chairman Blydenburgh now is certain that the entire Democratic electoral, congressional and state ticket is elected by majorities ranging from 200 to 600.

It is estimated by the Republican that returns from 1,200 votes are yet to be received from Big Horn county. As this section is almost exclusively devoted to sheep raising it is claimed by the Republicans that its returns will give the state to McKinley without a doubt.

*Doubtful.

NORTH CAROLINA IS MIXED.

Elects Bryan Electors and a Republican-Populist Governor.

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 6.—The presidential ticket in this state appears to have been elected for Bryan by a majority of from 5,000 to 15,000. The returns from counties now in show a close vote, with the Bryan electors leading by an apparently safe majority. Many counties are still missing, but it is not believed the votes will change materially the estimate given above as claimed by the Democrats. It is reported that Republican State Chairman Holten concedes North Carolina to Bryan by 8,000. Russell, Republican, is elected governor by not less than 12,000 majority. The other Republican-Populist fusion state officers are elected by 40,000, except lieutenant governor, who has a reduced figure.

MEMBERSHIP IN NEXT CONGRESS.

Table That Shows 201 Republicans, 124 Democrats and 19 Populists.

Washington, Nov. 6.—A table prepared by the Associated Press from the telegraph returns up to last midnight shows the election of 201 Republicans to the next house, 124 Democrats, 19 Populists, fusions and independents (a number which perhaps should be slightly increased, as a few of those classified as Democrats have independent leanings). Some districts are in doubt, and no attempt has been made to include Washington and South Dakota and three districts in Texas in the list owing to the meagre and conflicting returns. Washington has probably gone Democratic or independent on congressmen.

The senate is likely to stand after next March: Republicans, 44; Democrats, 32; independents and Populists, 12; doubtful, 2; total, 90.

MEN WHO WILL SIT IN CONGRESS.

Reports at Washington Showing That 200 Districts Are Republican.

Washington, Nov. 5.—At Republican and Democratic congressional headquarters last night the chairmen were figuring on the complexion of the next house. Chairman Babcock says that he has complete reports from 193 congressional districts which have elected Republicans. There are 135 districts that have elected Democrats or Populists and 28 districts in which the returns are incomplete. These he would class as doubtful, with the prospect that the Republicans would secure at least one-half of them, which would make a total Republican membership in the Fifty-fifth congress of 207. It was safe to say that under no circumstances would the membership fall below 200. Senator Faulkner, chairman of the Democratic committee, although he did not concede the Republicans a majority in the next house, gave them 176, within 3 of a majority. His statement contained a table and compared the complexion of the next house with that of the present one to show Democratic gains. The following are among the elected members listed by the Republican committee:

Iowa—First, Clark; Second, Curtis; Third, Henderson; Fourth, Updegraff; Fifth, Cousins; Sixth, Lacey; Seventh, Hull; Eighth, Hepburn; Ninth, Hager; Tenth, Doliver; Eleventh, Perkins—all Republicans.

Illinois—First, Mann (Rep.); Second, Lorimer (Rep.); Third, doubtful; Fourth, Mills (Rep.); Fifth, White (Rep.); Sixth, Cooke (Rep.); Seventh, Foss (Rep.); Eighth, Hopkins (Rep.); Ninth, Hitt (Rep.); Tenth, Prince (Rep.); Eleventh, Reeves (Rep.); Twelfth, Cannon (Rep.); Thirteenth, Warner (Rep.); Fourteenth, Graff (Rep.); Fifteenth, Marsh (Rep.); Sixteenth, Hinrichsen (Dem.); Seventeenth, Connolly (Rep.); Eighteenth, Jett (Dem.); Nineteenth, Hunter (Dem.); Twentieth, Campbell (Dem.); Twenty-first Murphy (Rep.); Twenty-second, Smith (Rep.).

Indiana—First, Hemenway (Rep.); Second, Miers (Dem.); Third, Tracewell (Rep.); Fourth, doubtful; Fifth, Faris (Rep.); Sixth, Johnson (Rep.); Seventh, Overstreet (Rep.); Eighth, Henry (Rep.); Ninth, Landis (Rep.); Tenth, Crumpacker (Rep.); Eleventh, Steele (Rep.); Twelfth, Robinson (Dem.); Thirteenth, Royse (Rep.).

Michigan—First, Corliss (Rep.); Second, Spaulding (Rep.); Third, Corbin (Dem.); Fourth, Hamilton (Rep.); Fifth, W. A. Simth (Rep.); Sixth, Samuel W. Smith (Rep.); Seventh, Snover (Rep.); Eighth, Bruckot (Dem.); Ninth, Bishop (Rep.); Tenth, Srump (Rep.); Eleventh, Mesick (Rep.); Twelfth, Shelton (Rep.).

Wisconsin — First, Cooper (Rep.); Second, Sauerhering (Rep.); Third, Babcock (Rep.); Fourth, Otjen (Rep.); Fifth, unreported; Sixth, Davidson (Rep.); Seventh, Eighth and Ninth, unreported; Tenth, Jenkins (Rep.).

ILLINOIS RETURNS.

McKinley's Plurality Is 138,716 and Tanner's Is 112,845.

Chicago, Nov. 6.—According to the latest figures received at Republican and silver Democratic state headquarters, the McKinley plurality in the state is 138,716. That of John R. Tanner is 112,845, 25,871 behind the McKinley vote. All counties in the state except Clark have been heard from, and the reports at the two state headquarters differ but little. McKinley's plurality outside of Cook county is 71,180. According to Republican reports, Tazewell county takes its place among the country's curiosities by giving McKinley a majority of one vote over Bryan.

The Republicans will have a majority on joint ballot in the general assembly that meets at Springfield next January, larger than it has had for many years. The senate is easily two-thirds Republican, and the Republican majority in the house approximates twenty. Outside of Cook county the combination of silver Democrats and Populists seem to have held its own.

South Dakota a Tie on Electors.

Yankton, Nov. 7.—At 10 o'clock last night South Dakota's vote on presidential electors was tied, and an official count will be required to determine the result. The Republican managers have closed their office with the above declaration. They say any claim of the Populists that this state is for Bryan is not justified by the returns. Corrections and changes in three precincts not yet heard from may give the electors to either Bryan or McKinley. Republican congressmen and governor ran ahead of the electors by several hundred votes.

Let our Minnesota readers earnestly consider the question raised by Bro. Fenton, where shall your State Convention be held?

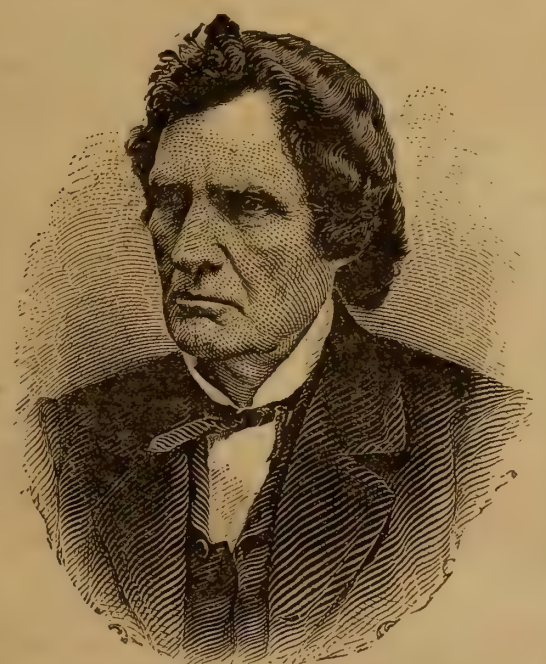
Dr. Gunsaulus said in a recent sermon: "No oath is so sacred as is the duty of breaking it, if it has been taken wrongly."

As we go to press, the friends are gathering at both the Iowa and Pennsylvania State Conventions. In our next week's issue we expect to give interesting reports of these meetings.

These great social changes which distinguish our times call on the churches to develop the social conscience, which in most men is feeble and in many scarcely exists, and to lay on that conscience the social teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ. Unless this is done, the close and multiplied relations into which modern civilization is thrusting us will become simply intolerable, and society will at length degenerate into a cage of wild beasts.

The Prince of Wales and Chauncy M. DePew have not long since taken as high as thirty-three degrees of Masonry. In thirteen of these degrees the candidate imprecates on himself again all the penalties of the former degrees, thus making a total of 191,477 horrible oaths and penalties in these thirty-three degrees. A congress of devils must have taxed their ingenuity to the utmost to have devised the fearful mutilations involved in these penalties.

The royal family of England costs the British government, in round numbers, $3,000,000 annually. Of this sum the queen receives nearly $2,000,000 a year, besides the revenues from the duchy of Lancaster, which amount to a quarter of a million. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland receives $100,000 a year for his services and expenses, and the Prince of Wales $200,000 a year. The President of France receives $240,000 a year for salary and expenses, an enormous salary, when it is remembered that the Republic is sweating under a stupendous national debt of over $6,000,000,000—the largest debt ever incurred by any nation in the world.



THADDEUS STEVENS, LL. D.

The above portrait is that of a distinguished American statesman who served first in the Pennsylvania legislature, and in 1848 went to Congress, and was a member till his death, in 1868. He was born in Vermont in 1793, graduated at Dartmouth, and went to Gettysburg, Pa., where he taught school and practiced law till he went into politics. He first became noted in the Anti-masonic party and helped to elect Gov. Ritner; and his influence made Pennsylvania one of the few States which put the brand of its political reprobation upon the lodge. In his law practice he often demanded and took a change of venue when the presiding judge was a Freemason, giving as his reason for the demand: "Your honor is under secret oaths and obligations which you very well know are inconsistent with your sitting upon a case where one party is a lodgeman and the other is not."

Thaddeus Stevens' great life work was in the anti-slavery movement. He was a leader in the agitation against the fugitive slave law, the Missouri compromise, and the Kansas-Nebraska bill. He had much to do in leading President Lincoln to issue the Emancipation Proclamation. Jonathan Blanchard first met Thaddeus Stevens at Harrisburg, Pa., in 1836. The former was then giving anti-slavery lectures in Pennsylvania. In Carlisle the windows of the church were smashed and the meeting broken up. In Mercersburg a mob of ruffians broke up the meeting. At Chambersburg a mob of 2,000 threatened to destroy the stone hotel unless he was delivered up. Mr. Blanchard succeeded, however, in enlisting nearly one hundred delegates to the first anti-slavery convention in Harrisburg. He called upon Thaddeus Stevens at Nagle's hotel, who invited him to dine with him, where sat more than a hundred of Mr. Stevens' political friends, and all haters of Abolitionists. After dinner Thaddeus Stevens took out his wallet and handed Mr. Blanchard $90, saying, "Never mind, I know your work requires expense." Mr. Blanchard once wrote: "There were traits and incidents in Stevens' character and life which filled me with admiration and some time with awe."

The century now drawing to a close, and especially the latter half of it, has witnessed innovations in the industrial world which have wrought a revolution in the physical life of the nation, and are having a profound and far-reaching influence on the nation's social, moral and spiritual life.

As we are passing through a period of social reconstruction or evolution, many are beginning to see that the churches have a mission to society as well as to the individual. Churches are enlarging the scope of their activities. They are taking a new interest in social reforms, there is a quickened philanthropy, and a deeper concern for the physical wellbeing of men, all of which promises a larger sphere of usefulness and influence.

Italy can have ten thousand men slaughtered in Abyssinia, and still pays her king $2,600,000 a year. The civil list of the German Emperor is about $4,000,000 a year, besides large revenues from vast estates belonging to the royal family. The Czar of all the Russias owns in fee simple about 1,000,000 square miles of cultivated land, and enjoys an income of $12,000,000. The King of Spain, little Alfonso XIII, if he is of a saving disposition, will be one of the richest sovereigns in Europe when he comes of age. The state allows him $1,400,000 a year, with an additional $600,000 for family expenses. . We are said to be the richest nation on earth, yet our President's salary is only $50,000 a year. It was only $25,000 from 1789 to 1873.

This message was sent by the National W. C. T. U. convention in St. Louis, Nov. 15th, to President Cleveland: "Sir: The Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in national convention assembled, and representing 300,000 American women, is indignant at the outrages committed by the Turkish soldiers and mob on fifteen of our honored American fellow-citizens at Harpoot, whose homes and property, to the extent of $100,000, have been plundered and destroyed. We protest against the delay which has allowed more than a year to pass without securing any indemnity for this outrage, nor the punishment of any of the guilty parties, and we respectfully urge that immediate and effective steps be taken to vindicate the rights of American citizens in Turkey. We further urge the co-operation of our government in every possible way with the powers of Europe in bringing to an end the reign of bloodshed and outrage in Turkey, which is a disgrace and a menace to our common civilization."

ONE HUNDRED YEARS HENCE.

AS SUNG BY GEO. W. CLARK AT THE FIRST ANNUAL ANTI-SECRET CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, ROCHESTER, DEC. 14, 1871.

One hundred years hence, what a change will be made
In morals, Masonry, religion and trade—
In men who now falter and ride on the fence,
These things will be altered a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Lying, cheating, and fraud will be laid on the shelf,
Men will neither sell "rum" nor be wrapped up in self—
But all live together, as neighbors and friends,
Just as good people ought to—a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Instead of speech-making to justify wrong,
All will join in the chorus, swelling freedom's glad song;
The Maine law shall then be a temperance defence—
We'll keep time to that music, a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Our laws then will be just, and equitous rules,
Our prisons converted to national schools;
The pleasures of sinning—'tis all a pretense,
And the people will find it so, a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

Then woman, man's equal a partner shall stand,
While beauty and harmony govern the land;
To think for one's self will not be an offense,
For the world will be thinking a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

The reign of the demon shall crush us no more,
Nor the foot of a slave leave its print on our shore;
Or, "rush to the battle," be a needless expense,
For mankind will be brothers, a hundred years hence.
A hundred years hence!

FRATERNAL LIFE INSURANCE—ORGANIZED ROBBERY.

BY W. B. DENTON.

It is not pleasant to antagonize and offend, but it is a privilege and duty to oppose evil in whatever form. He who tells me of my faults is my best friend.

Webster defines stealing:

"To take with intent; to keep wrongfully; to gain by insinuating arts and covert means." And robbery: "To deprive of unjustly; to defraud."

There are but few members of fraternal orders so ignorant and innocent as not to know that every cent they gain, others must lose. Whether those parties live a few generations hence or at the present, does not affect the justice or injustice of the matter.

Each individual member is a certain part of the whole and should be resonsible for that part of its obligations. But that is not the plan on which fraternal orders are built. One has said, "If a thousand men band themselves together and agree to pay a certain amount to the family of each at his death, what is wrong about it?" But they don't agree to do anything of the kind.

ORDER PROMISES ONE THING, MEMBERS ANOTHER.

The order falsely agrees to pay a certain sum at the death of each member, but the members composing the order agree to pay only a certain assessment each month, which they know can be but a fraction of what the order promises to pay.

"It's a poor rule that won't work both ways." Suppose that Smith and Jones are members of the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and Mr. Smith was compelled to take the place of the order and give Mr. Jones his note for $2,000, payable at the latter's death, on the condition of the payment of monthly assessments. Jones might live thirty-five years, and pay $450 for the $2,000. Then he might live only long enough to pay $5 or $10. Smith would say at once, "Why, this is robbery!" Any one who will take (or leave) $1,000 for $5, we might suppose would take a thousand dollars without the inconsiderate five, if he could do so under cover of a popular scheme.

In his speech before the Fraternal Congress, H. H. Morse said: "Within the past year one order has paid $1,000 for eighty cents; another, $3,000 for $2 60." In his letter in the February number of the Kansas Workman, the Grand Master Workman said: "We can't live half long enough to pay out half the amount we leave behind." This statement from such a source should be a sufficient text from which to preach the funeral sermon of this and kindred orders.

A LOTTERY SCHEME.

"You are sure to get more than four times what you pay, and are liable to get a hundred times as much." This beats any lottery in the world. That everybody don't go into it is strange; that any conscientious person should, is stranger still.

Lottery is defined as, "A means to secure, without equivalent, money that belongs to another." That is the exact definition of fraternal life insurance, only the latter is more deceptive. If a man should go around offering five dollars for one, you would set him down as a knave or an idiot; but when your order does the same thing you think it is smart to take advantage of the crazy thing.

It is said that there are three ways to get money. To work for it, to inherit it, and to steal it. You know you don't work for or inherit the money you gain by life insurance, so the preponderance of evidence points to the last method as the one you pursue. Because the state sanctions it is not proof conclusive that God approves it. His eternal moral law is a firm foundation, but the changeable statutory law of man often fails to cover it.

CHARITY ORGANIZED FOR PROFIT!

By their numbers and influence these orders glide over the current of law and justice in a gilded boat labled, "Protection to widows and orphans." An ocean of sympathy and a river of fraternity can't make a wrong premise right. They are launched under a charter for charitable institutions, but when a dollar is spent or received with a view to profit, it becomes a corporation for profit and their charter is in spirit annulled. They say this is the best investment one can make. In this so-called investment they get an irresponsible piece of paper whose value is subject to the will and convenience of present and prospective members. A straight business don't voluntarily give dollars for cents. The only compunctions of conscience many of them feel is the fear that the order will die before they do.

ARE THEY SAFE?

I have seen it asserted that no real fraternal order ever failed; yet for a few cents any one can procure a list of names of fifteen hundred fraternal and assessment societies which have failed. That many more are in danger of going to the wall is evidenced by prominent members themselves.

In the May number of the Kansas Workman a man in California writes: "Here in this empire of wealth and wonder, the A. O. U. W. has lost three thousand in the last few years. Not a single new lodge was organized last year, and but one the year before. The assessments have become so high, about $30 a year, that the younger element seeks its protection in other fraternities at less cost."

At the last session of the State Grand Lodge, the Grand Worthy Master said: "In my judgment, the day is not far distant when there is going to be a crash in fraternal beneficiary orders. There are many that cannot survive on account of multiplicity, if for no other reason."

The August Modern Woodman says: "Our cost of insurance depends upon the growth of the order; and to keep up this growth we must develop new territory."

When there are no new worlds to conquer, then what? The Select Friend says: "It is self-evident to every member of the order, who has given the subject any thought, that a constant accession to our numbers is desirable, not only to keep down assessments, but that it is absolutely necessary to our existence." A member of the same order writing from Joplin, Mo., told how difficult it was to secure applications with an opposition of thirty lodges to contend with.

A prominent officer in his speeches repeatedly asserts that as long as more people are born than die, so long will fraternal beneficiary orders last. By the kindness of the secretary of the State Board of Health, and from the ratio of increase of the A. O. U. W., we learn that this number would hardly half keep that order going, let alone the twenty or thirty others in the State, which are struggling for existence. Such a false, misleading statement is inexcusable from one who gives his entire time to this business.

An eastern man in the Fraternal Monitor of Rochester, N. Y., says: "Our society has met with a net loss of 20,000 in the last five years." Another has lost 12,000; and still others could be cited that are struggling hard to keep back from the shoals of ruin. They are all going, but should they last from now to the judgment, they are wrong just the same.

CHROMOS FOR MEMBERS.

"Order" papers are continually urging lodges to secure accessions, and numerous rewards and devices are used to stimulate them to effort. The long, loud cry of the head officers is, get more members.

To meet present demands they wade deeper into debt, yet talk about doing business on business principles. They are always telling about what has been paid out, but not a word about indebtedness.

The total membership of the A. O. U. W. is 362,000. Each holds a certificate for $2,000, which makes $724,000,000. One of its officers estimates that on an average $200 is paid for each matured certificate. Then this order alone owes the enormous sum of $651,600,000, which they don't think of trying to pay. Their policy is to "whoop-it-up" as long as possible, with a knowledge of its ultimate collapse. Premeditated bankruptcy is premeditated fraud.

WILL RELIEF COME?

The brilliant notion has been advanced that these fraternities will run on to the end of the world, and the ever-increasing load of debt can then be thrown over the brink.

Such an idea would make a mule laugh if it could spare the time to comprehend it. While it is not probable that the end of the world will come in time to save a fraternal order now in existence, its immediate coming could not discharge their moral obligation.

Some ignorantly talk of property insurance being the same as life insurance. If it was sure as death that all houses would burn, a fire insurance company could not insure for less than the full value of the property. Probably not one per cent of insured houses burn. The company takes the risk for a consideration, and its business can be honorably and satisfactorily closed.

Most of the orders are increasing their rate of assessment in order to hold out a little longer. One makes a plea for patronage on account of its copyright reserve fund plan. In July this fund was $42,243. That month the death loss was $12,000. The next month it was $13,000. When the order stops growing, as it must, what will the comparatively insignificant reserve fund amount to?

One of the most extensive business men in the State said men will pay on their life insurance when they can't pay their grocery bill. In this town of 5,000 inhabitants, there is probably ten thousand dollars annually paid to these orders from the necessary circulating funds, thus making the hard times a great deal harder. It is paid in large amounts where it often does but little good. A fraternal paper says: "The widows of deceased members are not usually accustomed to handling much money, and when their $2,000 are received they are a prey to designing men and sharpers, so that in a few months, or years at most, they are bankrupt." An eastern fraternal man says men and women join these orders for the insurance, and that the lodge system is an expensive farce.

LODGE AMUSEMENTS.

We frequently see accounts of open meetings where card-playing and dancing are prominent features. These are not Christian amusements, but Christian members must share the responsibility.

Confidence forfeited, large amounts of money taken from the life current of trade, time wasted, and money wasted on paraphernalia, immorality encouraged—these are some of the evil fruits of the evil tree of fraternal life insurance.

A COMPARISON.

These orders have been compared to a savings bank. There is no more similarity between them than there is between a cow and a horse.

The bank gives you a certificate of your deposit. For the outlay of a dollar of two the fraternity gives you a certificate for that many thousand. You can draw your money from the bank any time you choose. Only on proof of death can your fraternal certificate be paid, provided the money is sent in to do it.

The profit to a depositor in a savings bank is legal interest. The expected profit in fraternal insurance is cash from the other fellows—a thousand times more than usury.

If after you had put your money into a savings bank the banker would tell you that you must put in a certain sum every month or forfeit what you had deposited, you would fear it was a trick to cheat you out of your money. This is the trick of the life insurance trade, and you submit to this peculiar and unjust condition for the purpose of getting what is not your own.

How can one honestly take something for nothing when there is no gift. If you would voluntarily send a dollar each month to some one of whom you had but incidentally heard, not knowing whether he were rich or poor, when there are deserving poor all around you, it would be evidence of insanity. No one does it. You all join these orders with the intention of getting something without giving an equivalent, so you are guilty at heart whether you make or lose. To ask God's blessing on such institutions is asking him to deny his own Word.

CHARITY, CHARITY.

The passage, "But if any provide not for his own.....he is worse than an infidel," is misconstrued to include life insurance. Paul was speaking in the present tense and meant just what he said. In those days a man had not learned the art of providing for his family after his death.

The order folks talk so much about charity that one might suppose they had a monopoly on that virtue. The Samaritan parable is appropriated. Yet the Samaritan and the man who fell among thieves were not of the same belief; did not live in the same country. "The Jews have no dealings with the Samaritans." When they take Samaritan charity into the selfish bounds of an organization, their use of this parable is sacrilegious.

Organized real charity is a grand thing, but we don't need to rent a hall, meet once a week, pay dues and per capita tax in order to practice the Golden Rule. If you love your order brothers so well, why do you want to get so much of their good money for so little of yours?

The October Woodman compliments Wisconsin on the fact that her citizens carry life insurance $7,000,000 in excess of the entire assessed property valuation of the State. Suppose all these certificate and policy holders should die to-morrow, would Wisconsin be twice as well off (and $7,000,000 over) as it is to-day? Can two gamblers, who together have $20, sit down to play, win and lose until they have $50? This vast sum does not represent a single independent bonafied dollar. Some lose and others gain, and many of these millions will vanish into effervescent moonshine.

Parties who may now consider their certificate as good as gold will learn that it is the same kind of gold that the children find in the pot at the end of the rainbow. How could it be otherwise with an enterprise whose capital stock is promises, misrepresentation and debt.

THE WASH TUB ARGUMENT.

Many are drawn into these orders for fear, as they are told, that their wives might have to wash for a living and their children go to the poor-house.

Right-minded people look at principle rather than consequences. I knew a lady who took in washing to pay assessments, but failing to get the washing to do, she could not keep them up, and was counted out. An additional thousand dollars or more of other peoples' money ought to help keep a family out of the poor-house, but the thousands who have failed to pay an assessment and have lost all they have paid are helped that much toward the poor-house. There is no more direct agency for making the poor poorer, and the rich richer. Life insurance of every description is a vulture which exists only by feeding on the carrion of misfortune. Where is the man who has not paid tribute to some form of this evil?

The October Fraternal Monitor has an article from the Chosen Friend, in which it says: "There is no use beating about the bush. Plain talk is necessary. Call a fraud a fraud. Three, five or ten dollars a year for one, two or three thousand dollars of life insurance is a delusion and a snare. There are more than a million witnesses in the United States who can and will testify to this."

If it is a fraud to take $3,000 for $10, is it honest to take it for $25? In principle it is a fraud to take $3,000 for anything less than $3,000. So, my friends, you need not stop on half-way ground, for you have virtually acknowledged that the system of fraternal life insurance is a fraud.

A fraud cannot "fool all the people all the time." The Grand Recorder of the A. O. U. W. reports for September only 153 new certificates and $32,000 to pay. He says the number is disappointing. In his last monthly letter the Grand Master Workman begins: "I have been bending all the energies I possess, and receiving the help of a few old stand-bys, to keep up the interest in our order this fall that should be kept up, but it is an uneven fight."

The crash in other fraternal beneficiary orders which he predicted may first fall upon the head of his own. Because the A. O. U. W. is the oldest and strongest order in America, they have deluded people into the belief that on these accounts it was the more permanent, when the opposite is the case. The older an order is, the older its average membership must be. The stronger it is, the nearer is its available material for increase exhausted.

According to population there are more members of this order in Kansas than any other State—being about one-twelfth of male adults. Their strenuous efforts are failing because there are but few more members to be had. When the pie is all eaten up then there is no more pie. The order as a whole has passed the point from increase to decrease, and it will be nearly impossible for it to again recover. Even poor Kansas, which has paid out thousands upon thousands to other jurisdictions, is now going behind.

When the A. O. U. W. goes down I hope more people will open their eyes to the fact that "you can't get blood out of a turnip," and that to take nothing from nothing don't leave two or three thousand dollars. It requires at least a Fraternal Congress to reverse a fixed law in mathematics.

It is probable that no other order can live as long as the A. O. U. W. has, for no other order can have such an open field in which to work as it has had. Whatever may come, do not be humbugged by flattering points of peculiar superiority, for there can be no honest financial advantage in any of them.

No one would insult the common sense of a school boy by asking him if a number of persons could put $200 each in a wash-tub and at different times in the future each draw out $2,000.

THE GOOD MINISTER BELONGS.

Probably no other object so silly, so unreasonable and so dishonorable ever attracted the attention of so many sensible people.

Some think that because so many ministers belong to these orders that they must be all right. In its definitions the dictionary makes no provision for preachers; neither does the Bible in its rewards and punishments. Christ is our only example. The idea of the Lord Jesus leaving a life insurance legacy is entirely unthinkable, especially when he had not paid for one-fourth of it.

To violate a known moral law is one definition of sin. Then, since it is evidently wrong to hold a beneficiary certificate, it is evidently right for churches to exclude such persons from membership, as one has already done.

In the May number of the Kansas Workman, the editor himself says: "It may be that our whole fraternal insurance is wrong. Possibly it can not endure." This is quite an admission for one to make who has worked so long and hard to build up fraternal insurance. He had better give the Lord and a punctured conscience the benefit of the doubt.

He is unworthy of a family who fails to give his best efforts to its present and future welfare; but to do evil, even for their sakes, leaves a stigma worse than poverty. The matter of right and wrong is an individual matter. Popularity and great displays make no impression on eternal truth. An elaborate burial service and a long funeral procession cannot change the course of the departed spirit. A hundred dollar Woodman monument, while it may serve its purpose as a graveyard advertisement, can give no assurance of a part in the first resurrection.

In Mr. Bryan's speech of acceptance he said: "Those who stand upon the Chicago platform believe that the Government should not only avoid wrong doing, but that it should also prevent wrong doing.....They do not defend the highwayman who robs the unsuspecting traveler, but they include among the transgressors those who, through the more polite and less hazardous means of legislation, appropriate to their own use the proceeds of toil of others. The commandment, 'Thou shalt not steal,' thundered from Sinai and reiterated in the legislation of all nations, is no respecter of persons." Mr. Bryan is a member of the Modern Woodmen, and no doubt has a three thousand dollar certificate, which if paid, at least two thousand five hundred dollars will be taken from the "proceeds of toil of others." Much of the thunder, "Thou shalt not steal," will still linger around Mount Sinai while we have such hypocrisy in high places.

According to Mr. Bryan's very commendable theory, "The Government should not only avoid wrong doing, but that it should also prevent wrong doing," we do not so much need to presuade the last man from joining these orders, as we need a law to prevent the first man from organizing, and to compel the middle men to disband.

WHY HEW BROKEN CISTERNS?

BY REV P. B WILLIAMS.

If you can drink of the living waters of divine truth, flowing down fresh from the throne of God, why seek the muddy, corrupt and traditional streams of Freemasonry? No good reason can be given for so doing, and therefore all Christians should divorce themselves from every institution not having God's seal upon it. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul;" and it needs no human devices nor dark mysteries to help it forward. And how any one claiming the Bible as his only rule of faith and practice, and the Church of God as his home, can gain the consent of his mind to be a Freemason, and to shape his faith and practice accordingly, is exceedingly strange, and can only be accounted for upon the hypothesis that they have not examined into the subject, nor weighed it in the light of heaven's own oracles.

We are aware that Masons claim that John the Baptist and John the Apostle "were two eminent Christian patrons of Masonry." But on what authority do they base this claim? Why, they tell us that "since their time there is represented, in every regular and well-governed lodge, a certain point within the circle, embordered by two perpendicular parellel lines representing St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist, and upon the top rests the Holy Scriptures."

This symbolic circle, we are told, "is one of the oldest known in Masonry, identical with the Lingam of the Indian mysteries and the Phallus and Cteis of the ancient Egyptians." The testimony on which Masons rely in favor of the statement made above, is wholly traditional. Its truth rests upon human tradition, without one word in the Bible to sustain it. This traditionary proof may be sufficient to satisfy credulous Masons, but we require stronger proof than this.

The mere statement that "two perpendicular lines," touching "a circle" on the right and left, represent the two Johns spoken of, is of no value as proof that they were Masons. They may have been placed there to represent these two holy men, but this does not prove they were Masons any more than the Scriptures resting on the "top of the circle," which is "identical with the Lingam of the Indian mysteries" proves that those "Indian mysteries" are to be found in the Bible! Men may group together many figures and symbols and say these represent this or that; but what would this prove? They might, with equal propriety, draw a picture of John the Baptist, Jesus, Moses and Elijah, Peter, James and John on the Mount of Transfiguration, and say, "This represents a Grand Masonic Lodge!"

It is strange, if these two eminent men were "patrons of Masonry," that they should have left no hint or allusion of any sort concerning it. Of John the Baptist it is said: "And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the desert till his showing unto Israel."

Whether he belonged to some "lodge in a vast wilderness" is not said; and no reason or motive is assigned why he should have united himself in a "mystic tie" with those infidel and apostate Jews, a "generation of vipers," to whom he was sent to preach. Such a statement cannot be credited on traditional testimony, when every Scriptural fact and circumstance is against it. John the Apostle was a fisherman, and was so engaged with his father and brothers when Christ called him. There is no Scriptural proof, no statement or circumstance in all history, to induce any one to believe he belonged to any such "fraternity." On the contrary, as we shall see more fully hereafter, there is abundant proof in all his teachings that he could not, consistently with his profession as a Christian and his office of an apostle, have belonged to any such "order."

What an ingenious device to invent a symbol, representing that these men were "Masons," in order to make the system more acceptable to Christians, and induce many of them to unite with the "fraternity."

IMPORTANT FOREIGN NEWS.

A very interesting work is going on in England. A lady graduate of Oberlin, who has spent some years in India and is now training workers for the foreign field in the Missionary Training Home, London, has the credit of beginning the work. A gentleman highly educated, whose father was an eminent Freemason in England, is the chief worker in our cause. One of the interested helpers is a relative of some of the leading financiers of London; so much for the personnel of the leading actors.

I have talked with those eminent men of God, B. F. Myers, Andrew Murray and other eminent teachers who have visited this country, as to the effects of the secret societies upon the churches in Europe, and especially Great Britain, but the answer has always been that they knew nothing about the matter. Their attention had not been called to it. I quote from our missionary friend and co-worker in London:

"Freemasonry is an awful power in Great Britian. Its power in the Protestant church is simply fearful, and no one will listen to a word against it. It seems to be as much as one's life is worth to breathe anything against it." A literary lady in England, who has become interested through Pres. Finney's work, wrote an article on the subject and sent it to such papers in London as she had special influence with, but not one would publish it. These things are beginning to wake up the Christian people of Great Britain. A tour has been made through England, Scotland and Wales, and the literature which has been sent from the National Christian Association has been wisely distributed, and much interesting information has been gathered by the brother who has been doing the work, and who writes: "I have testimonies from many elders of churches and others in this country, that when Christians join the secret lodges, all true work for Christ ceases." He writes farther: "I have seen much of the workings of this 'blasphemous power,' and clearly see the place there is for it in Satan's kingdom, and how faithfully it has kept its place in Great Britain, owing to the support given to it by the Church of England and other lukewarm church organizations.

"I and some sympathizers meet constantly in prayer for you and your work, that you, over there, may be drawn closer to Christ and so have a baptism of power from God in this noble work in the kingdom of his dear Son. You can do your part in upholding me in mine, for the work is an international one. My heart is with you in your work entirely, and I shall do everything in my power to spread the light; and I have been in His hands already the instrument of saving many from being absorbed into Satan's snare. Our want is literature."

I have already forwarded literature several times to this work in London, and I am advised that some of it is already waking up Christian people across the channel in France. Now in addition to the calls from England, we have, as you know, calls for more than we can do in India and Africa; and shall we not have our Foreign Fund replenished? It is already over-drawn. The necessity of teaching Christians how they ought to walk as fellow-servants with the Lord Jesus Christ is as important in foreign lands as in our own; and when we think that the leading Christians in foreign lands do not know what produces the sad spiritual decline, the responsibility ought to weigh heavier and heavier upon us to give them the light. I quote from a recent letter from Inhambane, S. E. Africa: "I am anxious to scatter anti-secrecy literature around South Africa as much as possible." From an old missionary of the American Board, I quote a few words from a letter ordering our publications: "It is painful to see good Christian friends supporting and admiring such an anti-Christian institution as the Knights Templars."

The London Times of Sept. 30th announces that the Spanish government has appointed a special commission to inquire whether Freemasonry should not be prohibited in Spain and all Freemasons in government service dismissed. In Austria Freemasonry is forbidden, as are all other secret societies. Every official when he enters the government service is obliged to declare that he belongs to no such society.

WM. I. PHILLIPS.

Schemes for the colonization of American negroes in their ancient home in Africa have been popular with philanthropists for many years. Last week a Mr. Webb and wife, formerly of Arkansas, returned by the American Line steamship Rhineland. Mr. Webb says that fully one-third of the expedition, or one hundred people, have died of the fever, and such as are still alive are in misery and want. He reached Liverpool penniless and was sent home by the United States consul.

REFORM NEWS.

THE MINNESOTA STATE CONVENTION.

WHERE SHALL IT BE HELD?

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 10, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. John Halvorson, pastor of Zion church, Minneapolis, and his people are responsible for getting possession of a "den" in which the devil is worshiped in secret. They secured it for me to lecture upon the origin, history and relation of the things done in that "den" to God's church. His church choir sang at the opening and close of the meeting. The audience was select, intelligent and appreciative of the truth as it is in God's Word. Probably there was not a demon worshiper present. Therefore we had it all our own way.

A short time ago I spoke for the second time this season in the Salvation Army Hall in St. Paul. But as soon as I touched the vital principles of Freemasonry, the Freemasons present who have for years been constant attendants upon the Army meetings arose and left the hall, and nearly all the members of the Army followed them, only two or three members of the Army remaining; and at the close of my discourse there was not more than a dozen in the hall. The Salvation Army is no place for God's truth about secret societies. Their War Cry has committed Gen. Booth and his Army against Anti-masonry and the Masons here know it. See War Cry, May 25, 1895.

On last Monday morning I was in Minneapolis, and while there, was invited to attend the Lutheran Minister's Meeting of the Augustana Synod, and to speak to them for fifteen minutes upon the subject of secret societies. One of their churches has recently excluded a number of its members because they belong to secret societies, and is determined to rid itself of that alliance with demons. Rev. T. Telleen, who has been a missionary in India, was present and gave a very interesting and encouraging discourse in the English language upon the work of foreign missions as connected with his denomination.

I think that the way is clear now to make an effort to have a State Convention. Will you publish a notice to the readers of the Cynosure in this State asking, where shall our be held? The last week of next January is suggested as the time. There is no subject before the world at the present time so vital to the honor of God and his church as the subject of secret societies. As Bro. Allen says, "It is the devil's tender spot." He barely alluded to it in his Bible presentation of truth at Delano, and he was promptly driven out of that town by a threat of mob violence if he remained there. All the great popular evangelists that have been in this State have been afraid to touch it, not excepting the honored brother, D. L. Moody; but they have invited the transformed angels of the lodge upon the platform to pray and to speak and take charge of meetings. Write to your corresponding secretary what you think about our State Convention as soon as you have read this; and let us get better acquainted, and unite our prayers in one solid petition to our God. "When the enemy shall come in like a flood the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him." Isa. 59:19.

Assured that we can do nothing without our Lord Jesus Christ, we can do all things in his name. They will say, "preach the Gospel and let secret societies alone." But that is the way to make proselytes ten-fold more the children of hell than themselves. The late Jonathan Blanchard, the inaugurator of this movement and first editor of the Cynosure, told us in his address before the State Convention of Illinois, in 1874, concerning Alonzo Quint, pastor of a Congregational church, who was a devout and a distinguished Freemason, "That pastor will sink that church in hell if he can." And Bro. Blanchard was right.

Brethren, let us not be afraid; the devil is the father of this whole lodge system, and the Holy Ghost declares that he is a liar, and a fool and a coward. There are many good places in the State where it would be well to hold the convention. There is Wilmar, Granite Falls, Duluth, Sacred Heart, Balaton or vicinity, Little Cobb or vicinity, Grand Forks, Crookston, St. Paul and other desirable localities. May we not have the views of the brethren all over the State; every reader of the Cynosure at least? W. FENTON,

Corresponding Secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE.

IN LOGAN COUNTY, OHIO.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

In response to an urgent call from Logan Co., Ohio, we left our editorial sanctum Tuesday morning of last week and much enjoyed the trip down the N. Y. and Erie road in company with Rev. D. Snell, of Sydney, Ind., and J. F. Weaver, of Lima, Ohio, who are both connected with the Mennonite church, and much in sympathy with the anti-secret cause. Their denomination is a carefully organized body of radical Christians, who trace their ancestry back to the Waldenses. They maintain that Christians should not bring law-suits, demand interest, take oaths or serve as soldiers. Their simple lives, peaceful and thrifty habits and fidelity to promises have made them a large and influential sect, numbering over 150 000 in the United States.

Changing cars at Kenton, Ohio, I reached West Liberty an hour before the time for our meeting, and was met at the depot by Bro. A. I. Yoder, a young Mennonite evangelist, whose ecclesiastical training has kept him from bowing the knee to the modern Baal of secrecy. He traces his active zeal in our work to a copy of the Cynosure that fell into his hands while at a friend's house in Wayne Co., Ohio, some years ago. He has been a reader of the paper and a worker in the cause ever since.

What led him to invite me to address these two meetings at West Liberty, was that one of his ministers, Bro. Garber, in dedicating their new church gave some strong testimony against the lodge which created quite a furor among the lodgites, who are strong in the town. Our first meeting drew an audience composed largely of lodge members from the town; the rain falling all afternoon and evening prevented the attendance of the friends from the country. But the next evening it was fair moonlight and the opera hall was well filled. These good friends at the close gave us a liberal collection, which met all expenses, and also kind invitations to return and many expressions of sympathy. The lodge members gave respectful attention both evenings, while we told them of the dangerous influence of the lodge upon both church and state.

The next evening I spoke in the Reformed Presbyterian church at Northwood, in the northern part of Logan Co., on the same subject. The pastor, Rev. R. Hargrave, had thoroughly announced the meeting, and his large congregation were nearly all present. Geneva College, now located at Beaver Falls, was for many years at Northwood, which was then the educational center of the church, and the college impress is still strongly felt in this community. Bro. Hargrave and wife are devoted to reform work, and have a strong hold upon the hearts of their people. I was entertained at the parsonage, and also at the home of Ebenezer Milroy, an old time Wisconsin friend, whose name I was glad to write on our list of subscribers. M. A. GAULT.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

EIGHTH LETTER.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Nov. 11, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A story as long as the one we have been writing would be a strange one if it did not have a "love affair" connected with it; and as we have reached the burning point of our story, it is well that the destructive fires of a physical conflagration should be offset by the holy flames of pure Christian love.

On the evening of Aug. 23, 1895, a worthy young elder of the United Presbyterian congregation arrived with his worthy bride at his uncle's, four miles south of town, where they were to make their future home. There they were given a hearty welcome by their friends and neighbors. We had the honor of being among the guests.

The U. P. pastor and his noble wife, thinking that it was to be a wedding instead of a reception, clothed themselves in their best robes, hired the best turnout our liveryman possessed, and appeared thoroughly prepared to speak the solemn words and receive the gift that so often measures the love of the bridegroom for his bride. Their disappointment added no little to the enjoyment of the evening, and all the more because they seemed to enjoy it so much themselves. This, with a supper worthy of the occasion, and impromptu speeches, caused the evening to pass swiftly, and ere we were aware the hour of midnight was upon us. Farewells were hastily spoken and we were soon speeding toward our homes.

It was a dark, foggy night, such as criminals delight in. We found it necessary to use lanterns to keep safely on the road. As the U. P. pastor had no lantern, he reined his prancing steed in behind us until we reached the well-traveled road within a mile of town and began to be helped by the glare of the fires at the brickyard, when he shot by us like an arrow, and thus reached town a little too soon to be attracted by the little blaze that was so soon to lay our town in ashes.

The brickyard men were just finishing the firing of a large kiln of bricks, and the glare of the open furnaces and the red-hot upper surface of the kiln so filled the dark air that any other fire could get well under way before it would be noticed. The rest of the company from town, which followed the U. P. pastor, turned up the first street north of the brick kiln and were thus prevented from discovering the fire; but as the liverymen were about to retire after caring for the U. P. pastor's turnout, they thought they saw a light flickering in the glass front of the drugstore of our lodge-saloon druggist, and on investigation found that there was a raging fire in the shanty at the back of the drugstore. The alarm was given at once. All the bells in town were soon ringing, and men and boys were soon running through the streets screaming fire! fire! fire!

As we had just retired we heard the first cry, and with bucket in hand, we soon reached the scene of the fire. When we reached the scene there were not a dozen men there, and not half of them were fighting the fire. A prominent lodgeman, who seemed all along to be the druggist's right arm, followed behind me. He tried the front door of the drugstore, and finding it locked, he kicked in the glass front, thus affording a draft for the fire into the store. He took a few drugs out that could be reached through the broken glass, and the rest were left to burn. The roof of the shanty fell in, and a few of us fought the fire with a will from a well and a cistern. The well was about twenty feet and the cistern close by. But the more water we put on, the better the fire seemed to burn, revealing the fact that there was an abundance of timber or wood well soaked in oil. But the effort to put out the fire was feeble. There never were a dozen men fighting the fire at any one time. The others went to work carrying goods out of the stores, the conclusion seeming to be that the block of houses on that side of the street must go. One by one those fighting the fire ceased, as the fire was constantly gaining on them. I remained to fight the fire fifteen minutes after all others had ceased, that I might, if possible, determine its character. When I ceased, the shanty was all down, but the fire from its ruins was burning as fiercely as ever. Evidently the materials and ground had been well soaked in oil.

The fire was discovered between 12 P M. and 1 A. M., and it was between 3 and 4 A. M. before the last building fell in. There were sixteen buildings, all business houses, burned. Most of the goods in these houses were saved. It was a calm night, and the flames from the dry material of the houses went up into the dark heavens with a roar that was at once most terrible and grand. The last building burned was J. R. Sharp's large two-story building. Here the fire fiends seemed to reach their highest glee. They would leap to a wondrous height and then float in fiery clouds and pillars of fire away into the darkness. The currents of air created by the fire could be felt half a block away, and in the swirl which they created the flames would leap across the street and envelop those who, with salt and water, were trying to confine it to the one block. They succeeded. What might have been had the wind been blowing makes one shudder. As it was, fire brands as large as a man's hand were found two and a half blocks away the next morning. All that saved the town was that these brands died out in the damp air before they ignited any thing.

In closing this letter we would say that all are agreed that this fire grew out of the saloon fight. One of our best women said to me as we watched the closing scene: "Would a saloon not be better than this awful burning?" I answered, no. Better burn houses than souls. But the animus of the saloon is: "We will burn and destroy everything that opposes us." It is utterly without conscience, feeling or respect, yet the lodge and the three leading political parties support it.

"THE PRESIDENT" PEW

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 11, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As soon as it became positively known that we should have a Methodist President after the fourth of next March, a good-natured rivalry was started by at least two Washington churches for the honor of being "the President's church" for four years. The two churches which are known to have sent formal invitations to President-elect and Mrs. McKinley to become members of their congregation during their residence at the national capital are the Metropolitan, which was President Grant's church during both his terms, and the Foundry church, which was attended by President Hayes. In both of these there is a pew to which is attached a silver plate inscribed "The President," and although both pews are now rented to other parties, it was in both cases with a proviso that they should be given up whenever the President attended either church. Although these two congregations are the only ones that have acknowledged making an effort to secure the attendance of the President and his family, it would not surprise me to learn that others have done so. There are numerous Methodist churches in Washington, and the advantages of having the President for an attendant are so well known that it would be perfectly natural for those eligibly located to at least extend an invitation to the President-elect and his wife to worship with them.

Although there has been little doubt that the dispute over the boundary line between Venezuela and the British territory in South America would eventually be settled by arbitration, the official announcement made this week that this government and that of Great Britain had agreed to a treaty of arbitration covering that dispute was received with much satisfaction by the friends of arbitration. The only regret expressed is, that the present treaty does not include all questions which may arise between the United States and Great Britain, but this treaty is a step in that direction certain to be followed in due time by a general treaty of arbitration, which will be an example that other Christian nations cannot afford to refuse to follow.

A public meeting was held this week at the Sixth Presbyterian church, which it is believed will result in the establishment of a new and needed missionary work among the sailors and dwellers on the more remote shores of the Potomac river. The plan includes a mission station on the river front in this city, which shall be open at all times to the sailors and river men, and the placing of a Gospel-boat on the river, manned by missionaries who will board vessels going up and down the river and who will visit all residences on both sides of the river for the purpose of holding Gospel meetings. The movement is backed by members of nearly all denominations, and hope is expressed that it will accomplish much good among a class hitherto not reached by Christian workers.

In compliance with a request sent by the Anti-Saloon League to all Washington pastors, notice was given in a number of churches last Sabbath of the observance of November 22, as Temperance Sabbath. The day was set aside for temperance by the International Sabbath-school committee, the London Sabbath-school Union, the General Conference of the M. E. church and other Christian organizations, and it is intended that the fourth Sabbath in each November shall be so observed.

A warning to those who keep intoxicating liquor in their houses for "medicine," which nearly proved fatal to a five year old girl, was one of the events of the week in Washington. The child got hold of a flask containing whiskey, and with natural imitativeness did as it had seen its father do, drank it. The little girl became dead drunk, and had her mother not been thoughtful enough to carry her to the Emergency hospital, where the doctors succeeded in pumping the poison out of her stomach, would unquestionably have died. What has happened once may happen again, and the only sure way to deal with intoxicating liquor is to follow the old temperance primer's advice, "touch not, taste not, handle not."

It seems that the illustrated sermon has come to stay. Dr. Johnston, pastor of the Metropolitan M. E. church, whose series of illustrated sermons in the spring and early summer attracted large congregations and excited wide comment, believes the stereopticon to be a useful adjunct to the pulpit and proposes to continue its use. Last Sabbath evening he preached an illustrated sermon on "The Passion," during which a number of great paintings, including those by Correggio and Munkacsy were reproduced.

LODGE TESTIMONIES.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 4, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am a careful reader and collector of Cynosure articles. The paper has done me much good, and I hope to my congregation through me.

A few of the remarks made to me by or about lodge members I have written down, and think they might show a little the effects of the whole system on religion, church, morals, law and society. Names I prefer to leave out.

In '93 I asked a Mason in Medford on a street-car: "Why does a man lose interest in church affairs as he gets interested in lodge affairs, and vice versa?" Answer: "Because if he lives up to the principles of Masonry he does not need any church." The Odd fellow conductor said the same applied to his lodge.

In 1894, in a party in Somerville, Mass., Mr. G. (90-degree Mason) said: "If I live up to the principles of Masonry I don't need Christianity." I met their arguments in the discussion, but finally Mr. L. (K. T. Mason) said: "Well, you see we have such a jolly time when we are together." I couldn't deny that.

Rev. H. (M. E.) said on the 17th of Dec. last: "There is something wrong in Masonry but it is too strong to fight; you Lutherans will have to give up."

A friend of mine is auditor of a large western railroad, and he said: "I found a depot agent short $300; he denied, was taken to court and the judge decided 'not guilty.' This surprised me. The case was clear—no other argument needed than his books—but everything explained itself when I found out that the agent and judge belonged to the same secret society."

Some people on B street, Boston, let two rooms to some K. T. Masons at their conclave in the city, in '95. They declare they don't want Knight Templar boarders any more. The K. T. Masons kept on drinking till most of them were drunk; they stood on the tables and spoiled the costly furniture; they left marks of liquor and shoes on the tables.

Outside of an old Unitarian church in Boston I overheard the following conversation between a little boy and a church member, on the 30th of Oct. last. Boy: "We have a Q. B. V. society." "What is it?" Boy: "A Devil Society." "What do you do?" Boy: "We smoke cigarettes."

An I. O. O. F. said: "I don't want the Odd-fellows at my funeral." I answered: "I wouldn't belong in life to an order that I would be ashamed of in death."

Yours for open, honest truth,
(Rev.) B. E. BERGESEN.

IN PERILS FROM ODD-FELLOWS.

JOHNSTON, S. C., Oct. 27, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As you wish to understand my perils that have grown out of my withdrawing from the Odd-fellows lodge, I will give you a condensed statement.

I was persuaded by ministers much older than myself to join the order, which I did in the year 1890. I found myself among men that had not the fear of my God before their eyes, but men of vices, of wicked practices of all kinds. My Saviour enabled me, as he did Peter, to see my sin and out I came.

At the time I had four churches which I served. Odd-fellows were in one of them. They began to work against my influence, and made it so very hard for me that I had to give them all up and go to my farm, and to teach my school. They then worked me out of the school. I thought then I would build a church in one much-needed place for worship. And I asked many to aid me; they agreed to help me. I went to work and bought lumber and paid workmen to put up the church; they then used their influence to prevent those who promised to aid me from doing so. I, being poor, with ten in my family, paid the bill of $365 by mortgaging my little home. I am doing all I can to pay the mortgage, but I was notified by the sheriff on the 25th that I must attend court on the third Monday in November in regard to the mortgage. All of this came from the Odd-fellows.

BOSTON W. JONES.

BEACON LIGHT MISSION.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Nov. 8, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A government detective in the Secret Service Treasury department paid a visit to our mission. The Masons and four other secret societies had cabletowed him, and he stoutly defended all of them, and as stoutly claimed to be a Christian and Methodist. I saw at once that I had a difficult case to deal with, and closing my eyes in prayer I turned him over to the Holy Spirit. Presently his eye lost its fire, and he became more teachable as I unfolded the disloyalty of the secret oaths, the un-Christian character and Satanic thralldom of the lodge, its separation of families, its selfishness and suicidal tendencies; he seemed moved and very thoughtful; then he became a devout pupil, said he was getting new ideas and had learned much in this pleasant interview. After a two-hours' talk he arose, saying he had been greatly blessed; felt as he did when he was converted, so joyous and light as though he could fly on wings. Bidding us a hearty "God bless you" he passed out, promising to come again in two days.

This brave, expert detective was surprised at being detected in using Masonic trickery to cover his true inwardness. The nobility of his nature had been depraved by lodge tactics.

Now, beloved, can you wonder that after years of such blessed work as this, that I am more than ever disgusted with the trivial things of a worldly nature? Our time is all too short and precious. I want every hour of mine to tell for Jesus.

HATTIE EUNICE POWERS

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

E. E. FLAGG, BOSTON, MASS —The Lodge Lamp must emit quite a bright light or its enemies would not try so hard to snuff it out.

HELEN M. WRIGHT, CHICAGO.—The workers in our Chinese Mission will soon print and circulate a tract in Chinese on the Chinese secret societies.

MYRON ORTON, NORTH RIDGE, N. Y.—Have taken the Cynosure almost from its beginning and should greatly miss its weekly visits. It has been a thoroughly growing paper, increasing in scope and ability marvelously.

DANA A. BOLES, WYNNE WOOD, IND. TER.—We have established a mission at this point for the Chickasaw Freedmen and our people are being carried away on the subject of Masonry.

A. Y. SMITH, OAKVILLE, ORE.—I read the Voice, New Era, Constitution and Indiana Phalanx. So I am well posted on prohibition, but the Cynosure suits me better than any of them.

REV. J. SEELEY BEERS, MATHERTON, MICH.—I believe every Radical United Brethren preacher ought to take the Cynosure, as we are strictly anti-secret and it would do the members good to read it.

R. A. MCCOY, STAUNTON, VA.—These tracts are to distribute in the colored school, and you can select such as you think suitable. Colored people take to pictures, and if you have illustrated tracts so much the better. The colored people are greatly cursed by the Christless lodge.

JOHN HELFRICH, LARWILL, IND.—Suggests that posters be put up at all proper places which should advertise the reform work of the N. C. A., and the Cynosure and our books. It is a practical suggestion. Let as many as possible send in for posters and stickers. Send 10 or 25 or 50 cents, as each can afford, to pay cost.

S. F. PORTER, OBERLIN, OHIO —Please forward letters to me at Oberlin, 187 W. Loraine St., and oblige. I may stay at this place for the winter; but if I can do anything to forward the work of the N. C. A., I shall be very glad to do so.

I preached a reform sermon last Sabbath in the A. M. E. church here, to a large and attentive audience. An elderly man took my hand and said, the tears running down his face, "Although I am a Mason I rejoice to hear your testimony."

May the Lord bless and encourage all the workers in the cause of anti-secrecy reform.

W. FENTON, ST. PAUL, MINN —Some years ago a Freemason, a Baptist pastor, with whom I was well acquainted, said to me in the Minister's Meeting, New York City, "Fenton, you might as well butt your head against a stone wall as to fight against Masonry." And he had read "Bernard's Light on Masonry" and knew all about it before he joined. I now believe that Freemasonry will exist, either as a secret or an open society, until its god is cast into the "lake of fire and brimstone." The woes recorded in the Book of God will surely come.

REV. MR. AND MRS. GRIFFIN, HORTONVILLE, WIS.—The time is about up that we should pay for our dear old paper, the Christian Cynosure. We are so in love with the work we must keep on this year. Our windows are getting a little dark, our hearing dull. We are now past eighty years, and for twenty-four years the Cynosure has helped us so much by keeping us posted on the horrible system of secret societies.

I severed my connection with the Freewill Baptists, where I had standing for sixty-four years, on account of secretism.

JASPER J. TUCKER, SPRING ARBOR, MICH —The amount of books that I sell is but few. I have some books that the Michigan Anti-secrecy Association gave me. These are mostly on Odd-fellowship, but they don't seem to sell out here as well as Masonic books. I have some other kinds also, but I find very slow sale for such books; however, I will try hard to sell what I can and get subscribers for the Cynosure and Lamp Lodge and use tracts to inform all that I can, and will talk for God, for that is one of the things that he has for me to do. If I did not believe it I would not want to leave home and tramp around the country as I have in the past, and taken abuse from lodgemen.

ALICE CARITHERS, CACHE CREEK MISSION, OKLAHOMA TER.—I would consider it a great favor if you would send me the address of any one, Catholic or Protestant, who you think would be at all likely to have Anti-masonic literature in Spanish. I think some one in Texas, or Mexico, or the Southern Pacific Coast might have it. But I do not know an address there to write to.

REV. J. K. GLASSFORD, PHŒNIX, ARIZ —Messrs Crittenden and Carpenter, evangelists, have their own railroad car and pay their own expenses, and their business is to establish the "Florence Crittenden Missions." They have established one here. It is for fallen girls and women. They are very wonderful men. They have preached every night and day, and our city is shaken from center to center, and hundreds have been converted. The hall in which these men speak seats eleven hundred people, and the crowds that go are so great that an overflow meeting is held in a church near by. The old devil and the saloon are very mad. Mr. Carpenter testifies against the lodge, and said that he rode the goat nearly to death in search of more light. I tell you the Masonic ministers dropped their heads and wished they were somewhere else. The end is not yet. God be praised for such testimony and for such godly men.

A REMARKABLE WOMAN.

THE NOBLE WORK OF MRS. DEBORAH C. LEEDS. AN ADDRESS ON WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Mrs. Deborah C. Leeds, wife of Josiah W. Leeds, Esq., a prominent attorney, delivered an address on "Moral Reform," in the Church of God, corner of Prince and West Orange streets, on Wednesday evening, and her address was a powerful appeal for higher morals and purity in all things. Two weeks ago Mrs. Leeds preached in the same church, on "Social Purity," and she paid a return visit by unanimous request of those who then heard her.

Mrs. Leeds and her gifted husband are devoting their lives to the work of bringing about "Social Purity," and the earnest, eloquent woman, who was among us for so brief a time, is a member of the "Pennsylvania Prison Society." She has been a lifelong temperance worker and believes in all that tends to elevate her sex, and the whole human race. She was the guest, while here, of Mrs. Dr. J. C. Yoder, where a representative of The New Era had the pleasure of an interview. She is an Orthodox Friend, is the mother of five children, and two of her sons will cast their first votes at the November election. She visited the Lancaster County Prison, and did not at all agree with the declaration of an official there, that strong drink brought very few of the Lancaster county prisoners behind the bars—her position being that intoxicating liquors primarily brought a great majority of them there.

Mrs. Leeds visited England and Scotland last year, and was freely admitted to every prison she visited. Her work is largely among criminals and the fallen generally. She has visited eleven prisons and two reformatories within the past eight days, and left Lancaster for Atglen this morning. Her husband writes and circulates pamphlets in the cause of reform and she preaches; and both work absolutely for the sake of the cause, without any compensation whatever. Their warfare is largely against pictures and literature of immoral tendency. The lady who has just been with us (and of whom we know the Lancaster people would like to see a great deal more) is a native of Richmond, Va., but now lives at Seal, Chester county. She is a grand-looking woman, of prepossessing manner, and has a command of the finest language. All these, added to her earnestness and great faith, make her a power for good that is far beyond all human computation.—Lancaster, Pa., Daily News.

[Josial W. Leeds has long been favorably known as a friend and co-worker with us, and we know that our readers will be pleased to become acquainted with Mrs. Leeds.—EDITOR.]

HOW TO BE POPULAR.

Some Hints For Debutantes by a Man Who Knows.

Always take it for granted that every one means well by you unless you have proof to the contrary. The average person in society has a good natured or at least a cynical sort of tolerance and liking for you. Very few actually hate you or want to spite you. When you find out that there is some one who does, don't discuss it or quarrel about it if it can be avoided. Just drop the person from your life as completely as possible, and, above all, never descend to abuse him or her. It will hurt you worse than it will your enemy.

Don't snub other women and girls just because there is a man around. The man will not like you any better for ignoring a girl friend and earnestly devoting yourself to him. It is the married women and your girl comrades who can give you a good time or not in the end. Very few women dislike you because of your successes. It is because of your flaunting them.

Never ignore older and married men. They will not forgive it, and they wield a mighty power.

Don't wonder what people are thinking of your pose, and your gown, and your hands, and the position of your feet. Ten to one they don't even see you, and if they do they are not bothering their heads about you. A very young girl's worst fault is her self consciousness.

Don't be wondering what you will say next. A pause is nothing deadly if you do not make it so. Trying to say something—anything—to fill in a hiatus is the most potent cause of that mistake commonly known as putting your foot in it.

Don't giggle; but, on the other hand, don't look as if you were at a wedding or a funeral.

Use your eyes to say what it doesn't happen to be practical to say with your tongue.

If you happen to be left stranded for one dance, never sit all alone on one side of the wall to be pitied. Get up and go over to some group of matrons and don't fancy that the whole room is watching your transit.

How to Make a Japanese Wrapper.

A useful wrapper is built in the Japanese kamona style—flat and straight behind, with a turnover collar extending in broad revers all the way down the front, and with wide square sleeves turned up with a cuff the depth of the elbow. It is entirely of the Persian flannel of a red hue, with sleeves and fronts faced with plain cardinal flannel and a sash to wind about the waist of red silk a half yard wide.

How to Take Care of Your Bicycle.

It should be cleaned every time one comes in from a run—a proceeding which sounds rather dreadful, but is exceedingly easy in reality. When one knows how to do it, from seven to ten minutes is all that need be allowed for putting every part in spotless order—brushing the tires with not too hard a brush and wiping them, the spokes and all the enameled parts with a soft, dry duster.

The hubs may be reached with a long handled brush, and a good rub with selvyt over the plating finishes the whole process. Mud should always be removed wet—not allowed to dry on. Dry mud scratches the enamel when it is rubbed off and sifts into the bearings, which it soon ruins. Water should not be used unless to moisten a spot of dry mud. It is apt to injure the machine. But the tires may occasionally be wiped down with a wet cloth. It is good for the rubber.

How to Cook Clams a la Tabasco.

Chop a dozen clams fine and stir them for five minutes over a slow flame in a cupful of clam liquor and a tablespoonful of butter. Add the juice of half a lemon, some salt and pepper and a few drops of tabasco sauce and a sprig of chopped parsley. Serve on toasted crackers.

How Menthol Came Into Use.

Some ten years ago the Japanese and Chinese stores sold small lumps of a whitish substance resembling camphor in looks and consistency, with a strong odor of peppermint and a decidedly cooling effect upon the skin. The physicians of the east use the oil or extract of mint for all diseases of the digestive tract, and they refer every illness to these organs unless caused by a local wound or dislocation. Let this fact be remembered when the next spell of hot weather falls upon us. From the little children to the old there can be no better remedy in sickness to revive the failing vital powers either at dawn, in sickness or after a hard day's work or as an indulgence in the form of a mint julep.

How to Treat Sprains.

Half a pint of best vinegar, half an ounce of spirits of turpentine, quarter of an ounce of spirits of camphor, quarter of an ounce of spirits of wine and one fresh egg. Beat the egg well, then put all in a bottle, shake well and keep corked tight. Costs a mere trifle.

How to Make Plants Grow.

Wash flowers with warm soapsuds. Water also with boiling water around the edge of the pot. Keep the leaves clean and free from dust. Wash with warm, not hot, water. Keep flowerpots clean too. That gummy substance on the outside is injurious to plants.

How to Take Ink Out of Furniture.

To take ink spots out of mahogany apply spirits of salts with a rag until the spots disappear. Then wash with cold water.

ANARCHISTIC SECRET ORDERS.

A sensational trial has been going on in London. Edward Bell, an alleged dynamiter, was detected by a government spy, Le Caron, and arrested in Glasgow some months ago, and his trial has been going on for several weeks. He is charged with being in a conspiracy with several others to blow up public buildings with dynamite.

On November 16th the government spy known as "Jones," an Irishman, testified that he had succeeded in joining several secret Irish organizations in New York, and that he had obtained the secrets of the Clan-na-Gael, and was prepared to unravel the secret history of the "physical force" movement in the United States.

The judge forbid the reporters present from giving any description of the detective whose life was in great danger. He had great fears for his safety, and dare not give his name and address. He turned lividly pale when testifying that he had taken the oaths of the Clan-na-Gael and did not intend to keep them. He gave the names of those present at his initiation, and those connected with an explosion in Dublin. They had a revolutionary fund and were intensely secret, the members known only by number, and all the resolutions and minutes were burnt as soon as read.

This spy testified to having attended a convention of the order in Chicago, and gave the names of members, and where he was lodged. He produced a mass of documents giving instructions, passwords, signs, and a report of the secret meeting in Chicago in 1895, in which an item of the expenditure was $3,500 for "merchandise" which he explained meant dynamite; and his cross examination did not shake his evidence in the least. The testimony is published in the London papers under glaring headlines.

It reveals that a deadly anarchistic plot is on foot in this land and in Europe to destroy public buildings and the homes of the rich. It is surely time for our government to institute the most careful search after the doings of these conspirators.

A DISTINGUISHED SECEDER.

From the preface to an old Anti-masonic book, entitled "Study of Freemasonry," by the Bishop of Orleans, we make this extract. It is valuable as the testimony of a German Protestant prince, who, nearly a century ago, left the Masonic lodge and gave his reasons:

"Having spoken of the means used to deceive the dupes like Frederick the Great, who was pleased to handle the trowel, and put on the apron, because the existence of the higher grades was carefully hidden from them, 'all they knew of Freemasonry was that which could be revealed to them without danger.' 'For this reason kings and princes, statesmen and legislators, are found in grades of high honor and dignity—provided by Freemasonry for their especial benefit—and may assume the first place in the external direction of its government, and yet remain in ignorance of its hidden designs.'

"In spite of all their caution, however, the real nature of Freemason doctrines occasionally becomes revealed to their noble dupes; and an instance of this is to be found in the resignation of Prince Frederick, of Orange, second son of William I, King of the Netherlands, who was chosen, on June 4, 1816 —when he had scarcely attained his nineteeth year—as National Grand Master for life, of the Grand Lodge of the Hague. The next year he was elected, in the Grand Orient in Brussels, to the Grand Mastership of the Southern,—now called the Beligan—lodges. Although he had only been made acquainted with a very small portion of the impious legendary teaching of the craft, yet that little was enough. He resigned his dignities instantly, and alleged the following reasons, of which we will give a short extract:

"'I am a Christian, and will ever remain one. Everybody will understand how extremely painful it is for me to be compelled to speak of the abuse made in the Masonic legend, of the teachings of my Divine Master.....How could I read the story of his life, and then call it a legend? Where is the Jew who will venture to deny the crucifixion? Right reason and profound reverence forbid my pen to stop here. Is it possible to degrade this hallowed story so low as to turn it into a mere legend?.....And can it be that the brethren of the craft regard the death of Jesus Christ as a mere parable, and range it with the mass of fictions which are successively set before them?.....And we further find, to our indignation, ceremonines in connection with the reading of the legend of this grade, which are in direct opposition to the teaching and character of the Son of God and to his holy law.'"

SHAME ON SUCH MINISTERS.

The idea of a minister of the Gospel going from his home, leaving his wife and babe, to have his clothes stripped off, and a rope tied around his neck, and blindfolded, and to pass through the initiation and take the oaths of Freemasonry, is surely sinning against light and knowledge, and is the besetting sin of inconsistency. Shame! shame on such ministers. They are engaged in crucifying the Son of God afresh, and putting him to an open shame.

But it is useless to talk to such of consistency and sincerity. They are joined to their idol, and cry, let us alone; we are engaged in the mysteries of Free and Accepted Freemasonry, and are anxious to become bright Masons. We wish to become perfectly familiar with the skill to be used in stripping off the clothes of some stupid dupe who has been enveigled into uniting with our great and grand organization. The most repulsive feature of all decency is to see a minister of the Gospel, who has been through Freemasonry, standing up before a congregation of refined people proposing to teach sound doctrine.

How do such retain the least self-respect? How do they feel when engaged in intelligent and conscientious meditation, if such ever is their way of spending time? Can such possibly be honest with themselves? They surely can but be dishonest with themselves unless they be so beclouded with ignorance that they cannot see the light of justice and honesty and virtue. Nothing has done more to bring reproach upon the Christian ministry and impair the usefulness of the Church of God, which is the ground and pillar of the truth, than professed ministers joining the Freemasons. How they can hold up their heads before decent people is a marvel.

FREEMASONRY ANTI-CHRISTIAN.

The following strong testimony to the anti-Christian character of Freemasonry we condense from the Catholic Review:

"'Freemasonry should be condemned,' said O'Connell, 'for its irreligious use of holy things as symbols, and for its frequent and blasphemous oaths, if for nothing else.'

"Another clear-headed, honest Irish statesman, Edmund Burke, said: 'They who do not love religion hate it. The rebels of God perfectly abhor the Author of their being. They hate him "with all their heart, with all their mind, with all their soul and with all their strength." He never presents himself to their thoughts but to menace and alarm them, for he is the avenger of their vices.'

"When Leopold, king of the Belgians, died, the Freemasons held a grand funeral service in his honor, at the Grand Orient of Belgium; the immortality of the soul was denied by the Lodge of Louvain, and this denial was applauded by the lodges of England, because it was the fundamental principle of Masonry. 'The great English Masonic journal, published in London, called The Chain of Union, wrote as follows:

"'Who can affirm that the soul, emanating from God, is eternal? Who has any proof of it? For centuries popes and councils have sought for this evidence and have not found it; and they will not find it in heaven,.....because the human soul is self created.....We (English Freemasons) support, therefore, our brothers of Louvain. It is with vain and empty phrases, always emanating from fancy and imagination, that one arrives, sooner or later, at enslaving the country. Brothers of Louvain, you were right to protest!

"'One and the same everywhere! You do well, Freemasons of Ireland and England (and America), to say, "Right you are," to your brethren who are carrying on the work abroad. The very chronology of Freemasonry is a denial of Christianity; for instance, we have a Masonic address to our Lord Mayor (of Dublin) dated —not Anno Domini, 1876, but Anno Lucis, 5876.' And here may be quoted the clear and emphatic words of Von Raclowitz, who gives the true state of affairs: 'We plainly perceive that the minds of men are ranging themselves under two banners; upon one of which is inscribed the name of Christ, the Son of God, and beneath the other, are incorporated all to whom that Name is foolishness and a reproach.' Christians, make your choice!"

NATIONAL THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

It was a habit of the late Dr. A. M. Milligan, of Allegheny, to write a letter annually to the President, entreating him to make recognition of the Lord Jesus Christ in his Thanksgiving proclamation; urging that there was no approach to the Father or acceptable worship except through the Son. For many years a committee of the National Reform Association either visited the President or addressed him with the same plea. And yet no attention was paid to it, and so far as we remember no acknowledgment of Christ was made in our national Thanksgiving proclamations until the last two by President Cleveland.

In the proclamation just issued, the President thus explicitly recognizes Him: "'Whose name is above every name,' and whom God 'would have all men honor even as they honor the Father.' And let us through the mediation of Him who has taught us how to pray, implore the forgiveness of our sins and a continuation of heavenly favor."

The rule hitherto of excluding Christ from our Thanksgiving proclamations we have attributed to the educating influence of the secret lodge system. The millions of members in these lodges are trained by Christless rituals and prayers to exclude Christ from politics as well as from the lodge. Their great influence is to unite men in Christless political, as well as lodge brotherhoods. Doubtless this is the most powerful influence operating to secularize our American politics, and until its power is broken, it is vain to hope to secure in our fundamental law a recognition of our Lord as the Prince of the kings of the earth.

INFAMOUS.

The penalties accepted by Masons in case they violate their lodge obligations are a study for the philanthropist; and sound strangely, emanating as they do from an institution that claims so much on the score of its greatness, grandeur and benevolence. In the order of the various degrees, they are as follows: (1.) Throat cut across, tongue torn out by the roots, body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice a day. (2.) Left breast torn open, heart plucked out, thrown over his left shoulder, and given a prey to the beasts of the fields and fowls of the air. (3.) Body cut in two in the middle and divided, bowels taken out and burned up, and their ashes scattered to the four winds. (4.) Right ear smote off, right hand chopped off, and himself classed as an imposter. (5.) Tongue split from tip to root. (6.) Breast torn open, heart and vitals taken out and left to rot on a dunghill. (7.) Skull smote off, and brains exposed to the scorching rays of the sun. (8.) House to be torn down, timbers of it set up to make a gallows on which he agrees to be hung, and at the last trump to be forever excluded from the society of all true and courteous knights of the red cross. (9.) Head struck off and placed on the highest spire in Christendom. (10.) "Let me become inanimatus." (11.) Have a spear, or other sharp instrument, thrust into left side. (12.) "Of all the former degrees." (13.) Dishonored, and penalties of all former degrees, followed by four "amens." (14.) Body dissected, bowels taken out, heart cut in pieces, and the whole thrown to the wild beasts of the field. (15.) Punished as an unjust judge, by having nose cut off—or else penalty of all former degrees. (16.) Body severed in two, and bowels taken out. (17.) Struck with the dreadful poinard of vengeance, head cut off and stuck on the highest pole or pinnacle in the eastern part of the world (east of where?) (18.) Body opened perpendicularly and horizontally and exposed to the air for eight hours, that the flies may prey upon his entrails, his head cut off and placed on the highest pinnacle in the world, and to be ready (after all that?) to inflict the same penalty on all who disclose the secrets of this degree! (19) Hand to be cut in twain. (20.) Penalties of all former obligations, and in case of failure, body exposed to the beasts of the forest as a prey. (21.) Body cut open, bowels torn out and given to the vultures for food. (22) Stripped naked, heart pierced with a poinard. (23) Not only dishonored, but to consider his life an immediate forfeiture, to be taken with all the tortures and pains to be inflicted in manner consented to in preceding degrees. Also, "the severe wrath of the Almighty Creator of heaven and earth." (24.) Forever deprived of the true word, to be perpetually in darkness, blood running continually from his body, to suffer, without intermission, most cruel remorse of soul, bitterest gall mixed with vinegar for constant drink, sharpest thorns for a pillow and the death of the cross. (25.) To be forever despised and dishonored by the craft in general. (26) The earth to be opened before his eyes, and he engulfed even to his neck, and thus miserably perish. (28) All his brethren to seize him, thrust his tongue through with a red-hot iron, pluck out both eyes, deprive him of smelling and hearing, cut off both hands, then expose him in the field to be devoured by voracious animals; if none can be found "I wish the lightning of heaven might execute on me the same vengeance." (29) To be stoned to death, body left to rot above ground, deprived of burial. (30) To have heart eaten by the most venomous of serpents, and thus to perish most miserably. (31.) All former penalties to be inflicted. (32.) All the different penalties of the former obligations. (33) The same, and to have tongue torn out by the roots. What a sublime institution is Masonry!

The foregoing horrors have been condensed from the highest authorities, as found in Paine's "View of the Oaths and Penalties of Freemasonry," (thirty-three degrees,) price 15 cents, for sale by this Association.

LOOK OUT FOR THESE INSURANCE FRATERNITIES!

The American Legion of Honor, says the Inter Ocean of Nov. 7, has addressed to its members an explanatory circular, dated July 20, in connection with the August and September assessments, in which it notifies them that the mortality in April and June has gone far beyond the usual experience, and that they have had to levy two extra assessments, and notifying its members at the same time that an increase of assessments may be expected from now on. There was talk of applying for a receiver for this company, which was founded in Boston in 1878, and which has a membership of 53 000 members and insurance in force of $136 000 000, although its membership has fallen off 9,000 in the last five years and its insurance in force about $50,000,000 in the last eight or nine years.

The Ancient Order of United Workmen, the largest assessment order in the world, with a membership of over 341,000 and outstanding insurance of over $700,000 000, yesterday proposed a plan entirely re-organizing their scheme. This is the outgrowth of complaints as to their raise of rates, which has been going on for years. The new rates involve on an average a doubling of present rates, which have been increased in very large proportions lately. Five hundred members of the A. O. U. W. met in Moorhead Hall, on Grant street, in this city, on Sept. 2, to protest against the assessments then.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Masonry must be religiousif it is Masonry. Its fiber is religious. Masonry must not be Christain if it is Masonry. Its essence is theism.

The United States Governments gets $4.40, the farmer gets 40 cents, the railroad company gets $1, the manufacturer gets $4, the retailer gets $7, the consumer gets drunk, his wife gets hungry, the children get rags and the man that votes license gets what he votes for, crime, pauperism, and if he does not repent, eternal torment in hell.

He was compelled to remain in jail until to-day, when he gave a bond of $2,000. He was formerly one of the grand officers of the Patriarchal Circle.

—Jacob A. Riis has for years been engaged in philanthropic work in the New York tenement-house districts. For the Christmas Century he has written a paper on "Light in Dark Places," showing the reforms that have been accomplished under recent legislation in clearing out the worst of the congested spots in New York. Mr. Jay Hambridge has drawn for the article pictures of "Bone Alley," and the "Mott Street Barracks," recently destroyed, where the death rate was probably higher than in any other place in the United States.

—The notorious Orange preacher of Belfast, Rev. R. R. Kane, recently sent a dispatch to Gladstone, to which the grand old man replied as follows: "As life ebbs away I hope to become inclined to a milder and more hopeful view of any differences that prevail among us, and concurrence in yet greater and far greater matters of which you have given me so satisfactory a proof. It has the further advantage of inspiring a lively hope that at home too we may discover a method of agreement. Let us now join in saying God save Armenia, and yet not a proper time to forget God save Ireland."

—Rosa Bonheur leads the life of a recluse in her chateau in the depths of the forest of Fontainebleau, near Paris. She secludes herself from all, and it was with the greatest difficulty that the editors of the Ladies' Home Journal succeeded in getting a proposition before her that she should write her autobiography for that magazine. After nearly a year's effort they were successful, and once started on her work the great painter found so much interest in it that she made over a dozen special studies and pictures of animals to accompany the text. The autobiographical article, with the valuable unpublished drawings, will appear in the Christmas Journal, together with portraits of Rosa Bonheur as she works in her studio and home.

—An M. E. pastor in a private letter to us thus deplores the situation: "The state of affairs in our church are alarming. There is very little left save the ecclesiasticism of policy. Freemasonry has absolutely ordered the church to take a back seat, and designing ministers are using it for all there is in it, in the way of securing place and office. My presiding elder is a Mason and an Odd-fellow, and sends me to the weakest charge and the heaviest work in his district. A more dangerous organization does not exist upon the face of the earth than Freemasonry. It is a vampire of the wickedest order. None are too innocent to escape the vengeance of the demon. The man that can stand up and offer an advocacy of it, is an enemy to all righteousness. Those who have been into the order, and now claim to be non-adhering, are afraid to oppose the organization because of the knowledge of the oaths, binding to inflict injury upon those who oppose the order. The work you are doing in opposition to this great enemy of the race is of the greatest importance to all truth. May God be with you. I wish I was in a position to help you with all the inclination in me. Truth must win in the end. I long for the complete victory."

—"Before the Lost Arts." Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, Ph. D., 12 mo. 96 pp. illustrated. The Reform Bureau, 210 Delaware Ave. N. E., Washington, D. C. Cloth 60 cents; paper 35 cents. This little book, though complete in itself, is but the first of a series of four, that, when complete, will mate the author's preceding volumes, "The Sabbath for Man," and "Practical Christian Sociology." The complete series will present the kingship of Christ in nature, Scripture, history and reforms. This volume deals with nature, in lectures that have been often delivered in Great Britain, Canada and the United States in Mr. Craft's striking and original style. His argument is shown with a great wealth of incidents about animals, many of them spiced with humor, as indeed the book is throughout.

—The Lodge Lamp is a little sheet published by the National Christian Association, exposing secret orders. It is a very able little monthly, published at 20 cents a year. An effort has lately been made to exclude it from the mails as second-class matter, which is evidently prompted by a desire to stop its circulation. We hope the effort will fail. Persecution should have no support from our Government. The objection is raised that many who receive it are not bonafied subscribers, but that interested persons have had it sent to them by themselves paying for it. On that principle almost every paper in the country should be excluded from the mails. Nearly all must have some such cases. The publisher cares not who orders his paper and pays for it, nor does he care whether the man has it sent to himself or his friend. We refer to the matter simply to show what unfair methods are taken to prevent the spread of truth in the land. Secret orders are naturally afraid of such light as this little lamp throws upon them and their doings.—From Christian Instructor.

MODERN SAVAGISM.

THE CAIN OF TODAY SURE HE IS NOT HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER.

Editorial Apologists of Those Who "Have" Denounced the Aims of Those Who "Want"—Upon Whose Shoulders Rest the Crimes of Humanity?

[Special Correspondence.]

One of the oldest and most widely patronized New York weeklies, because of its choice light literature, happens to have some of the best editorials, week after week, on most social and political subjects, as long as the editor is not excited by some immediate social danger. It follows then that, in the last few months, the pen of that editor has bent all its energies in harsh language against all those American citizens who could not agree with him about how to improve our national conditions. The editor in question is but one among several thousands of them in our large cities, where conservatism, fossilism, has intrenched itself in forms the most repulsive. In one of the recent issues that editor writes as follows:

Our political opponents want to substitute for the rule of equal laws the law of passion and let those who want make war on those who have. Their policy is in favor of those who have not been able to gain a place in the world. If capital ceased to work because deprived of good investments what would labor do? Our business depends on about $2,000,000,000 borrowed from our national banks alone.

It would take a volume to fully show the barbaric sophistry of the above sentences and many others like them with which our so called best papers in the land have been saturated for the last three months. The men of the future shall wonder what kind of human creatures we had manufactured in our days. To assert that we have the rule of equal laws while acknowledging that we are afflicted with men who are in want because they have been unable to gain a place in the world! That is trying to talk English without understanding the language. The fact that we have people by the million forced to beg for employment and often failing to obtain it; people who have no room on earth on which to work, eat or sleep, unless they pay high tribute to others for permission; people that have to be always in debt to some banks and the like if they want to keep alive in any kind of useful industry—what does that mean? It means the rule of wholesale robbery at the foundations of the social fabric and not the rule of equal laws. The latter would produce a certain degree of equality among men, and not the dreadful inequality of want in the most indispensable needs at one end and incomes rising into millions of dollars at the other end. Not even the vilest heathen civilizations produced any greater inequalities than that. Our big fellows have not yet understood that only like begets like.

And what about the possibility of capital ceasing to work, when labor, at least 65,000,000 of our people, shall be unable to work and will have to starve in the land where God placed them, and which he gave to them for their joy and manhood? And the rule of equal laws gives to 5,000,000 the right to starve 65,000,000 of their brethren! What a magnificent logic! A lot of maniacs in the insane asylum could not beat that stupid logic. And it is doubtful if maniacs would say that capital ever works or can cease working. Labor alone works.

What is capital, in its final analysis? Permission for labor to use good and well located land, with permission to use tools previously produced out of land by labor, which could not retain such tools because they had to be handed to some loafer or schemer, as ordained by laws of robbery. The writer challenges any man to explain how capital can come into life in any other form under monopoly rule. All capital comes from land and returns to land. No capital can perform any useful function until labor is willing to use it. And no capital can do anything without land. There you have the whole science of economics. As for money, it is nothing but a social creation. Give to that creation the power to control natural resources through laws of monopoly, and you convert nations into fragments of the infernal regions, as we have always done. Give to that social creation its only natural power, that of exchanging labor products by antimonopolistic laws placing all money under the control of labor, the creator of all wealth and all capital, and you would transform the earth into an Eden—into a dream of glory for all men.

And all that is perfectly well understood by our fop and kid glove anarchists, such as the editor above mentioned and the 2,000 like him who have been howling murder and robbery for the last three months against several millions of honest American citizens whose only crime is poverty, in spite of a life of usefulness, hard work and patience under injustice! The editors are, of course, the slaves of the masters who make them write what they have written—in most cases, anyhow.

The old Cain of the Bible was not quite sure about his being his brother's keeper, and he decided to settle the matter by killing his brother and see how that would work. Our modern Cains are perfectly satisfied on the subject. Those who "have" never need to bother themselves about those who "want," and have not been able to gain a place in the world, no standing room, God having made the earth altogether too small. The fellows who have should keep on standing by laws of sin, and if those who want dare to complain or suggest some remedy for them to have something, then they should be called murderers, anarchists, etc., when, in the eyes of God, the anarchists and murderers are the monopolists, the men who are criminal enough to boldly repudiate the "Thy kingdom come" of the Lord's Prayer. It is on their shoulders that all the crimes of humanity rest and for which they will have to suffer somewhere.

JOSE GROS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 22. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Some blessings often forgotten.—Ps. civ, 1-35. (A Thanksgiving topic.)

This psalm is a tribute to the mighty power of God, and to His wisdom, as seen in the providential arrangement of the natural world. It recounts many of the beneficent results of God's wisdom, which we often forget, and is therefore an appropriate text for our subject and for Thanksgiving day.

It is human nature to forget. How easy it is to forget even the greatest favors and the greatest blessings, whether they have been bestowed upon us by God or by man. And although it may appear to be unnatural, how much more readily we forget the blessings and favors of God than even those of men. God charged His people of old with forgetfulness and ingratitude above the beasts of the field. "The ox," he said, "knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, My people doth not consider." Man is intelligent. He would be supposed to appreciate blessings far above the brutes of creation, and yet they often put him to shame by their remembrance of kindnesses done to them. When Christ healed the ten lepers, only one of the ten returned to give Him thanks. This spirit of forgetfulness was not characteristic of the past alone. It is as prevalent today as it ever was.

We have greater cause for remembering God today than man ever had, because God is bestowing upon us more and greater blessings than He ever bestowed upon mankind in the past. This is true temporally and spiritually. Yet for even the greatest blessings we are not careful to thank God as we should. And if we thank Him inadequately for the great blessings, how unlikely it is that we thank Him sufficiently for blessings which are more common and ordinary.

How many are the blessings which we forget—the blessings mentioned by the psalmist here—the blessings that come from God's arrangement of nature—His control and arrangement of the water. His preservation of life. His support of life, His division of time into seasons, into day and night! Life, health, home, friends, blessings so familiar that we fail to appreciate them—how often we forget to thank God for them!

No blessing that comes from God should be forgotten. He remembers the smallest deed of kindness we perform for Him, or in the name of Christ. Can we do less than imitate God Himself? He should be our example here as in other things. God forgets nothing, not even a cup of cold water. Let us have no forgotten blessings.

Bible Readings.—Deut. iv, 9; vi, 6-12; viii, 7-20; Job viii, 11-14; Ps. ix, 17; l, 22, 23; lxxviii, 1-7; ciii, 1-5; cv, 1-5; cxxxvii, 5, 6; Prov. iii, 1; xxxi, 4, 5; Isa. i, 2, 3; Lam. iii, 18-25; Luke xvii, 11-19.

Beyond Computation.

It is the work of the prophet to make known the future. Prophesying as to some things is nothing more than simply declaring the truth of the Bible. From wicked Pharaoh down to despicable Judas no better prophecies of the punishment of evil can be found anywhere. God's word is eternally true. Happy is he who believes its sacred teachings and who willingly adjusts his life to the demands of it. It causes inconvenience to the flesh, but the rewards to the spirit are beyond computation.—Lutheran.

A Consecrated Worker.

There is a consecrated Christian Endeavor worker in Charlotte, N. C., who has organized seven new societies since last September. He bears the following testimony to this form of service: "I have never undertaken any work that has given me more pleasure than organizing young people, full of enthusiastic consecration and power, into societies of Christian Endeavor." Would that many more of our Endeavorers could taste of this joy.—Golden Rule.

Draw Upon Him.

When you have used the power God has already given you, then ask for more, but not until then. You may be presumptuous in asking, but God is never improvident in giving. "He is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think" or are worthy to receive, but it is for use, not for hoarding. Draw upon Him for service. —Philadelphia Methodist.

Walk Five Miles to Church.

There is a Pennsylvania junior Christian Endeavor society with two-thirds of its members boys. Some of these walk from four to five miles weekly to attend the meetings.

Full of Miracles.

The whole world is full of miracles, but our eyes must be pure, lest, because they are so common to us, they become dim.—Luther.

God's Refinement.

Refinement that carries us away from our fellow men is not God's refinement. —Beecher.

A TALENTED YOUNG WOMAN WHO IS SUCCEEDING IN ART.

Rainy Day Dress Reform—Simplicity the Rule—The Impulsive Woman—Woman In Pagan Times—Taking Off Weight. Handsome Table Mats.

There is a peculiar charm surrounding the face and figure of Miss Lillian Rogers—a charm to which the public has readily bowed. But further and distinct from this attractiveness of personality are her ability as an artist and love for her profession. Miss Rogers is a native of this city. Her first venture in art was with William M. Chase, and as a student in oil and water color she stood pre-eminently at the head of the class. For the last summer she has been rusticating in the country, making sketches preparatory to the coming winter's work. Miss Rogers has been on the stage, but her love for music and art led her to abandon it. She has a well cultivated mezzo soprano voice of sympathetic quality. While in London she had the distinguished honor of being one of a party of persons invited to a breakfast given by the lord mayor, occupying a position on his lordship's left, and her intelligent conversation and charming personality soon made their effect on the company present.—New York Advertiser.

Rainy Day Dress Reform.

A New York correspondent says:

One of the most practical of the recent feminine organizations is the Rainy Day club, which states its object, "We desire to establish through the agency of this club a distinctive, sensible dress for business women." Mrs. Bertha Welby, the secretary of the club, would like to see all business women dressed in a uniform decided upon by the club and distinctive enough to be recognized as such. The dress of today, she concludes, is an absurdity for busy women. "It is impossible for a woman to keep neat and clean, even in dry weather, and I believe a gown so constructed as to enable a woman to keep immaculately fresh on a dusty day and dry and neat on a wet day is going to add to her self respect as well as her comfort, and thus contribute to her highest and noblest advancement. My idea of a suit for a business woman is a lightweight skirt reaching to the boot tops, two inches higher than we now wear, which would bring the skirt too short to be injured by the most inclement weather. The waist I should leave to the taste of each woman, only stipulating that it should be without frills or furbelows."

Miss Maud Morrison, a prominent business woman in New York, declares herself strongly in favor of the "rainy day" dress and is a bloomer advocate. "A pair of thick, black bloomers to fasten at the knee and come down long enough to make the skirt hang nicely, but not long enough to step on, are, I think, admirably adapted to the purpose. Over this a light dress skirt of reasonable length. Jacket and waist to please the wearer, strong, well fitting shoes and leggings and a hat that can stand rain complete my ideal costume."

Mrs. Emma Beckwith, who is an ardent club woman from Sorosis down, is another prominent member of the club. The costume Mrs. Beckwith deems appropriate for New York's most erratic weather moods is as follows:

"The most essential item," she says, "is to have heavy cloth—men's suitings would be the best—so that the wind may have no effect on it. The skirt must come to the boot tops. 'Twould spoil the effect if cut either above or below. It should be of the divided skirt pattern and exceedingly full in the extreme back to hide the divide effect. It should be buttoned on either side, with two large pockets under the laps. The waist should be plain and shoes well fitted. In cold weather knickerbockers should be worn under the divided skirt."

The English Governess.

Sir Walter Besant is again endeavoring to arouse the British public to a sense of the "downright cruelty and wickedness" of paying a governess only $125 a year and then sending her away to keep herself for a two months' holiday. "I do not believe," he says, "that those who do it realize the meaning of it. The evil is done by want of thought in this as in so many instances. If it is done in full knowledge of what it means, then the perpetrator is one of the lowest and basest of her kind. To give a woman £25 a year, to expect her to dress like a lady—always to wear decent gloves, for instance—and to turn her out to keep herself for eight weeks is nothing short of barbarity. Eight weeks at 25 shillings a week is £10. There is left the sum of £15 for dress and every other expense, and for the future no prospect at all. Poor governess!"

India's Woman Barrister.

Miss Cornelia Sobraji, who took the degree of B. C. L. at Oxford about three years ago, is rapidly attaining success as a barrister in India, not only in the native but in British courts. At first she only practiced in the former, but lately she was intrusted with the defense in a murder case tried at Poona, in a British court. As usual in such trials, where all the witnesses are natives, much false evidence was offered. Miss Sobraji, who had faith in her client's innocence, conducted the case with great ability and secured a verdict of acquittal after the jury had deliberated 20 minutes. The London Telegraph says, "The lady barrister has received many congratulations on the result of her forensic ability."

The Sway of the Sash.

How fascinating are the belts and sashes which form such important items in the fashions of the moment! Close fitting, deep folded belts made of satin or silk are worn with toilets of silk, fine mohair and grass lawn. The newest ribbon belts are finished off with a flat piping on each side of white silk or satin, but if the belt is black or dark in color the piping may be in a light, contrasting shade. Loosely draped sashes look best on youthful figures, and folded belts crossed in front are most becoming to slender shapes. Even plain dresses may be converted into smart, stylish toilets if the belt or sash and the collar and bows are chosen to correspond and in good taste.—Philadelphia Times.

Early Women Postmasters.

The common impression is that women first entered our postal service some 80 years ago. The earliest postmasters of Salem, Mass., and Portsmouth, N. H., were women. In 1700 Portsmouth was the end of the great mail route, and important also as handling a large part of the English mail coming and going. In those days postmasters were required to write official news letters, to accommodate travelers, and to render other services. Mrs. Harvey did her postal work well and besides kept the Three Tuns, the leading hotel in New Hampshire.—C. W. Ernest in Woman's Journal.

Only Uses the Brush.

The empress of Austria has the finest head of hair of any royal lady in Europe, and yet it is never washed. Every day it is brushed through, while a lotion, of which the recipe is jealously kept, is employed. Seven brushes are used, one after the other, so that perfect cleanliness may be insured, and the operation takes two hours and four ladies in waiting.

Daytime Jewels.

The fashion of wearing jewels in the daytime is every day growing more fashionable in England. Two or three years ago, if a British matron wished to level a sneer at the head of a beautiful and well dressed American, she would glare at her through her lorgnette and observe, with a curl of the lip: "Fancy! How vulgar! Wears her diamonds down to breakfast." Time reverses many things, however, and now it is the English woman who overdoes matters in the way of daytime jewelry. Women of the highest rank wear their diamonds and their single row of pearls every day of their lives and to the exclusion of other ornaments. No woman who respects herself, at all events in Paris, is to be seen without a pearl necklace. Most chic Parisiennes are incrusting their umbrella handles with real gems. At many of the fashionable weddings in England diamonds fasten the veils to bonnets above the forehead in front and over the cache-peigne at the back, and many well dressed women are having diamonds mounted as bonnet pins, while some follow the footsteps of the Princess of Wales and keep their toques in place with a diamond hilted dagger. —London Letter.

Black Satin Coats the Vogue.

"Black satin is a material in vogue for coats," writes Isabel A. Mallon in The Ladies' Home Journal, "and upon the coats made of it lace, ribbon and all rich decorations run riot. The design most in vogue for satin has a close fitting bodice with an attached skirt, this skirt being formed of the trimming. A typical black satin coat is fitted to the figure, but has in the center of the back and just in front a few soft folds. It is cut so that it extends two inches below the hips, where it arches slightly, and it is then finished with a frill of black lace that reaches almost to the knees. Wide, drooping revers of the satin are overlaid with cut jet, while at the neck is a folded collar of the satin, with a large flaring bow in the back. A similar bow, but somewhat larger, is at the back at the waist line, and from it come two long satin ends that are drawn over the hips to the front and are loosely knotted so that they fall far down over the lace. With a jet bonnet as its adjunct such a coat may be worn with a simple skirt, which must, however, be black, and the effect of a very rich and elaborate costume will result."

ACTION OF ALCOHOL.

The Truth About Its Operation on the Human Body.

The question is frequently asked, "What shall I take instead of wine, beer, brandy or other alcoholic liquors when I am advised to use some one of these as a remedy in illness?" The question implies that liquor is a valuable aid in combating disease, but principle forbids its use if any other agency will as well meet the case. This query and its implication show lack of knowledge of the teachings of nonalcoholic physicians, who have repeatedly stated that in most ailments alcohol is not only useless, but positively harmful, its reputation as a curative agency resting solely upon its narcotic nature. It is the power of alcohol to deaden sensation which has led to all the popular delusions regarding it both as food and medicine. The patient does not feel the same uneasy sensations after taking it as before; hence he thinks he is better. He does not know that the cessation of uneasiness results from the benumbing of his capacity for feeling. Physicians, as well as the laity, have been deluded by this deceptive drug, because until recently its nerve deadening nature was not recognized, and instead of being classed as a narcotic it was spoken of almost universally as a stimulant.

But modern investigators in medical science have by careful experiments learned that the operation of this drug in the human body is really the exact opposite of the common suppositions regarding it. It is said to warm, yet it has been thoroughly demonstrated that it reduces temperature. It is said to strengthen, yet its action on muscle is known to be enfeebling, its seeming strength giving being only the dulling of the sense of fatigue. It is said to stimulate the heart to action, yet it really only creates a flutter while decreasing power. Being a nerve deadener, it is, by its very nature, a deceiver. By quieting a patient's restlessness both physician and friends may be led to think the condition of the sick one improved when great danger is really present because the symptoms of disease are hidden that should be revealed.

Those medical men and women who have abandoned the use of alcohol in their practice have not been led to such action because of any "temperance fanaticism," but because they are satisfied that disease is more readily subdued when there is no alcohol in the blood. It is true, however, that the doctor who is a total abstainer is more likely to abjure liquor in treating his patients than is the drinking doctor, for his faculties, being free from the benumbing influence of the drug, are clearer to note its effects. As independence of thought and action is necessary to stepping out from a beaten path, even total abstaining doctors are not all ready as yet to lay aside a drug commonly craved and popularly believed in. A sufficient number have asserted their independence in this matter to fully demonstrate that the disuse of alcohol in sickness results in a much smaller mortality and that a person is in more danger of dying who takes this drug than if he lets it entirely alone. Members of the Woman's Christian Temperance union or other temperance workers need have no fear that their own lives, or the lives of their dear ones, will be jeopardized by a refusal to take liquor. With alcohol in the system the sick person has both the disease and the liquor to fight. Many succumb to the double strain who might resist the disease alone. Some recover from the disease only to die of heart failure caused by the liquor.—Union Signal.

Expense of a Bad Habit.

The present writer has neither liking nor disliking for teetotalers. He loves neither a bigot nor a sot. But he cannot shut his eyes to the fact that a quite disproportionate amount of an ordinary man's personal expenses is due to what he drinks. Few people exactly realize what a quarter a day means—almost $100 a year. Talk of being clothed with curses as with a garment! You can dress like a gentleman on a whisky and soda a day. You can keep a horse on three drinks and a cigar. By all means take them if you like them, and if they do you good, and if you can afford them. But if economy is an object with you it is well to recollect the costliness of such easily acquired and quite superfluous habits. Habit, it is said, is second nature. Among the many silly proverbs that the common sense of the nineteenth century has exploded few are more foolish than that "a habit is but a coat, in relinquishing which no more serious pang is involved than in discarding any other slovenly old shooting jacket." Such sacrifices are far more difficult than they are generally believed to be.—"Simplification In Modern Life" in Humanitarian.

Some English Mayors.

A year ago no less than 43 total abstinence mayors were elected in England. Twenty of these were entertained recently by the lord mayor of London and gave their testimony to the benefits of total abstinence.—Union Signal.

Opium Notes.

Li Hung Chang, wise and venerable statesman, drinks only cold or warm tea, eschewing alcoholic beverages.

A significant sign of the times is the condition for enlistment in the reorganized army of China—no recruit being permitted to smoke opium.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON IX, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, NOV. 29.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings x, 1-10. Memory Verses, 6-8—Golden Text, Math. xii, 42—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, she came to prove him with hard questions." She heard, and she came, and she saw. It was in her own land that she heard (verse 6), therefore some one who knew must have told of the glory of Solomon. We know of "a greater than Solomon" (Math. xii, 42), but what are we doing to make known His greatness, and His wondrous love, and His salvation? Faith cometh by hearing, but how can they believe who have never heard? (Rom. x, 17.) It was not merely the fame of Solomon that was made known, but the name of Jehovah, who gave him all he had. The exaltation of any man, however great, is not our business, but our motto is, "Jehovah alone shall be exalted" (Isa. ii, 11, 17). There is only one to whom God has given a name that is above every name (Phil. ii, 9, 10), and we are here to magnify Him and make Him known to the ends of the earth.

2. "And she came to Jerusalem with a very great train, with camels that bare spices, and very much gold, and precious stones." When the Son of David, the true Prince of Peace, shall reign in Jerusalem, for it shall surely be because the Lord hath spoken it (Luke i, 32, 33), then "the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts—yea, all kings shall fall down before Him, all nations shall serve Him." "They shall bring gold and incense, and they shall show forth the praises of the Lord" (Ps. lxxii, 10, 11, 15; Isa. lx, 6). This was foreshadowed not only in the visit of the queen of Sheba, and of all the earth seeking Solomon to hear his wisdom (verse 24), but also in the visit of the wise men from the east, who brought Him gifts—gold and frankincense and myrrh (Math. ii, 11).

3. "And Solomon told her all her questions. There was not anything hid from the king which he told her not." We are not told the nature of her hard questions, but simply that the wisdom of God in Solomon was equal to every one. In Christ are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowlege (Col. ii, 3), and there is nothing that we need to know that He by His Spirit through His word is not ready to tell us. There are many things we are not able to bear because of our carnality or lack of faith (John xvi, 12; I Cor. iii, 2; Heb. v, 12), but if we are teachable and believing He who is with us and perfect in knowledge will teach us all things (Job xxxvi, 4; John xiv, 26). Some things we may not know now, but hereafter (John xiii, 7; I Cor. xiii, 12). A friend of mine has written over 30 helpful questions and answers from the book, which can be had in tract form simply for the postage from L. & K., Box 216, Harrisburg. ("The Soul's Cry and the Saviour's Answer.")

4, 5. "And when the queen of Sheba had seen * * * there was no more spirit in her." Probably she came with the consciousness that she herself was some great one, and doubtless she was in her own land and among her own people, but now she is in Emmanuel's land and sees somewhat of the glory which Jehovah can give, and she thinks nothing of her own any more. When we in our ignorance of God's righteousness think we have of ourselves somewhat worth mentioning, it only declares that we have not seen or known His.

6. "And she said to the king, it was a true report that I heard in mine own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom." Although we know that the report we give from the book concerning our King is all true, how often we have to say, "Who hath believed our report?" (Isa. liii, 1.) As to the last book in the Bible, which more than any other tells of the glory of our King, which has a special blessing both at the beginning and end of it upon all who read and keep it, and in which it is three times written that its words are faithful and true (Rev. i, 3; xxii, 7; xix, 9; xxi, 5; xxii, 6), how few there are who count it a true record, while many turn away from it and talk against it?

7. "Howbeit I believed not the words until I came and mine eyes had seen it, and, behold, the half was not told me. Thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard." We remember that one of the apostles would not believe that the Lord had risen until he saw for himself, but when He did see and believe our Lord said to him, "Blessed are they that have not seen yet have believed" (John xx, 29). Faith in God brings all blessing to the believer and the enjoyment of it, but unbelief shuts the door. Contrast Gen. xv, 6; Dan. vi, 23; Luke i, 45; Acts xxvii, 25; Mark v, 36; John xi, 40, with Luke i, 20, 62; Heb. iii, 12; iv, 1-3. Do we who profess to believe in Christ Jesus give any kind of a true report concerning Him, that some may be led to come and see for themselves? We surely cannot tell it all.

8. "Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom." How happy should those be who are accepted in Christ and blessed with all spiritual blessings in Him, who are made partakers of the divine nature and of the glory to be revealed (Eph. i, 3, 6, 7; I Pet. v, 1; II Pet. i, 4), who are joint heirs with Christ, laborers together with God, and here in Christ's stead as His embassadors (I Cor. iii, 9; II Cor. v, 20). But are we?

9. "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on the throne of Israel, because the Lord loved Israel forever. Therefore made He the king to do judgment and justice." In II Chron. ix, 8, the record is "to set thee on His throne to be king for the Lord thy God." See also I Chron. xxix, 23, "Solomon sat on the throne of the Lord as king instead of David, his father." The only throne on earth ever called the throne of the Lord was the throne of the king of Israel, and at Jerusalem shall yet be the throne of the Lord, and a King shall sit on it who will execute judgment and justice in the earth, and in those days all the earth shall send gifts to that King and shall worship Him (Jer. iii, 17, 18; xxiii, 5, 6).

10. "And she gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones." If we value a talent of gold at $25,000, which is probably a low valuation, we have here a gift of $3,000,000 in gold, not to mention the spices and precious stones. The next verse speaks of gold from Ophir, and verse 14 says that 666 talents ($16,650,000) came every year, besides the wealth of verse 15. Let it all suggest to us the "exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think" of the grace and glory of our God. The queen of Sheba was emptied of her treasures, but went home filled with the royal bounty of Solomon (verse 13), even all her desire and more. Christ Jesus will do greater things for us.

A Story Well Told.

A gentleman from North Carolina wrote to the Editor of the Christian Work, referring to an advertisement of The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. in the columns of that paper: "If everything you advertise in your paper repays the purchaser as well as this advertisement has me, you are conferring a benefit on mankind in bringing such good things to notice. I do not really see how they can afford to give so much for the money." Everyone who accepts the wonderful offers made by this company gives the same verdict, yet the company do not disclaim the fact, that, they make a fair manufacturers' profit on each sale. The "Larkin Idea," which saves the entire middlemen's profits, by dispensing altogether with their services, effects an aggregate saving which makes easily possible, seemingly, wonderful, offers. Of course, years of study, a wonderfully perfect system, large capital, and the highest reputation for integrity, are all necessary in making the Larkin method a success.

ILLINOIS MELANGE.

ITEMS OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO OUR OWN PEOPLE.

Some of the Principal Happenings of the Week Reported by Telegraph and Placed for Convenience of Our Readers—Matters of Interest.

Springfield, Ills., Nov. 12.—Colonel W. F. Dose, private secretary to Governor Altgeld, has furnished the following statement in explanation of the increased tax rate of Illinois: "You understand the governor and the auditor are charged with the clerical duty of figuring out each year how many cents on $100 of appraised valuation it will take to meet the tax levy made by the legislature. This is purely a matter of simple mathematics and entirely perfunctory. The books showed this year that, while the same amount of money as last year had to be raised, there was $17,000,000 less in appraised value to tax. Necessarily the rate had to be increased."

SEEMS TO HAVE ECCENTRICITIES.

But They Can Hardly Be Called Evidence of Insanity.

Macomb, Ills., Nov. 14.—James Fugate, one of the oldest and most respected citizens of Lamoine township, this county, was dumfounded at the sight of the sheriff, armed with handcuffs and a warrant for his arrest, and declaring that the old gentleman was charged by his son with being insane and very violent. The handcuffs were not required and the old gentleman came peaceably to Macomb, where Judge Wheat set the hearing for next Tuesday and allowed Fugate to go free until that time. The old gentleman in speaking of the matter, said:

"If I am insane I didn't know it until I was arrested. If I am insane now I always have been. In some particulars I was always queer. For instance, my house has never been without butter and eggs since I bought my first cow; I never bought a pound of meat because I was out; my wife for nearly fifty years has never seen the time when she didn't have all the money she wanted to spend; I never attended a political meeting; was never at a Fourth of July celebration; and was never at a show of any sort. I was never sued and was never arrested in my life until this occasion. Maybe all this is proof that I am crazy, but I don't think I am, regardless of the charge."

Mills Not Seeking Office.

Chicago, Nov. 16.—Luther Laflin Mills, who has been talked of as a candidate for United States senator, said in an interview Saturday afternoon with a representative of the Associated Press: "I am very grateful for the generous mention which is made of me in connection with the lofty position of a United States senator from the great state of Illinois. But I am not a seeker for any office. My ambition will be reasonably satisfied if, as a private citizen, I can be of service to my community and my country."

Altgeld Wants No Office.

Springfield, Ills., Nov. 12.—In reply to the rumor that he would be a candidate for mayor of Chicago, or United States senator, Governor Altgeld emphatically replied: "There is absolutely nothing in it. The mere idea of being candidate for United States senator is idiotic from the fact that the next legislature will be overwhelmingly Republican on joint ballot. As for the mayoralty of Chicago, the same idea is equally ridiculous. I want no office within the gift of man."

MRS. CASTLE A FREE WOMAN.

Liberated from the British Bastile Because She Is a Stealomaniac.

London, Nov. 11.—Bernard Abrahams, of counsel for the Castles, received the following note from the home office Monday evening:

"The prisoner Ella Castle will be released on account of her mental and physical condition and other circumstances.

"DIGBY, Under Secretary."

That Mr. Castle was at the prison as early yesterday as it was any use goes without saying, and he said while waiting for his wife to come into the waiting room:

"I feel twenty years younger, and as though the nightmare of the past month had vanished. My wife was informed last night that I would come for her today. She was utterly prostrated yesterday. I shall immediately retire to the country, place my wife under a doctor's care, and endeavor to restore her health, in order to permit of her speedy return to America."

Mrs. Castle was almost carried out of jail, she was so weak and helpless. Her husband's devotion has been the admiration of all who have seen it.

WHICH?

One Hundred and Twenty-five Thousand Dollars Contributed.—The appeal at Carnegie Music hall, Sunday, for subscriptions to the fund of foreign missions netted nearly $125,000.—Morning Paper.

Crazed by Starvation.—A young girl was picked up on the streets yesterday insane from hunger. She was arrested for vagrancy.—Evening Paper.

The light grew dim along Broadway,
And mid the jostle there
A vagrant walked at close of day,
In hunger and despair.
She reeled and fainted while she strove
To face the biting air.

Beset by hunger's racking qualms,
She first had feebly tried
To gain a meager grace of alms,
But, rudely thrust aside,
At last had drifted aimlessly,
While reason dimmed and died.

Within a gayly lighted hall,
Not far from where she lay,
Ten thousand answered to the call
Of missions far away
For gold to turn the pagan king
From gods of wood and clay.

He, fat and sleek, in comfort waits
The grace that gold will bring.
She faints and falls within our gates,
While thousands rise and sing,
For she is but a beggar maid,
And he a pagan king.
—Albert B. Paine in New York Journal.

Chicago's New Central Labor Body.

The Trade and Labor assembly voted to surrender on Nov. 1 the charter from the American Federation of Labor. It is expected that this action will pave the way for the formation of a new central body that shall be thoroughly representative of Chicago unions. It is to be hoped that such will be the result. The influence of organized labor in the city has been greatly impaired in the past because there was no single central body which commanded the allegiance and respect of trade unionists generally. Factional wrangling has been destructive of the best results. Now that an entirely new body is to be organized, if the unions approve of that plan, under the direction of the officers of the federation, all the organizations should join in building up a central body that shall truly represent the workingmen of the city and be a credit to them. After election it doubtless will be easier to organize such a body than it would be now. Therefore the date of the meeting to be called for that purpose is wisely set for Nov. 9.

An important feature of the plan suggested for consideration by the federation officials is this provision, which is to form a part of the constitution of the newly organized body:

"The following shall be ineligible as delegates: All employers, all persons not working at their trade, all persons holding political positions, provided this shall not be so construed as to include salaried officers of any union whose official duties require not less than eight hours a day."

Such a provision as this seems to be necessary to insure a central body's maintaining its distinctive character as a labor body, to prevent its deteriorating into an organization to be used for political purposes and to prevent its domination by men who are not bona fide trade unionists and workingmen.—Chicago Record.

Charity Not Wanted.

The following resolutions were introduced at a meeting of the miscellaneous section of the Central Labor union of New York and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, That professed humanitarian, Robert G. Ingersoll, in a speech lately delivered before a big audience at Chicago, said, "Blessed is that country where the rich are extravagant and the poor economical; a rich spendthrift is a blessing, a rich miser a curse; extravagance is a splendid form of charity; let the rich spend, let them give work to their fellow men, and I will find no fault with their wealth,"

Resolved, That the Central Labor union, representing the many organized wageworkers of New York, do hereby characterize such sentiments as utterly abhorrent to the wealth producers of the land, as being contrary to the spirit of our institutions, and we further condemn industrial conditions which make the common people dependent upon the crumbs that fall from the overladen tables of those who exact tribute from industry through land monopoly, who reap the results of the labor of others through special advantages and privileges conferred by unjust law; further,

Resolved, That the French revolution, which Ingersoll has extolled as a revolt of humanity against the barbaric luxuries of the French nobility at the time of Louis XVI, was brought about by the condition he now describes as being desirable, and which are fast becoming a reality.

Resolved, further, That these resolutions be immedately presented to all the central labor bodies of the country for adoption as a declaration of resistance against the servitude advocated by Ingersoll and approved generally by those he represents as a justification for their conduct.

Organize and Federate.

"Did you ever imagine that corporations would meet to decide what is to the interests of labor?" asked Gompers at the Brotherhood of Firemen's convention. "If you expect a better time, it must come through you. If you think I or a few hundred such as I can bring about miracles, you are wrong. We can show you all that is necessary to do, but unless you organize and federate with other organizations, and all these other organizations in turn become federated, we shall lose what we have gained and go back, back, back. You find your papers devoting pages to the meetings of the locomotive firemen. Who 25 years ago would have called the firemen a 'grand organization?' None. But now it is different. Now they are organized."

"Value For Value."

Edward McHugh, the delegate of the international federation of shipping and river trades of England, whose mission here is to organize a worldwide federation, addressed a meeting of longshoreman and seamen at Atantic Coast Seamen's hall, 51 South street, New York. The principal object of the meeting was to form a union of longshoremen and to add recruits to the present local union of Atlantic coast seamen.

"We don't need strikes," said the speaker. "Our method is 'value for value.' If wages are reduced, the men reduce their standard of work and do not work so hard. They work in proportion to the way they are paid."

The Settlement to Come.

A campaign of coercion is doomed to failure. But suppose that in some incomprehensible manner it should succeed, what then? Are the children of Mammon so dazzled by their own gold that they cannot see beyond the next administration? Behind the money issue of the present struggle lies the great contest of our time and country, the fight that must sooner or later be fought to a finish. The settlement of the differences between capital and labor may be postponed; it cannot be avoided. Come that settlement must, and come it will. And wise employers will not add the crime of coercion to the black record they will be compelled to face when wage earners finally bring them to the bar of justice.—New York Journal.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

SPY IN BRITISH PAY TESTIFIES AT THE IVORY TRIAL.

Government Witness Appears Who Knocks the Confidence Out of the Alleged Dynamiter, and Tells a Story of His Experience with Irish Societies in America.

London, Nov. 14.—The final examination of Edward J. Ivory, alias Edward Bell, the saloon keeper of New York and alleged dynamiter, at Bow street police court yesterday developed into a sensation equal to the excitement caused by the revelations of Detective LeCaron some years ago. The weekly examinations of Ivory have been going on at Bow street on Friday ever since he was brought to London after his arrest at Glasgow some two months ago, on the charge of being concerned with P. J. Tynan, Kearney, Haines and others in a conspiracy to blow up public and other buildings with the use of dynamite. Hitherto the testimony has been of the usual monotonous police court description. But yesterday the crown, represented by C. E. Gill, sprung a sensation in the shape of the testimony of a government detective known only as "Jones," a native of Armagh, Ireland, who seems to have succeeded in becoming a member of secret Irish organizations in New York "under instructions," and to have possessed himself of secrets of the Clanna-Gael association.

Appearance That Staggers Ivory.

Ivory has hitherto behaved in a most unconcerned manner, as if confident of acquittal; but yesterday when "Jones" was placed in the witness box the prisoner's face showed consternation. He was completely staggered by the appearance of Jones under such circumstances, and great though suppressed excitement prevailed in court when a rumor was circulated that the prosecution expected the mysterious witness, whose real name is kept seceret, to unravel the secret history of the "physical force" movement in the United States. When Jones first appeared on the witness stand Gill asked the presiding magistrate to stop all sketching in court, exclaiming that it was of the utmost importance that nothing should be allowed to transpire to identify the witness in the future.

Witness Fears the Assassin.

But "Jones" caused more excitement during the proceedings by suddenly addressing Magistrate Vaughn, saying: "A reporter is taking a sketch of me. I fear for my safety." The magistrate ordered the sketch dropped and later when he found a reporter writing a description of the detective he ordered that dropped also. Chief Inspector Melville, of Scotland Yard, who was present in court, took an active part in suppressing the taking of descriptions of "Jones." Jones is a man about 5 feet 5 inches high, with a brown beard and mustache, and hair a shade darker. He has a bulging forehead and black eyes, pale complexion and has a furtive, shifty look. He was very nervous while in court, and was constantly pulling his beard. He spoke with a pronounced brogue. He delivered his testimony as though in fear of his life and seemed to be scared of the sound of his own voice.

REFUSED TO GIVE HIS INITIALS.

Joined the Clan-Na-Gael for the Purpose of Giving It Away.

In fact, at the close of the proceedings a jailor remarked to a representative of the Associated Press: "Jones is a dead man. I am glad that I do not stand in his shoes." When Ivory's counsel asked Jones to give the initials of his name the witness refused, but the counsel insisted and also demanded to know the address of Jones in New York, whereupon the witness replied: "I fear for my safety and decline to give the particular location." The magistrate upheld Jones in his refusal and then followed a dramatic incident.

Counsel for the prisoner solemnly asked: "Did you take the oath of the Clan-na-Gael?" Upon hearing this question Jones turned deadly pale, hesitated for a moment and then feebly answered: "Yes."

Ivory's counsel thereupon said: "You were intending, at the time, not to observe it?" To this question Jones replied: "Yes, I did not intend to observe it."

Counsel thereupon said: "Have you any respect for the oath you have given here today?" "Yes," replied Jones in a weak voice.

Replying to questions upon the part of Gill, he told how he went to New York and obtained work in a store, later going into business for himself, all the time being in the employ of the British government, his purpose being to discover the secrets of the Clan-na-Gael and other Irish societies whose object is to "make war" on England. Jones, it appears, remained in New York until September of the present year, all the time "making inquiries" for the British government.

Early in 1892 he met William Lyman (president of the Irish National Alliance) and Boland, of New York city, and learned of the existence of the Irish National organization known among its members as the "United Irish," or "T. H.," whose executive body was known by the letters "D. A." He joined the organization and was initiated into a camp known as the "Shamrock club," among those present at his initiation being Lyman, Boland, Gallagher, Kearney and Tynan.

They afterwards formed a new camp called the "Nally club," the membership of which included Mearns and Nolan, who had been connected with an explosion in Dublin.

LAST YEAR'S CHICAGO CONVENTION.

"Jones" Attends and Tells What He Learned—Documents Produced.

Jones further stated that he was elected treasurer of the "Nally club," whose meetings were of the most secret description, the "district orders" being burned after being read. After the initiation the members of this club were known by a number. Part of the subscriptions, the witness also testified, were contributed to a revolutionary fund, and calls were made for money to pay for celebrations of the death of the "Manchester martyrs," and to aid the convicted dynamiters. Answering further questions Jones said that while on his way to the Chicago convention of 1895 Kearney introduced the prisoner, Ivory, to the witness as a "brother." P. J. Tynan and O'Donovan Rossa, according to Jones, were present, and Tynan said that Ivory belonged to his "camp" and had been known to him in Dublin previous to 1892.

Jones' mention of the Chicago convention of 1895 refers to the "new movement convention" which was attended by a number of confidants of Lyman, who, during the convention time it was stated in court, held secret meetings with them. Later it seems Jones joined a "camp" under the name of Thomas Meric Jones. Continuing his account of the visit to Chicago, Jones said he arrived there on Sept. 22 of last year, and was met at the railroad station by St. John Gaffney. He stayed at McCoy's hotel, where the committee of the secret organization met.

Ivory, Jones stated, attended the meeting at which the names were chosen to be submitted to the public convention as officers of the "new movement," the object being that an open movement might be controlled, as it is according to Jones, by a secret organization. In another portion of his testimony Jones said that he saw Ivory two or three weeks before the latter left America, in Cody's saloon in New York, which he further said was largely frequented by members of the organization. Jones then produced a document purporting to give the constitution of the society up to 1895 and also typewritten copies of the constitution and ritual of the Clan-na-Gael.

Jones further said that any one convicted of a dynamite outrage was described in the proceedings of the organization as "a soldier of Ireland." The witness afterwards produced a mass of documents giving "camp" instructions, pass-words, signs, etc., and a copy of the report of the secret convention at Chicago in 1895, in which an item of the expenditure was $3,500 for "merchandise," which Jones explained meant dynamite. The cross-examination of Jones did not shake his evidence, and Ivory was committed for trial.

COMMISSIONER MILLER RESIGNS.

His Successor in Office Will Probably Be Forman, of Illinois.

Washington, Nov. 13.—Commissioner Joseph S. Miller, of the internal revenue bureau, has resigned to accept the vice presidency of the American Bonding and Trust company, of Baltimore, under the arrangement which was practically consummated some months ago. His successor in office probably will be ex-Representative Forman, of Illinois. Miller's resignation has been in the hands of the president some weeks.

It is known that the president entertains for him a warm personal regard, and that in accepting his resignation he expressed his regret at his retirement from the public service and his high appreciation of the very efficient manner in which he had performed his duties during the three years and seven months he had conducted the important affairs of the internal revenue bureau. Miller will remain in charge of the office until his successor is ready to enter upon his duties.

W. C. T. U. CONVENTION MEETS.

Miss Willard Delivers Her Address and the Routine Reports Are Read.

St. Louis, Nov. 14.—The first meeting of the annual convention of the W. C. T. U. was held here yesterday with 500 delegates and as many more visitors interested in the work present. Miss Willard presided and delivered her annual address in which she showed that the progress of the reforms advocated by the union was very encouraging and rapid. An encouraging letter from Lady Henry Somerset was read, the executive committee made its report, which was also encouraging; the treasurer reported a balance of $3,502 in the treasury and a great gain in membership and the corresponding secretary enlarged on this latter branch of progress.

Mary E. Lovell, of Pennsylvania, superintendent of the department of mercy, reported that 10,934 children were enrolled in the Band of Mercy. At night a welcome meeting was held at which wecoming addresses and responses were made.

COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN.

First Convention Meets at Gotham with 120 Delegates Present.

New York, Nov. 16.—The first convention of the National Council of Jewish women was opened yesterday in the Tuxedo hall. There were 120 delegates present, including about fifty from New York city. Many of them had never before been in New York. Among the prominent delegates present are: Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, of Chicago; Mrs. L. Nussbaum, of Indianapolis; Mrs Etta Cecil R. Hirsch, of Des Moines, Ia., and Mrs. Hattie Heller, of St. Louis. The delegate from Canada is Mrs. Meldola de Cola. The officers of the council, all of whom are from Chicago, and are present, are: President, Mrs. H. Solomon; vice president, Mrs. E. Mandel; treasurer, Mrs. J. Selz; corresponding secretary, Miss Sadie American; recording secretary, Mrs. T. J. Wolf. Eighteen states have representatives in the council.

Latest from Kentucky.

Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 13.—Returns from all of the 119 counties in the state have been reported at the office of the secretary of state. On the National ticket they show a total vote of 445,000. McKinley's vote is 218,055; Bryan's 217,798; McKiley's plurality, 257. The returns are in much earlier than usual and it is probable that the canvassing board will begin its work within a few days.

Lifelong obligations of the gravest sort ought not to be taken blindfold and suddenly.

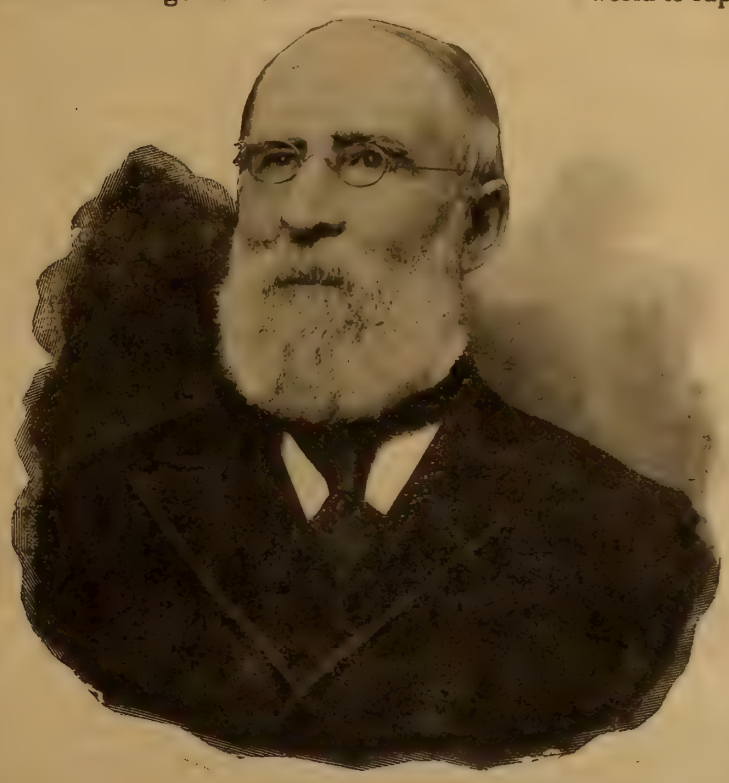
Interesting reports of the Iowa and Pennsylvania Conventions will be in our next issue.

Next week Dec. 1 and 2 is the date of the New England Convention. See program on our ninth page.

Let us earnestly entreat every friend of the cause in New England to prayerfully consider how they can exert their influence to make their coming convention a power for the cause.

Secretary W. I. Phillips attended the conventions in this city last week of the Christian Workers and the Epworth League, and was cordially received by the management. He placed, with their approval, a large amount of N. C. A. literature in the hands of delegates.

Pres. C. A. Blanchard in an address in 1874 before a convention in Library Hall, Pittsburgh, said: "The Constitution declares that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and also that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States. These statements are very general. No law may be made prohibiting the free exercise of religion. But who is to decide what is religion? The citizens, of course, for Congress may make no law respecting an establishment of religion. Every man may choose his religion, or make a new one, and Congress may not prohibit its free exercise. Tartar, Confucian and Hindoo may bring their gods many and lords many; the Moslem minaret may shine in the setting sun from every hill; every graveyard become a temple for celestial worshipers of the dead. Every one of India's three hundred million gods may leave that land where the snow of Himalaya stands silent sentinel, and Cape Cormorin looks out upon the summer sea. Every one of them may come to this Christian land, and here find a congenial home."



ELDE RUFUS SMITH.

Many of our readers will recognize here the familiar face of one of our most devoted mission and reform workers. He has always been an uncompromising foe of the lodge and liquor traffic, and has traveled this country from ocean to ocean and from the lakes to the Gulf, addressing audiences on the street, on the train, from pulpits and platform. Gifted with a striking presence and a powerful and penetrating voice he has a remarkable faculty of impressing outdoor audiences. His long and persistent agitation of the prohibition question in his home town of Maryville, Mo., resulted in closing every saloon in the place. But after an absence of several years he returned to enjoy his old home during the balance of his life, and finding the saloons had opened up again, he removed to Wheaton, Ill., where, under the shadow of its reform college, he has decided to spend his remaining years.

Elder Rufus Smith, or Uncle Rufus, as he is best known in Minneapolis where he has often preached, was converted in his seventeenth year, in a meeting held by H. L. Dox, at Stone Mills, N. Y. He was a Reformed Lutheran of the Francken Evangelical Lutheran Synod of New York. His congregations in New York were at Black Lake, Starkville, Bethel, Raymertown, Poestenkill and Bryan's Corners. In Wisconsin at Sharon, and in Illinois at Mt. Morris and Jackson. For six years, while a Lutheran minister, he preached in many States as an evangelist. Some thirty years ago a great change came over his mind which, as he believes, gave him more freedom in presenting the truth, and enabled him to accomplish more for the Master. In his letter, on our fifth page, he tells us how this change was produced, and some of the many things which enable him to rejoice in his declining years.

Paul Deschanel, of the French Chamber of Deputies, says: "I do not doubt at all that the world is rapidly approaching, if it has not already reached, a period which will give birth to such a crisis as was the French Revolution, and perhaps to even a greater crisis." In the Forum Prof. Goldwin Smith wrote recently: "There is a general feeling abroad that the stream of history is drawing near a cataract now; and there are apparent grounds for the surmise. There is everywhere in the social frame an untoward unrest, which as usual is a sign of fundamental changes within."

"My soul has not been so stirred with indignation at the lodges for some time," writes Rev. Isaiah Faris, of Vernon, Wis., "as it was last night when I read in the Chicago Record of the death of E. W. Curry in Des Moines, Ia. How long will the long-suffering public allow 'benevolent' societies to take the lives of their fellow men for amusement or for other purposes; and yet claim that their secret oaths do not allow them to reveal the facts in the case? Turn on the light till no civilized person, not to say Christian, will tolerate such institutions."

The important testimony of Missionary Dodds in regard to Freemasonry in Turkey, as given in this issue by our Princeton correspondent, is valuable. It adds to the accumulation of testimony that this most despotic government on earth, if the Turks may be called a government, is all honey-combed and putrid with the leprosy of Freemasonry.

It is significant of the intense feeling that characterized the late election that Lieutenant Binns, of the U. S. Army at Washington, resigned his office before the election, setting forth in a long letter his belief that a collision between the people and the U. S. Army would follow the election, in which case he could not conscientiously fight against the people.

Spiritual growth has not kept pace with the unprecedented material development of the century, and no modern civilization is more materialistic than our own. Churches and ministers have not escaped the influence of materialism. Spiritual realities are less real to us than those which can be seen and handled. Is there not a lack of the spiritual power which comes from "seeing Him who is invisible?" Do we not as pastors and churches need above all things the deepening of our spiritual life?

THE POLAR STAR.

BY JONATHAN BLANCHARD, IN 1868.

Sweet Cynosure! Far fixed in spotless fields
Of northern ether thou hast ever hung;
While hands and harps that hymn'd thee, long unstrung,
Have felt time's grasp, and 'neath the scythe he wields
Have sought their dust original, and lie
Frail subjects of the sentence, "Thou shalt die."

Say: wert thou present when the morning stars
First sang their Maker? Or didst thou begin
Thy kindly office when, obscured by sin,
Thy sister spheres shone dimly, and the jars
Of discord boomed in hateful thunders through
Their orbits, bedded in eternal blue?

I cease to question. Oh, I envy thee;
Thy home, the wide-expanded north; thy throne,
Boreal light coruscant; thou alone,
Rebed in the mantle of sublimity,
View'st busy worlds all wildered and deranged,
Thyself unchanging ever and unchanged.

Still thou surviv'st, lone star; still swim'st sublime,
High in the regions of the polar night;
And by thy steady beams, as cold as bright,
Thou serv st a waymark to the sons of time;
As thou didst rest serene above the change
That wheels and trembles through creation's range.

Emblem of truth, of virtue and of love,
Tho' oft obscured by that unearthly light,
Which darts wild beauty o'er the clouds of night,
Unmoved, unmingled, from thy dome above
Thy silver rays in pure irradiance glow,
As all unconscious of the mists below.

Nor dost thou shine in vain. While far at sea,
The storm-beat sailor, tossed without a guide,
Oft flings his treacherous compass to the tide
And trusts himself to Providence and thee;
By thy true light the proud ship rights again,
Buffs to the gale and stems the rugged main,

Sweet star, farewell! If soon this heart should lie
All cold and icy as the northern wild
Which first imbibes thy ray; thou who beguiled
My life's lone thought, shine o'er me when I die;
And from the fitful gloom of darkness save
The form that nightly sits in sorrow by my grave.

ARGUMENTUM AD HOMINEM.

BY REV. JOHN BROWN, A. M.

Supposing secret societies to be lawful, which I do not believe them to be, if they be not commanded, and would be a stumbling-block in the way of a weak brother, a Christian ought not to join them; or, having joined already, it would be his duty to withdraw from them. The same rule applies to all indifferent actions; i. e., actions in which there is neither virture nor vice, such as eating or not eating certain kinds of food. "For neither if we eat are we the better, neither if we eat not are we the worse." 1 Cor. 8: 8. "I know, and am persuaded by the Lord Jesus, that there is nothing unclean of itself; but to him that esteemeth anything to be unclean, to him it is unclean." Rom. 14: 14.

This argument has been applied to the use of intoxicating wine, and I see no reason why it may not be applied to the lodge or the theatre, if the lodge or the theatre be harmless, which I do not admit them to be. "It is good neither to eat flesh, nor drink wine, nor to do any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is caused to offend, or is made weak." Ver. 21. The words any thing have been supplied by the translators; but I would also supply the word do. The prohibition extends to all indifferent actions whatever. The word rendered offended, does not mean to displease, but to cause the weak brother to offend the Lord, by encouraging him to do that, about the propriety of which he is in doubt. "And he that doubteth is condemned if he eat," or do any thing contrary to the dictates of his own conscience, verse 23.

"We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves." Rom. 15: 1. We ought not to seek self-gratification at the expense of our weak brother's comfort. The strong or fully instructed believer must yield to the prejudices of the weak or narrow-minded—not the weak to the strong; because the weak brother has conscientious scruples about that, about which the strong or well-informed believer has none. "Through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish." 1 Cor. 8:11. That is the tendency of your conduct. If the weak brother would do, with an accusing conscience, what the strong brother does with a clear conscience, the weak brother should perish, and the strong brother would be the cause of it. "But when ye sin against the brethren, and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ." Ver. 12. If Paul would eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest he should make his brother to offend, much more may we give up the saloon, the lodge or the theatre.

SEPARATION IS THE WATCHWORD.

BY REV P. B. WILLIAMS.

Another reason why Christians should not unite with the "order," is found in the fact that it has "rites," "ceremonies" and obligations incompatible with Christianity. Masons have an "altar," and they charge every Mason to "remember that around this altar you have promised to befriend and relieve every brother (Mason) who shall need your assistance." Now, what "altar" is this? Is it a pagan, Jewish or Christian "altar?" Or is it simply a Masonic altar?

A Christian altar it cannot be, for Paul says, "We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat who serve the tabernacle." And John the Apostle says:—that same John who Masons say belonged to the "order"—"And there was given me a reed like unto a rod, and the angel stood saying, rise and measure the temple of God and the altar and them that worship therein." Christians have but one altar, and that to them is an altar of both sacrifice and incense of prayer and praise. "And whatever they do in word or deed they must do in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God even the Father by him." What right then, we ask, have Christians to approach any other altar? What right have they to carry their offerings to any other altar, ancient or modern, pagan, Jewish or Masonic? They have none! And the records of heaven may be searched in vain for any.

What business have they with "certain mystic forms of no recent date?" By what authority do "Masons professing Christianity dedicate their lodges to St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist," or any other saint, living or dead? In the "ceremony of constitution and consecration," what means those "burning tapers" of blue, white and red wax? Is this part of the "ceremony" pagan, Jewish or Catholic? And by what authority do they "sprinkle the elements of consecration upon the lodge?" Is this Jewish or pagan or Christian consecration? If Christian, show us the record. If Jewish or pagan, by what authority do Christians participate? Christians are commanded to do good unto all men, and especially to the "household of faith"—the members of the Lord's body. But Masons are under obligation to help their own brethren first, and then they may aid others. The Christian Mason is bound to help his infidel, Jewish or Turkish brother before his brother in Christ. Thus they reverse the divine rule and violate the apostolic injunction.

The obligations they assume as Masons are stronger and more binding than those they take as Christians. A member of the church, who is also a Mason, may be quilty of immorality and be excluded from the church, and yet his Masonic brethren, who are still members of the church from which he has been excluded, are bound, by their Masonic obligations, to prefer him in point of benevolence to their own brethren in Christ. If when men were excluded from the church they were also excluded from the lodge, this result would not follow; but such is not the case. And all this is in positive violation of the apostles' teachings.

"In that letter I wrote to you not to be associated with fornicators—in no wise with the fornicators of this world, or with the covetous, or extortioners, or idolaters, since, indeed, you are bound to come out from the world—but now I write to you not to be associated with anyone, named a brother, if he be a fornicator, or a covetous person, or an idolater, or a reviler, or a drunkard, or an extortioner; with such a person not even to eat."—Diaglott Version.

Christians are not to be associated with any of these characters in the world, and not to eat an ordinary meal with them if they be called brethren. And yet professing Christians are "associated" on the most intimate terms with just such persons in the "Masonic fraternity." Nay, more, they are "yoked together" for life, and are Masonically bound to aid them in preference to their own brethren in the Lord.

But Freemasons, whatever they may claim to the contrary, are of the world. It is a human institution, originating with the world, enveloped in mystery and symbols, and whitewashed with numerous passages of Scripture, all of which are perverted and misapplied. The infidel and Christian enter its portals side by side and hand in hand. They take the same vows, assume the same obligations, and are bound by Masonic fetters which they cannot break. Both have committed themselves, and there is no retreat. They are true yokefellows for life. And although the Christian Mason may read again and again the words of Paul, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," he cannot now help himself. The deed is done. The ceremony of initiation is over and his lips are sealed forever.

He has sworn to "conceal serious truths," and "valuable precepts." He cannot whisper them in the ear of the wife of his bosom. He cannot teach them to his children. He cannot reveal them to his brethren in Christ. And yet they are alike the property of the infidel and deist. It is in vain Paul may ask, "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols?"

Here they have fellowship, communion, concord and agreement with all these. For, as we shall show hereafter, all worship founded in the "commandments of men" is false, or "will-worship," and consequently idolatrous. The saints "are the temple of the living God," and he has promised to "dwell in them, and walk in them; and "I," saith he, "will be their God and they shall be my people." And now we have the exhortation: "Wherefore, come out from among them and be ye SEPARATE, SAITH THE LORD, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Such is the teaching of the Gospel. My brother, will you heed it? Or will you turn away from it and still practice these rites and ceremonies, and assume those obligations of which the Word of God knows nothing? "We speak as unto wise men; judge ye."

Portland, Ore.

SCISSORS AND PASTE SOCIETIES.

FROM THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

One who passed his life in royal courts tells us how highly the stars and orders, obtained so cheaply, are valued by the wearers. If they were the rewards of valor this would not be surprising, but no one, of course, is more aware than their serenities themselves that they have no sort of claim to them. Yet, "in every drawer and portmanteau there are partitions set aside for them, where they are regarded with the same gloating delight as a girl bestows on her first ball dress, and the great question of the day is, which and how many of these gew-gaws are to be worn at dinner."

This is spoken of as among the follies and fancies of royalty and its scions; but the love of personal decorations, an inheritance no doubt from our savage ancestry, is quite as marked in circles that are by no means so elevated. The middle and lower classes, by whom these objects of desire cannot be obtained from the fountain of honor, have very reasonably invented them for themselves; and a Grand Master of Freemasons or Odd-fellows may have as many medals as a German Prince.

What is very curious, the passion for these ornaments, and for the sounding words and phrases with which they are usually conferred, is much more developed in some of our colonies than at home. A correspondent, recently settled in Canada, writes me that nothing strikes a new-comer in that country more than the variety of the (more or less) secret societies which absorb the attention of a large part of the population, and delight it with their airs of pomp and mystery. "Their ostensible object is benevolence and mutual help, but their real attraction is the opportunities they afford for the gratification of personal vanity. The number of their titles and the richness of their insignia are amazing; and your grocer and hairdresser, once within the 'lodge,' is addressed as 'Right Worthy Grand Superior Standard Bearer,' and moves with dignity, with a silver-plated battle-axe over his shoulder." It certainly seems more impressive to belong to the "Knights of the Black Receptory," the "Knights Templar," or the "Knights of Labor" than the Odd-fellows society, and it is seldom indeed that the mysteries of these solemn institutions are made visible to the common eye; but an exceptional opportunity has been offered to us by the enterprise of the Ontario Brantford Expositor, which has published a "souvenir number on the occasion of a dedication of a new hall by the Independent Order of Foresters."

As regards orders and medals, one can perhaps fancy the coming coronation of the Czar presenting a more splendid spectacle, but in the way of grandiloquence of diction, this defies comparison. When the Grand Master has called upon the Grand Chaplain to address the Throne of Grace, he bids the Grand Marshal and the Grand Heralds from the north, south, east and west to enter. "Grand Herald of the North," says the Grand Master, "where mountain and valley are perpetually robed in crystalline white, as purity is the first tenet of our order, without which no one can become a true Forester, bring forth and place upon the base of our altar a white stone." Here herald brings in a white stone. "The next principle," says the Grand Master, "we meet in our annual progress is friendship, the emblematic color of which is pink." The Grand Herald of the South, "the glow of whose genial warmth bedecks all nature with beauty and fragrance," brings in a pink stone and lays it at the base of the altar.

It is remarkable how the audience can bear all this without screaming with laughter, but they look upon these proceedings as sublime. Grand Heralds bring in stones blue, "everywhere and universally the synonym of love;" stones scarlet for truth; stones of green for faith (or possibly credulity), and stones of royal purple, "type of the highest rank and power." This, one would think, is rant enough, but "leaving the Subordinate Lodge, we now ascend still higher to the Encampment Branch. Here cluster virtues more etherial, if not more excellent."

To follow this rubbish to its final dust-hole would be tedious, but the strangeness of the matter is that not only is there not one-half penny worth of humor to all this intolerable amount of verbosity, but my correspondent assures me that similar societies exercise a considerable influence upon Canadian politics, and that it is difficult to reach any municipal position if a man be not a "joiner"—that is, unless he joins one or other of these lodges. The establishment of a Dick-Swiveller Guild or a Simon-Tapportit Institution would, it strikes one, be a wholesome reproof to these scissors-and paste societies.

JAMES PAYN.

A CHURCH-MASONIC BURIAL.

Josiah W. Leeds sends the following letter concerning an accident of recent happening: "A wealthy man, a Freemason, the president of a bank in the country town near which is my home, mat with a tragic death two weeks ago, by being thrown out of his carriage. The occurrence happened on the morning of the first day of the week, a little before the hour when people would be wending their way to the different places of worship. The horse which was being driven was a newly-purchased one, and its owner had taken it out to try its speed. Turning a corner too rapidly the man was thrown out, and being of unusually heavy build his injuries soon terminated fatally. At the funeral services, held at the High Episcopal church, there was great profusion of wreaths and floral offerings, the rector with the vested choir bearing the 'processional cross' (a memorial gift of the deceased), countermarching along the aisle and meeting the delegation of St. John's Commandery from Philadelphia.

"'When the visitors arrived,' says the sympathetic newspaper report, 'they took up a position around the bier, and Prelate Jackson of the M. E. church led in the Masonic services, the responses being given by the Sir Knights. At the conclusion of the services the casket was borne from the church beneath an arch of steel, which was formed by the Sir Knights, who stood with upraised swords making a passage through which the bearers passed. The funeral then started, and with slow and solemn tread, keeping step to the dirge played by the band, the procession moved out to Oaklands, where interment was made, after appropriate Masonic exercises had been held.' Another newspaper account says in its conclusion: 'The deceased was dressed in full Knightly uniform with his insigna laid upon his bosom. There was nothing pertaining to the imposing ceremony of Templarism omitted on this occasion.'

"In reading of this great outward ceremonial, so calculated to impress superficial and unstable minds, it becomes thrice comforting to rest in humble hope upon the view vouchsafed to John, the beloved disciple, of the heavenly abode: 'And I saw no temple therein, for the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are temple of it. And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof.'"

HENRY LYMAN KELLOGG.

BY REV. E BLAISDELL WYLIE.

There is a beautiful custom in the Orient of placing a stone upon the monument of one who was worthy, whenever an admirer passes that way. Thus the pile is repaired and perpetuated. It has long been my tenderest wish to say a few appreciative though simple things of that quiet, faithful man of God, Henry Lyman Kellogg.

When he went home we felt that a prince in Israel had fallen. To those who knew him—and the circle is wide—these late words of mine will not be unwelcome, for what we felt then has intensified with time and we are more convinced still that he was a very remarkable character.

His choice of a life work is evidence of the estimate we place upon his character. The creation of public opinion is a noble vocation. It always precedes the accomplishment of any important movement in church or state. Pioneers in the realm of moral ideas are to be honored above explorers of dark continents. The work he chose was a service that he knew would not receive immediate applause. Some streams run deep between snow-covered banks, and shallow or not at all where the fainting pilgrim turns away and perishes. He sought to be of service where he was needed, though that service, like seed sowing, should wait partially for the time of harvest. He went forth weeping, bearing precious seed, and the joy which is inevitable upon such a course was a thing of the future—was set before him—God gave him a vision of the eternal and he endured as seeing the invisible.

The questions that engaged his heart and hand were an index of the man. The prohibition of the liquor traffic; the cause of labor against dishonest organizers and manipulators of secret orders among the workmen; the preservation of the unit of society—the family against the encroachments of Mormonism—a battle now well finished; simple apostolic church government and pure worship in spirit and in truth; and concerning the intricate system of oath-bound secret benevolent societies, he felt as Wendell Phillips did toward slavery. Though Mr. Kellogg was known by those who knew him least as a mere anti-secretist, who was both proud and glad to have so good a reputation, in the quarter of a century of his editorial life he could find no place where he could stand with decent self-respect, except in constant, uncontrollable protest against the sin and danger of secret societies.

The qualities revealed during a quarter century of anti-secret agitation are evidence of our estimate. Trying circumstances tested the man. The power of Thurlow Weed is said to have resided in a quiet, gentle and deferential bearing. Neither of these men were a pine shingle in the rapids of Niagara. That was not the kind of quiet and gentleness that characterized them. There was no yielding to the popular current of things on the part of these men.

Mr. Kellogg was a worthy successor to the reformers of former days. What on the part of his opponents would once have galled him to the quick, became a mere annoyance. His was an enlightened zeal, and his hopefulness was contagious. He did not jostle the scales which the Almighty has suspended. To him there was no twilight between the light and darkness in the world, no neutral ground between the true and the false. He vividly appreciated the unsheltered state of a man out of Christ, a man who rejected Christ, and thus annulled the atonement without which there is no remission of sins. To his view the attempted neutrality of the Christian in the order of Masonry was a denial of the Saviour. To be sure he started as a young man of better information regarding this matter than many ever become, and ultimately he constantly reiterated without a misgiving that the religion of Masonry and that of the Bible are distinctly two, and therefor one must be a delusion.

With the eye of the historian he saw that in 1717, A. D., operative Masonry turned from material architecture to moral architecture, in which the gavel takes the place of the blood of Christ, and in which there is less regard for Christ than was shown by Pilate and Herod. He made a wide difference between the fellowship of the lodge and that of Christian sanctity. It takes some men many years to get strong enough to be frank. It is safer now than it was to brave an opinion on the question of secret societies.

But Mr. Kellogg dared to be frank and to speak aloud in the presence of an audience. Being convinced himself he arose to the attempt of persuading others. They who raise the first cry are usually alone with their cause. At first a strong man, dishonored or at least unhonored by his fellows, carries the cause by the help of God, and latterly the matured cause carries forward many less worthy men and glorifies them. The subject of this article craved none of the glory. He was a most humble man, seeking the glory of his Master. Who shall say what the live force of his honest heartbeats has done toward riving the dead timber of things needing reform.

All Christian reformers since Simeon have been granted the sight of salvation before they died. There was a great deal to be done, but Simeon prayed for the fulfillment of the divine will in an immediate departure in peace. There is yet a great deal to be done, but Mr. Kellogg did not worry; he was glad to go into the peace and joy of the presence of a welcoming Saviour. He had seen Christ. He had stood up for Christ. He felt that men may come and men may go to their long home, but that Christ in his work of turning and overturning is from everlasting to everlasting. He had done nothing consciously against the truth but for the truth, and the result was as sure as the throne of God, though he lay down the conflict for the crown at the bidding of his Lord.

Following the plan not to know anything that anybody does not wish known, would make a pleasant arrangement for many vile things besides the sin of Freemasonry.

MYSTERY IN A DEATH.

CHAIRMAN OF THE IOWA DEMOCRACY SAID TO HAVE SUSTAINED FATAL INJURIES IN A LODGE-ROOM—SINGULAR STORIES TOLD.

We condense the following from the Chicago Times-Herald of Nov. 19:

DES MOINES, Iowa, Nov. 18, 1896.

A life full of romance and adventure terminated here this morning when Edward W. Curry, head of the Democratic organization in Iowa, came to an untimely end in the prime of life. The cause of his death is believed to be so unusual that it has set the city and State to talking about the Elks lodge, for it is said the initiation into this order started Mr. Curry on his journey to the grave. It had been known for some days that there was some mystery connected with his illness, but it was jealousy guarded.

The death of Mr. Curry occurred in his room in the Savory Hotel at 6 o'clock this morning. Mr. Curry died of blood-poisoning, the result of injuries received, as stated, while being initiated into the Elks lodge six weeks ago. The story told, as coming from the family, was that Mr. Curry was placed in a chair charged with electricity, and that a slight current was turned on for the purpose of frightening him and making him jump. He was not tied, and was free to get out if he wanted to do so; but Mr. Curry had the reputation of being a plucky man, and he did not jump, so the current was increased, with the result that his flesh was badly scorched. He was taken to his room in the hotel, where physicians were summoned, and he had been under constant treatment since. A week or ten days ago blood-poisoning set in and nothing could be done to save him. One of the most prominent members of the lodge, who was present at the initiation, said: "Of course there is a great deal of funny business and horse-play about the Elks' initiation, and when a man goes in with the idea of fighting and does not do as he is told he may take some chances in getting hurt." The Elks are very reticent in speaking of the case. They say that if Mr. Curry had been properly treated at the beginning of his illness he would have soon recovered.

Mr. Curry was a thirty-second degree Mason, a Shriner and Odd-fellow and also belonged to the Knights of Pythias, so this was not his first experience in being initiated into a secret society. One member of the Elks lodge said when he heard of the affair, that there was too much horse-play in the Elks' initiation anyway, and that if the boys here had brought in any innovation to make it still worse they would have trouble with the Grand Lodge. The Elks are all very much troubled over the affair, and have done their best to relieve the suffering of Mrs. Curry and her daughter. The daughter arrived too late to be recognized by her father.

Mr. Curry was one of the best criminal lawyers in the State, his practice extending into the adjoining States. His pride was his elaborate suite of offices and his law library, both conceded to be the finest and best in the State of Iowa. The law offices of Curry & McGinnis were the pride of the bar of southern Iowa. Although one of the most active politicians in the State and a speaker of great ability, Mr. Curry never had a political office, although frequently urged by his friends to run for Congress and other offices. He leaves a widow and one grown daughter, Mrs. J. W. Rowell. His body will arrive at Leon to-morrow, and lay in state at his law offices. The funeral will be held Friday.

Mr. Curry was born July 25, 1848, at Elkhart, Ind., and removed to Decatur county in 1853. Until he was fourteen years of age he lived and worked on a farm. When the war broke out, boy as he was, he enlisted as a private in Company L, Third Iowa Volunteer cavalry, and served until peace was restored. During the fighting he was under the command of Colonel Bussy, Colonel H. Clay Caldwell, who is now United States Judge, and Gen. John W. Noble, secretary of the interior under President Harrison. He traveled with Grearson and Wilson in their celebrated raids throughout the South, and on Aug. 25, 1865, he was discharged. On returning to his home in Decatur county Mr. Curry, then grown up to manhood, began to study. He went to a school and remained with his books for three years, and then he took up law. His education in the law was received at the University of Iowa's law school, at Iowa City, and 1869 he was graduated. He at once began the practice of law at Leon, and has resided there ever since.

The order of Elks was organized in New York, Feb. 16, 1868, by a few convivial spirits, mostly theatrical men. At that time the excise law was very strict in New York, as it is at present, and a number of the theatrical performers used to meet in a room next door to Tony Pastor's Theater, on the Bowery, Sabbath afternoons, and drink beer, eat sandwiches and tell stories. Charley Vivian, an English clergyman, was in America then and was quite popular. He suggested forming a secret society, and told of a similar organization in England, known as the Order of Buffaloes. The suggestion was approved and the society was formed. The name, Order of Buffaloes, was proposed, but the members decided to give the order a distinctly American name, so it was called the Benevolent Protective Order of Elks. That was in the old stock company days, and the membership was at first confined almost exclusively to theatrical men. But when stock companies were abandoned the doors of the order were thrown open to men in other professions, and we now have on our rolls the names of some of the best-known lawyers and business men in the country. The original ritual was written by George W. Thompson, and it has not been changed materially since it was adopted.

REFORM NEWS.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE CONVENTION.

MUCH HARMONY AND DEEP INTEREST.

ON TRAIN, NOV. 12, 1896.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—If the saying "What everybody says is true," be true, then we can report the Pennsylvania State Convention a success. From the opening prayer to the final farewell as the friends separated, resolved with God's help to be more faithful in proclaiming the truth, there was not a discordant note. All had come with one purpose, and that we all believe was accomplished.

THE GLORY OF GOD AND THE EXTENSION OF HIS KINGDOM.

The pleasant weather, the cordial welcome, the beautiful surroundings, together with the Divine Presence induced by fervent effectual prayer, all ministered to this end.

Even the poor, misguided Freemason, editor of a newspaper, helped by his questions and confessions. We hope he may give his heart to Christ and get his eyes open so he can see himself as others saw him, when he admitted before the convention that he had passed through the ceremonies portrayed by my father as necessary to his initiation. After having admitted that he had been a poor denuded, deluded, blindfolded, blasphemous swearer, he remarked that he had seen nothing wrong in Masonry; should he discover anything wrong in this institution he would feel free to publish it in his paper. His spy-glass for wrong had evidently been turned toward the churches. He had there discovered much that was not right.

were prepared and delivered in a spirit and manner that must carry conviction.

THE ATTENDANCE

was good, while not all that I had hoped, yet all I could have reasonably expected under the circumstances. The church, which is large, was full at the night sessions. Unusually large sessions were held during the day. There were other conventions, revivals, funerals, weddings, etc., going on near at hand. Notwithstanding all the hinderances I believe had some of the friends who were not with us known what a splendid time we were having, they would have made great effort to have reached the meeting. We are not so lonesome as we used to be. The interest is growing. Such a convention would have been a great surprise a few years back, but we look for nothing else now.

THE CONVENTION LETTERS

showed a live interest in other parts of the State. Some neglected duty by not reporting by letter. We hope they will feel sorry that they did not help along, and do better next time. I have mailed the convention letters to the Cynosure editor and he will select for publication as space shall permit.

THE COLLECTIONS

amounted to nearly seventy dollars. After meeting the convention expense there was a small balance for the State work.

It was full of entertainment. The carriages were at the trains. The tables were loaded with good things. The ladies smiled as they waited on the crowds. Bro. Myers was about seeing that the horses were fed and that each received "their meat in due season." The spiritual power was very manifest. Brethren took different views of the civil oath. These views were frankly expressed, yet there was no strife. Raised in different churches, surrounded by different influences, trained in different schools, yet one in Christ, one in opposition to the secret empire! Oh, is there anything can there be anything that will bring together like the Holy Spirit? Compared with fellowship and love divine, the lodge revelries and banquets sink into utter contempt.

THE SECRETARY'S REPORT

will reach you in due season together with some of the addresses. It was apparent we had a strong man as chairman of the Resolution Committee. We hope to put into practice some of the suggestions of this gathering in the further prosecution of the work in the State. With praise for God's mercies in the past, looking with expectation to the future, I remain for Christ and reform,

W. B. STODDARD.

FROM REV. J. P. STODDARD.

PHILADELPHIA, DEPOT, Nov. 20, 1896.

Very few conventions held in the interests of anti-secrecy have been more harmonious in spirit, satisfactory in management, and prophetic of lasting benefit than that closed at Oaks last evening. The weather was superb. The welcome and hospitality was unbounded. The attendance day and evenings was good, and the addresses were characterized by both thoroughness and sweetness, and were delivered without that "fear of man which bringeth a snare." Plans and resolutions adopted betoken a vigorous, aggressive, onward movement under the guidance of the Holy Spirit and in wisdom gathered from past experiences.

By request of the convention you will be furnished by each speaker with a synopsis of his address, and the efficient secretary will send you the general items of interest for publication. I shall ever recall this gathering as a time of refreshing, and hold in grateful remembrance the kindness of the many friends who have made me their debtor.

I was obliged to decline cordial invitations to speak in neighboring parishes, in order to return to Boston and push forward the necessary preparation for the New England annual meeting, Dec. 1st and 2d. If friends in New England will show an interest equal to that of our brethren in the "Keystone" State, with God's blessing we shall have a glorious victory. The cause is worthy of the sacrifice. Who will be there to answer at roll call Dec. 1st?

JAMES P. STODDARD

IOWA STATE CONVENTION.

104 MILTON AVE., CHICAGO, Nov. 20, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Doubtless the anti-secret convention held last week by the Pennsylvania Association was both profitable and interesting to all in attendance, but I venture the assertion that it was not more profitable or more interesting than was the Iowa Convention held at New Sharon on the 17th and 18th inst.

The convention met at the Friends' church at 2:30 P. M. on Tuesday, and was called to order by Rev. T. P. Robb, the able president of the Iowa Anti-secret Association, and what is not very often seen at similar gatherings, quite a respectably large audience was in attendance. According to program, the address of welcome was delivered by Friend Pemberton, pastor of the church, in an able manner, and in every sentence of which the Lord Jesus was lifted up and his salvation alone set forth as the only remedy which God has provided for all the sin and misery and ruin of our race.

This address was replied to by President Robb in behalf of the Iowa Association and in the name of all the anti-secret Christian men and women of Iowa, and, like that of Bro. Pemberton, breathed the warmest love and the kindliest feeling for those with whom he differed on the anti-secret question while he exalted Jesus in a truly apostolic manner, and set him forth as the "only name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." Acts 4: 12. All realized that the Spirit of God was there, as indeed he was, and of course a convention thus begun could not fail to be a grand success. From beginning to end a deeply earnest Christian spirit was manifested, which carried conviction to all those who attended, while the very able addresses of Rev. W. L. Ferris, of Cherokee, and of our dear brother, Dr. Samuel H. Swarts, of Morris, Ill., could not fail to impress all who heard them with the truth of what was said, and their words will, I am sure, linger long and lovingly in the memory of us all. I was glad to be there, and thankful I went, and pleased above all with the opportunity it afforded me to speak a little word for Jesus.

On Thursday I had a Bible reading almost all day at the home of Bro. McDonough where I lodged, and one or two with other families, and at night I was permitted to accompany Bro. McDonough to the prayer meeting at the Methodist church where, at the request of Rev. Mr. Harris, the pastor, I was privileged to make a few remarks. I was more than pleased with the opportunity thus afforded me to have these Bible talks, and I was delighted to see how eagerly those dear Christian friends received and rejoiced in the truth. Pity we cannot have less of sermons and more of Bible readings in these closing days of the age before Jesus comes; they would do more, I am sure, to separate God's people to himself than anything else. E. RONAYNE.

TIME FOR THE CHURCH TO WAKE UP.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST AGENT.

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 14, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since my last letter I have been very busy, among other things trying to arrange a list of appointments here in Oregon, near the city, which I could run out and fill during our revival services here in our home church, and be in the meeting a part of the time and help, where help is so much needed.

One brother writes: "I handed your request to the church trustees. They think it would not be advisable for you to lecture here on secret societies. The beast is sleeping nicely, and the church prefers to let him slumber on. (He might have truthfully added, the church is, too.) The halls are in the hands of the lodgemen, and it seems doubtful about your getting a place to speak."

Another brother writes: "Sickness in my family prevents me from making an appointment for you at present." Another writes: "Our church is not completed and cannot be till I get my check for pension; then we will have a place which will always be free for the N. C. A. lecturers without any asking of lodgemen or lodge-ridden churches."

Still another writes: "We have had sermons and lectures on the secret society evil in the past, and the lines are drawn between us and the whole lodge power sharply. We stand alone of all the churches here, and it is a question whether we have not about all the devils stirred up that we can cast out." God bless all these dear brethren and give them great courage and success. My recent correspondence has been a means of the distribution of a large number of tracts through parties I know are interested in the dissemination of the truth.

I have also done something in the way of securing Lodge Lamp subscriptions. I have obtained about forty subscribers the past week. It ought to have been many times that number.

Last Sabbath evening I was at Oregon City. There was a union meeting in the Presbyterian and Congregational churches. At the Presbyterian, Rev. Holdrige, of Portland, preached. He gave the Gospel trumpet no uncertain sound. His subject was "Holy Ghost power." In stating what must be forsaken to have this power, he may as well have mentioned secret societies as to say "everything tinctured with Christ's rejection must be forsaken." I predict that the Holy Ghost will stir the city through such preaching

On Monday I took the morning train and ran up to Canby. I spent most of the day in the company of those dear saints of God, Father and Mother Mathew. We talked over the past, and with confidence and blessed hope we spoke of the future. With these dear ones the conflict will soon be over, the race run, the crown won. As we bowed together in prayer, we came near the throne and felt the divine touch, and could imagine we heard the rumbling of the chariot wheels and the rustle of angels' wings coming to carry them home. We felt that it may be the last time we shall ever meet on earth, but we hope to meet them in heaven.

We took the evening train and ran on to Woodburn, to call on Rev. Dr. Barkley and wife, who are watching hourly at the bedside of Sister B.'s sister, Mrs. Morse, who has been with them all the time of Mrs. Barkley's long illness. Now the sister has been stricken down with typhoid-pneumonia, and for days and nights has been lingering between life and death. We are breathing a prayer constantly that she may be spared. She had arranged to start to her home in Ohio this week; but this shows how uncertain are human affairs.

The meeting here opens with some interest under the leadership of Rev. W. W. Gregory, tent evangelist. We are fortunately blest with the noble assistance of Revs H. and P. C. Hinman, who arrived from North Michigan last Sabbath. It is storming so they cannot get to their field of Coos Circuit, and will tarry awhile with us. We welcome them to Oregon and the Coast as true servants of the Most High, and hope they will have abundant success. P. B. WILLIAMS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

WM. J. CONNERY, STERLING, KAN,—The lodges seem to be increasing, and there is but very little opposition manifested to them. Those who are really opposed to them seem to be sleeping soundly. Oh, that they might be awakened to a sense of their duty and of the danger of these wicked organizations. I have been trying to get some subscribers to the Cynosure, but have only succeeded in getting four three-month subscribers yet. I think I can get one or two more before I mail this. The people here feel the hard times at present, on account of partial failure of crops and the extremely low prices of what we have to sell, and but few are willing to make much sacrifice for this cause.

CHARLES E. MALMSTROM, MAPLETON, UTAH CO., UTAH.—Long before I knew of any anti-secret papers I used to speak against secret societies, Masonry in particular. The Mormon "Endowments" are only Masonry a little changed, which is nothing more than ancient sun or Baal worship, or rather the priesthood of that worship. I have it from a Catholic priest that "Freemasonry is the true order of the priesthood, and all we have against it is that it is secret." So here we have the devil's trinity, viz., in the Catholic church we have the Jesuits, who are to do the killing of persons who are heretics, etc. In Masonry, the "Master Elect of Nine" and "Master Elect of Fifteen." In Mormonism we have the "Destroying Angels" or "Danites." I am and have been one with you on anti-secrecy since 1878.

H. M. HUGUNIN, 491 WEST MADISON ST., CHICAGO.—As I understand the situation in Turkey, a coalition of recent formation exists between Russia, France and Germany, ostensibly to "regulate" the government of the Sultan. The effect has been to quiet the public excitement over the Armenian massacres, and now we have the predicted cry of "safety, safety," reiterated among these and other nations, and a growing indifference as to Turkish affairs. In the governments I have named are represented "three unclean spirits like frogs," anarchy, socialism (ruled by despotism) and infidelity, which trio may serve to "deceive" the outside nations, while Russia, the greatest of all, is, in my opinion, playing the part of protector of Turkey until the time shall come when she can suddenly swoop down upon the Sultan's empire with her tremendous armament, capture his seaports and strongholds, subdue the Turkish government and confiscate its territory before the other sleepy powers of Europe are aware of his treachery.

I may be wrong in this estimate of the situation, but I do not believe I am. When Russia has thus absorbed the Empire of Turkey, of course Palestine will fall into her hands also, and then, and not till then, do I look for the fulfillment of the prophecy recorded in Rev. 16: 10 16. "Armageddon," as I understand it, is in Palestine, where the enemies of Russia will gather to prevent her advance into India, opening up the way for the kings of the East, and where the Lord will destroy the Russian army with his tremendous hailstones. (Ezek. 38.) The "drying up of the Euphrates" has been going on for more than two centuries, and you or I, or both of us, may live to see the complete destruction that will end it. It was going on in Cotton Mather's time, and the bottom of the river must soon be reached.

CARING FOR SUFFERING ARMENIANS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 18, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Washingtonians had three opportunities last Sabbath to see and hear Consul Mrs. Booth-Tucker, daughter of the founder and commander of the Salvation Army, and wife of the head of the American branch, and they took advantage of them to the full seating capacity of Foundry M. E. church, where morning and afternoon meetings were held, and of Calvary Baptist church, where an afternoon meeting was held. This was Mrs. Booth-Tucker's first visit to Washington, as an accident prevented her accompanying her husband when he came here last summer, and this visit was made while she was en route for St. Louis, to make an address to the W. C. T. U. convention. Mrs. Booth-Tucker spoke at all three meetings and made a very favorable impression, which resulted in an increase in the membership of the Salvation Army Auxiliary Association.

Speaking of the newest project of the Salvation Army—taking care of the Armenian refugees—she said: "The army has provided shelter and found work in Europe for 3,000 of these unfortunate people. Only 150 came to this country a fortnight since, brought here through the noble efforts of Miss Frances Willard. Our army has set its great machinery to work to assort them, and they will be scattered throughout the States, and not placed in settlements. We gave them temporary shelter at our farm in Ramsey, N. J. Already seventy-five of them have been swallowed up by New England, the W. C. T. U. operating with us to get them work. They are not paupers in character, only in circumstances, and they will soon get upon their feet, for they are willing to do anything. They are a people to awaken the compassion of nations. They tell of horrors that would almost seem great enough to drive away sleep forever. We are not going to make a dumping ground of this country for them, because they are not that order of immigrants. They are destined to become the best sort of American citizens."

Mrs. Booth-Tucker was anxious to meet Mrs. Cleveland and called at the White House for that purpose, but a social engagement on the one hand, and an inexorable railway schedule on the other, prevented. However, she expressed an intention to come to Washington again soon.

Dr. Talmage, in giving notice to his congregation that he would preach a special sermon on Thanksgiving day, took occasion to pay a deserved compliment by saying: "You have noticed the unique and beautiful proclamation of our President, who is the only man in that high office who has ever recognized our divine Saviour in a public document. Christ is most worshipfully recognized in this proclamation of thanksgiving." C. A. S.

ELDER RUFUS SMITH'S MESSAGE.

TO BOTH FRIENDS AND STRANGERS.

WHEATON, Ill., Nov. 18, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—You want your readers to see my picture, but it will do them more good to hear me. Neither you nor they may quite understand why I should all these long years stand alone with Jesus. In few words I will explain how this change was brought about. In Acts 10:12 we read how God used a vision of wild beasts to help Peter to see his duty, but God used a bold infidel to help me to see mine.

In Iowa, some thirty years ago, I was preaching to an audience largely composed of infidels. I had promised to answer any questions they might ask or own defeat. A bold unbeliever came forward and defiantly asked me two questions.

1. "How many churches has your God got?" I replied, "ONE, SIR."

2. "Which one of all the churches is your God's church?"

I replied, "Not any one of the denominations, but all Christians in and out of them all constitute Christ's church."

He replied: "Your head is level; why don't you preach and practice that doctrine?"

Quicker than Peter, I saw the light and resolved to practice the theory of the one church.

I said, "Mr. Myres I have always preached it, and by God's help from this moment I will practice it." With a soul filled with great joy and eyes with tears I said to the infidel, "Will you not now come to Jesus?"

He said, weeping, "Mr. Smith, if you preach and practice that doctrine I am a dead infidel."

The news spread and the hall was full that night. When I told all classes how dear my synod was to me, and how much of friendship and support I had to give up in dropping my denominational name, but how willing I was to do it, and how much more I seemed to love my old Lutheran brethren and all saints, and how the prayer of Jesus in John 17: 21-23, "That they all may be one," etc., was answered in my case, the melting power of God seemed to fall on the entire congregation, and many infidels in the house cried to God for mercy. Such a manifestation of God's saving power I never saw before.

Now as I think of the past as well as of the great conflict just before us, I am comforted to think of the thirty years full time I have put in for Jesus in his own church where he placed me first. In the words of Paul, 1 Cor. 12: 18: "But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body as it hath pleased him;" verse 20. "But now they are many members, yet but one body."

I am thankful to God that in his blessed household of faith I have had every want supplied. Some have asked me to join the secret lodge, but never a moment or a cent have I spent in a lodge. I was saved from this snare and delusion by such warnings as God gives us in Isa. 55: 2; Psalm 1; Gal. 5: 1, and 2 Cor. 6: 14. I want to say to my friends, take and read the Cynosure and they will know the evil power of the secret lodge.

The thought that gladdens my heart these dark days is the great satisfaction I have in knowing of a truth that if all the ministers and priests in the United States had done for our vast country simply what I have done for the last half century, there would not be now one saloon in the land. And if all who claim to belong to the church will do for four years from this 18th day of November, 1896, just what I hope by God's help to do in many States, indoors and out, in the pulpit and out of it, at the polls and on the street, on land and water, during winter and summer, in revivals and out of them—I say if all will work as I expect to work for the destruction of the strong drink curse, in four years from to-day this old fiend from hell will be so crippled in all departments of his work of ruin and death, that in eight years from to-day we will bury him at Washington with his face downward, so that if he undertakes to dig out and pick some flaw in the proceedings, the longer he digs the deeper down he will go. And if he should reach silver or gold, it would be in bad shape for him to hide behind as he has done during the late campaign. Then at the close of the funeral of this hell-born institution I will be ready with good old Simeon to say, having seen thy salvation dear Lord, now let thy servant depart in peace. RUFUS SMITH.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

EIGHTH LETTER.

[This letter by strange oversight was misplaced. It should have preceded the one in last week's issue.—EDITOR.]

BLANCHARD, Ia., Nov. 11, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We will let these suits rest awhile because, although they were entered in August, they did not come off until October. It is evident now that they were entered as a blind to more bold acts that were in contemplation. The druggist did not own the building in which he had his drug store, and contrary to the owner's orders he had built a wooden shanty on the back end, and in this he kept his oils, gasoline and some of his paints. He had his stock of goods fully insured.

If a fire had occurred and burned up his whole stock he would have been safe. But his losses had been great, and he must make something to recover himself. His situation was desperate, and he thought it justified desperate means. The last talk I had with him he admitted that he was influenced, in part at least, by motives of revenge. To one of our best women, who went to him and pleaded with him in the most earnest and tender manner to turn from his maddened course, in the interest of his own soul's salvation, he said "he could take care of his own soul's salvation, but he wouldn't cease from his course."

Amid all the virtues that you have heard lodgemen boasting that the lodge teaches, did you ever hear them claim that the lodge subdued the spirit of jealousy and revenge? I never did. I know on the other hand that it cultivates this spirit. And I want to say right here, that any institution that does not tend to subdue the spirit of jealousy and revenge, can never elevate society. And we want to say in brief that the principles of Jesus Christ are the only principles that the world has ever known or ever can know that will subdue the spirit of jealousy and revenge; hence the principles of Jesus Christ ought to be enthroned in the heart, the home, the state, the church and everywhere; and when these principles are thus enthroned, the secret lodge, which is the hotbed of jealousy and revenge, will forever cease.

Men trained in secret lodges know how to carry on underhanded work. While the attention of the good people was directed toward the suits that had been entered, the stock of goods began to grow less in the drug store, but it was so gradual that it might have been accounted for by legitimate sales; but by and by it was observed by some that the druggist's father's family and some of his friends were very heavy purchasers; at least they went home very heavy ladened almost every evening; and a few who happened to be up late at night noticed loaded wagons moving away from the back of the drug store; and in one instance a wagon was seen backed up to the drug store and receiving its load. Two wagon loads were confessed by the druggist to have been taken away, but he claimed that they were simply his unsold whiskys. But why haul them away at night? Well, he said he was afraid the officers would seize them. But there is some evidence for three more wagon loads.

By and by the druggist's father, who was a dentist, found that his part in the saloon business had not helped his trade or the social standing of his family, and he resolved to move to Omaha; and when his goods were hauled to the train it was the wonder of many where they all came from. The majority of those goods have not made their appearance since. The suspicion is that they are in the hands of lodgemen. Some day they may tell a wondrous tale.

The business at the drug store resembled an auction sale. As the stock grew less the goods went cheaper and faster, but appearances were pretty well kept up by a few showy goods well arranged in front, and time swept on to the final scene, which we must reserve for our next letter.

MASONRY IN TURKEY.

PRINCETON, Ind., Nov. 12, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. R. J. Dodds, our missionary from Mersine, Turkey, assisted at our communion here on last Sabbath, Nov. 8. He also gave us two lectures, one on Monday evening relating to the Armenian massacres, and on Tuesday evening about the Reformed Presbyterian mission in Turkey.

In one of his lectures he spoke of the Turks being Freemasons, from the Sultan on down. So that is the company Freemasons are in, because, as Mr. Dodds said, a New York or London Mason is recognized as such in Turkey. Mr. Dodds also told us about meeting a Mason in Turkey and giving him the Masonic grip which he had learned from an Anti-masonic tract before he went to Turkey. The man said:

"I didn't know that you were a Mason." To which Mr. Dodds replied:

"What makes you think now that I am?" The man then sobered up and asked earnestly:

"Tell me, are you a Mason?" At which Mr. Dodds laughed and the Mason saw his mistake. This proves that the Anti-masons know something about Masonry.

Cannot you come to Princeton some time soon and give us some lectures? We would be so glad to see you again. Our congregation is doing well. On fast day of our communion James Latham was ordained an elder and Wm. Brim a deacon. Rev. Dodds gave us splendid preaching.

STUDIES ON PROPHECY.

STERLING, Kan., Nov. 16, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After studying the book of Revelation more carefully I have come to the conclusion that the first four seals represent systems rather than events. The first represents Christianity and Christ. The second, Mahometanism and Mahomet. The third, popery and the Pope. The fourth, infidelity and all practical denial of God in government, such as secularism, etc.; or; as Dr. Nevin terms it, "Religious negationism." But I cannot agree with Dr. Nevin in regard to the other three seals; and here, in my humble opinion, is where he makes his great mistake.

I now understand the fifth seal to represent the martyrs slain under the old Roman empire, and those who were to be "slain as they were," to be those who were to be slain under the papal Roman empire. The sixth seal I understand to represent the revolution by which the old Roman empire was overthrown, A. D. 376. This was the "deadly wound" given to "the beast" which was afterward healed. In it we have first the effects of that revolution (or earthquake) on the church. The church, represented by the symbol of "the sun," became black as "sackcloth of hair." "And the moon"—the ordinances of the church—"became as blood;" entirely corrupted. "And the stars"—the ministry of the church—fell unto the earth. Fell from their high position of true ministers of Christ and became identified with the ungodly, anti-Christian civil empire. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together, etc. The figure used here is of one reading in a scroll, the form of books then used, and being suddenly alarmed by the sound of war or called to arms, he hastily rolls up the scroll and lays it away in a safe place.

Thus the true church almost disappeared at that time, but was hidden in the hollow of God's hand. The same event is, I think, symbolized by the silence in heaven, the church, about the space of half an hour; that is, silence in regard to giving testimony. Then the effects which that earthquake or revolution had upon the civil empire are described in the remaining verses of that chapter. Then just here naturally comes in an account of the sealing of the witnesses, chap 7: 2 8; and then in the remaining verses of that chapter an account of the legitimate successors of the witnesses in the millennial period.

The opening of the seventh seal discloses the "trumpets," and these I think follow much the same order as the first four seals, only representing these wicked systems in active operation, the effects produced by them, etc.; and then in the seven "vials" or "bowls" of God's wrath, the judgments poured out upon them by which they are at last utterly destroyed. I have thus endeavored very briefly and imperfectly to give you an outline of my understanding of this wonderful part of the prophecy or revelation.

After studying with much interest Mr. Hinman's article on the "Two-horned Beast," I am inclined to hold to the old interpretation—that it represents the papacy—the two horns, the civil and ecclesiastical power. The civil empire is represented by the seven-headed and ten-horned beast. These two are here in this scene represented side by side as a team yoked together. In the seventeenth chapter another phase of these wicked powers is presented to our view. The beast is there represented as supporting and carrying the woman, the papacy, and she guiding and controlling the beast.

HOW TO STAIN.

Furniture Tints of All Colors Now Fashionable.

Formerly stains were confined to the colors nearly resembling natural woods, but of late all colors are used.

The most fashionable stain at present for furniture is green—not a sage green, but a good, old fashioned regular green—which, when rubbed well into the pores of the wood and then polished, is really beautiful. The two transparent colors, prussian blue and raw sienna, make, when mixed together, an excellent green, or if a brighter tint is desired gamboge and prussian blue. A very little of the latter goes a great way. In staining it should be borne in mind that it is not paint, but stain, and that a very little should be used, a pound being sufficient to stain a whole set of furniture.

To get a good color the wood must be light. Oak, yellow or white pine, maple, any of these is suitable, and the more grained the better, the moire effect of birdseye maple, the heavy markings of oak and the picturesque knot so often seen in yellow pine all coming out particularly well through the translucent color.

By sending a special order to the manufacturers it is easy to get sets of furniture without paint or varnish, but if it is an old piece that is to be renovated it must be thoroughly scraped. After staining, a coat of hard oil finish may be applied as a filler, and then, after it is dry, it should be rubbed all over with the prepared beeswax that comes in cans for floors and then rubbed with a flannel cloth until it is quite shiny and bright. After the wax is rubbed on it should be allowed to harden before polishing it. Prussian blue alone makes a very pretty peacock blue stain, raw sienna a yellow or orange, according to the amount of color used, crimson lake a lovely red, and burned sienna an almost exact imitation of new mahogany. All these are what are called transparent colors and are, therefore, especially adapted for stains. But even opaque colors, if put on thin enough to show the grain of the wood, produce sometimes very pretty effects. White on certain woods has a milky, opalesque coloring that is very harmonious with delicate chintzes.

How to Make a Cozy Corner.

A cozy corner can be easily devised from a couch, a few cushions and several yards of Chinese crape. You must first find the couch, but this is not difficult. A couple of boxes nailed together and cushioned with a "cut down" mattress or pieces of carpet padded with curled hair and covered with chintz or denim will make a most acceptable one.

How Fractional Currency Came Into Use.

In 1862 small silver change was very scarce, and people could not find a medium of exchange for small transactions. Change had to be taken in groceries, vegetables, etc. General Spinner, treasurer of the United States, was appealed to for change. There was no law under which he could produce small currency, so he ordered a large quantity of postage stamps, pasting them on different sized pieces of paper to represent different amounts. This was dubbed "postal currency." From this General Spinner got his idea of fractional currency and applied to congress for the right to make it. The facsimile of postage stamps was put on each piece of currency, and for a long time it was known as "postal currency."

How to Cure Scalds.

Take a camel's hair brush; wash the wound carefully with lukewarm water every day. Wipe brush dry, then dip in linseed oil. Cover the wound with oil. Scrape whiting on same. Bandage carefully. This has cured the worst of scalds without leaving any mark.

How Vegetable Ivory Is Produced.

Vegetable ivory is the seed (corozo nut) of the Phytelephas macrocarpa, one of the most beautiful of the many palms which grow in South America. In the heart of its tall and graceful plume of light green leaves are found 6 or 8 heads of fruit, called by the natives "negro heads," each of which weighs from 20 to 25 pounds and holds many triangular nuts. These seeds or nuts contain at first a milky fluid which gradually becomes so hard as to make it a valuable substance for ivory in the manufacture of knobs, buttons, etc.

How to Make Anchovy Butter.

Clean and bone 6 anchovies and beat them well in a mortar; add 2 ounces of butter, mix well and pass through a wire sieve. Serve on pieces of buttered toast.

How to Make Piccalilli.

Strew salt on a peck of green tomatoes and let remain overnight, then turn off the brine and add a cup horse radish, 2 cups sugar, a teaspoonful cinnamon, a teaspoonful of black pepper, a tablespoonful whole cloves, 6 sliced onions, 6 bell green peppers and vinegar to cover the whole. Chop horse radish and peppers together, slice onions and tomatoes, mix all together and boil 30 minutes.

How the Mohammedan Year Corresponds With Ours.

The Mohammedan year, as a lunar year, is shorter than ours by 10 days, 21 hours and 14 2-5 seconds. This renders an exact transfer of Mohammedan dates into dates of our own calendar a very difficult task. One calculation, which is easy and almost accurate, is to deduct 3 per cent from the given Mohammedan year and to add 622 to the sun thus obtained—e. g., our year 1862 A. D. corresponded to 1279 of the Hegira. If from this we deduct 3 per cent, or about 39, and add 622 to the result, we have the number 1862.

GOSPEL MISSION CONFERENCE.

We enjoyed the privilege last Friday of attending the second day's sessions of the National Gospel Mission Union, at the First Congregational church. Representatives of missions who spoke in the morning included Rev. A. C. Peck, of Denver, B. M. Shawhah, of Kansas City, Eugenia Gibson, of Albany, Mrs. E. S. Curtis, of St. Louis and Messrs. Bruen, Monroe and Bailey, of Chicago. Rev. A. C. Peck addressed the noon meeting at Willard Hall, which was conducted by Robert J. Reed, Dean A. C. Peck, of Denver, Colo., making the address. In the afternoon addresses were made by Mrs. Clark, on "The Pacific Garden Mission of Chicago;" by Robert J. Reed, on "Chicago's Mission Field," and by Stephen Merritt on "The Travelers' Club" of New York City. Rev. E. D. Bailey of Washington, D. C., and Rev. Dr. H. H. George, of Beaver Falls, Pa., secretary of the National Reform Association, also spoke. In the evening at the closing session Mrs. E, M. Whittemore spoke on "Praise, Promise, Prayer," and Rev. E. D. Bailey on "Possibilities and Need of the Work."

We have not for years seen audiences so stirred as were those at Willard Hall on Thursday noon, and at the Y. M. C. A. on Friday noon by the addresses of Stephen Merritt. His one theme is "Be filled with the Spirit."

VICTIMS OF A KU KLUX CLAN.

The Philadelphia Record contains the following dispatch from Susquehanna, Pa., dated Nov. 5th:

Mr. Andrew and his son, Frank, have for the past twenty years been engaged in the meat and farming business in Oakland, Pa. About two weeks ago their barn, containing two teams of valuable horses, a cow, wagon, grain, hay, etc., was set on fire and burned with all its contents. It was thought by some to be the work of tramps. Yesterday Rev. Mr. Cochrane, who rents one of Andrew & Son's houses, received through the postoffice at this place the following letter:

"The Rev. Mr. Cockran. Take notice. This is to notify you to get out of that house as soon as possible, as it is a marked one; the extension now is that it will be fired some time this next moon, and as we don't want to do you any harm we notify you to move out. Vengence."

The same night the following notice was posted on the wagon bridge between this place and Oakland:

"Notice to all concerned. All ye that buy meet from Anson Andrew & Son, or cider or wrent houses, be prepared to meet thy God, as all meet and cider will be pisened and the houses will be sot fire to as fast as possible. This is put up for the good of the people, and we hope that they will take warning, as this notice is given by the sworn six we have put our marks in blud."

Both communications were signed with six crosses.

STRONG EFFORTS TO CONCEAL.

THE CAUSE OF E. W. CURRY'S DEATH.

It is evident that the lodges have used every means to conceal the real cause of Lawyer Curry's death at Des Moines, Nov. 18. The Philadelphia Record of the 19th thus describes the awful circumstances attending his death:

"Mr. Curry had not been in very robust health, but as he had been through a number of other secret orders he decided to be 'game.' As part of the ceromony he was blindfolded and placed on a chair with an iron seat. Then a lighted lamp was placed under the seat with the expectation that when it got too hot he would jump. But he sat still until he was badly burned. His trousers were burned away, and the flesh was fearfully scorched. He was put in new clothes, and did not realize at the time that the injuries were serious. In a few days blood-poisoning set in, and he grew worse steadily. It was his desire that the real cause of his injuries should not be made public, and another cause was assigned for the illness, the truth only becoming public to-day. Members of the Elks Lodge are frantic over the affair, and say that Mr. Curry would not have been injured if he had not been so 'game.' He was determined to go through the initiation without flinching. The Elks have spent money freely in an effort to save the chairman's life, but without avail."

A Pittsburg daily gives this version of the sad affair: "The story told this morning, as coming from the family, was that Mr. Curry was placed in a chair charged with electricity, and that a slight current was turned on for the purpose of frightening him and making him jump out of the chair. He was not tied in, and was free to get out if he wanted to; but Curry had the reputation of being a gamey man and he did not jump, so the current was increased. Finding that still it did not budge him, the person in charge again increased the strength of the charge and left it turned on. Seeing smoke emerge from the seat of the chair, Mr. Curry was pulled out and it was discovered that his garments were burned and his flesh badly scorched. He was taken to his room in the hotel, where physicians were summoned. A week or ten days ago blood-poisoning set in and nothing could be done to save him. It was given out, at Mr. Curry's request, that his trouble was of long standing, and this was the story generally accepted this morning."

WORDS OF WARNING.

The most thoughtful students of history will admit that the French Revolution was a revolt of the masses against the oppression of an aristocracy of wealth and false religion. It is true the leaders of the revolt were Freemasons, whose purpose was to establish a despotic government upon the ruins of the empire. We believe that republican government is the highest and best form, and was that which God preferred and gave to his chosen nation, Israel. Garfield defined it as, "Government from God and through the people." We should jealously guard against any danger threatening our republican form of government. The following warning recently uttered by Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier Journal, is, we believe, important and timely:

"If human experience goes for anything, and is even to count for much, the world ought to be wiser for the lessons it has had. I am afraid, however, that organized wealth and power have not yet grown wise enough to scent danger before it is upon them. The Eastern section of our country is already in danger. I have an impression that it does not see this. Yet it might, with profit to itself and to us all, read a chapter out of our own history and take a hint in time from the experience of the South.

"The institution of African slavery was thought to confer great benefits upon its possessors. It produced in the South distinct caste. Recognized by the Constitution, property in man came to take on a kind of divine right, and at last its supporters went to war to defend it. Nothing should have been clearer than that war was the best way to destroy it. England had got rid of slavery in her colonies. Russia had extinguished serfdom. Brazil was preparing to emancipate her slaves. Everywhere except in the Southern States of the American Union the world was set against slavery. To cling with tenacity to such an untenable, and, as time has since revealed, to so profitless a system of labor—to say nothing about morals—was singularly short-sighted in the public men of the South; but to take the field in its behalf, and against such odds, seems inconceivable from the standpoint of rational statesmanship. But the South did it, and dearly paid the consequences.

"Let the East take to itself the lesson of the South. In its concentration of the wealth of the country and in its ostentatious display of its wealth, in the gradual cultivation of caste, in the tendency to hug its vast riches and in the finding of means to keep its millions at home, let it behold a danger it will do well to consider in the light of both ancient and modern history. And if it has any real statesmen they cannot put their genius and resources to better uses than by the construction of policies, which will bring them alliances and make them friends—policies wide and broad, justifying in some measure the unlimited accumulations they have been able to pile up in such a relatively short compass of time.

"Those accretions not only serve to breed corruption among themselves, but they unite against the simple rights of property all the forces of cupidity and rapine, operating on agrarian and sectional lines. States have been saved before now by timely forecast. Only pride, the pride of wealth and caste, will keep the East from seeing the truth that it must make a partner of the rest of the country, not alone by generous and expounding policies, but, above all, by just policies harder perhaps to realize than any other policies. We can always be generous, but it is not always easy to be just—wisely just—even to ourselves."

THE WORLD TO BE REDEEMED.

Dr. Geo. D. Herron in his book, "The Larger Christ," thus beautifully states the Christian's hope of a regenerated world: "He came not to increase the census of heaven but to improve the status of earth's righteousness; to get God's will done as freely and gladly on earth as it is done in heaven. A more intelligent study of the Scriptures has revealed that much of what was formerly thought to relate to far remote and distant heavenly spheres really relates to the future society of the earth.

"The Revelation of John is a mystic panorama of the historical processes of redemption and the triumphs of the Redeemer here upon the earth where we now live and are to live. John's rapt imagery is the symbolical description of a humanity that is to become so spiritualized that there shall be a wedding of earth with heaven—the two to blend in unending harmony. It is upon the earth that God is to set his throne of righteousness, and dwell with us and make us his people. It is upon the earth that God is to vanquish death and banish night, and establish the everlasting communion of saints under the reign of the Prince of Peace.

"The realization of heaven upon earth is more than a mystic ideal. It is the crowning fact of history. It is the solid reality with which God is displacing the insubstantial materialism underlying the rude social structures of human selfishness. It is the sole clear and practical solution of historic problems; problems which exist only because of the blindness of human unbelief. It is the tangible realism which is slowly drawing men from the mire of a gross idealism. It is the adaptation of the political economy of Isaiah and the social philosophy of John. It is the actualization of righteousness; the realization of the Gospel. It is the bloom of evolution, and the climax of revolutions. It is the goal of the ages upon which Jesus turned his dying vision, and which has held the faith of the pure and wise, the true and the brave, amidst forgotten defeats and unrecorded sufferings.

"It is the divine errand upon which white-souled prophets have walked serene through a world ablaze with scorn. It is the issue which is to satisfy the travail of the centuries. It is the quenchless passion which will give no rest to the earth until the justice of love prevails. It is the consummation of all that God has been and done for man, and all that man has been and done for God. It is the eternal kingdom of the Christ, which is besieging the affairs of men, troubling the foundations of society, and sifting the church as wheat. The pledge of God is behind it, and the victorious forces of the universe are allied in its behalf. The Bible is its written warrant, and the cross its seal which none can break. It may take us with violence, but it advances to conquer. And the saints shall judge the world!"

A FAITHFUL REFORMER PASSES AWAY.

The Pittsburgh Commercial Gazette contains this notice of the death of a good reformer whom we have known for many years:

"William R. Hamilton died Saturday, Nov. 14, 1896, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. R. J. George, D. D., Allegheny. Mr. Hamilton was born in Miffin township, Allegheny county, Nov. 25, 1811, and after his marriage removed near Putneyville, Armstrong county, where he spent the greater part of his life. In his later years he lived in New Bethlehem, Pa., Warren, Ohio; Beaver Falls, Pa., and Allegheny. The deceased was a positive character, of sterling integrity and profound convictions. He was a radical reformer, and one of the first Abolitionists. In slavery days his home was a station on the underground railroad, and he harbored and helped forward many a slave in his perilous race for liberty. At the outbreak of the rebellion he willingly gave his oldest son, not yet of age, to the army and regretted that the others were too young to go.

"He was outspoken in his opposition to all secret oath-bound societies, believing them to be inimical to the best interests of the republic, and antagonistic to the teachings of Christianity. For many years he was an earnest and active politician, but became convinced of the sinfulness of the nation in refusing to declare its allegiance to Jesus Christ as the king of nations, and of the inconsistency of Christians co-operating with a government under a Christless Constitution. In this, as in all things, true to his convictions, he retired from active participation in political life, and united with the Reformed Presbyterian church, of which he was a member at the time of his death. Those who knew Mr. Hamilton will always respect his memory as that of a man whose conscience ruled his life, and who regulated his conduct by obedience to divine law and loyalty to his Master."

FUNERAL OF EDWARD W. CURRY.

The funeral of E. W. Curry, chairman of the Democratic State Committee, who died at Des Moines on Wednesday morning, Nov. 18, as the result of injuries received by being initiated into the Elks Lodge at Des Moines, was held Friday, the 20th, at 1 o'clock, conducted by the Knights Templars. Every business house in the town was closed, and the public schools were dismissed for the day. Prominent politicians of the State were present, among them being C. A. Walsh, of Ottumwa, secretary of the National Democratic Committee. The funeral was one of the largest ever held in the city, and for hours the people passed in and out of the office building where the remains were lying in state.

The pallbearers were selected from the Leon bar, and escorts were present from the Des Moines Elks, the Scottish Rite Masons and other societies, among them being the Knights of Pythias, who attended the funeral in a body. District court was in session, but was adjourned yesterday for the term on account of Mr. Curry's death. Now let the good people of Leon, Iowa, chisel on the grave-stone of this distinguished lawyer and politician the words of David, 2 Samuel 3:33, "Died Abner as a fool dieth." And then let them put the case into the hands of the best legal talent in the State and prosecute the Des Moines Elk lodge to the fullest extent of the law for the murder of Lawyer Curry, so that they will be a fearful warning to all lodges to quit this criminal foolishness which should be prohibited in every civilized land.

MOST GLARING INCONSISTENCY.

The most remarkable demonstration of the insincerity of those making the most earnest profession of Christianity is sitting as if they were dumb in the presence of their knowledge of the ignorance, superstition and barbarism of Freemasonry through which they have passed. They seem to think it a great virtue to keep silent in the presence of such an evil, and make it appear as if it were a virtue instead of a vice; knowing that to which they consent in silence can be used in secret to destroy innocent women and helpless childhood. We know of nothing more dangerous to every true interest of society than Freemasonry, which furnishes the opportunity to the most vicious persons, who often are found in the lodge to do the lowest and most dangerous injury against innocent and worthy persons.

How ministers can give their consent to go through with the preparation for initiation, the initiation and the conferring of degrees—the highest of humbugs—and the taking of the oaths and the whole pile of rot, of which the whole thing is made up, and then go before a congregation of respectable people to preach the pure and undefiled Gospel of Jesus Christ, is an incomprehensible mystery to every intelligent and conscientious person who has the least knowledge of the great and imposing fraud.

There is nothing more dangerous to the sound doctrine of morals. How it eats out of the soul every thought of spiritual refinement. It renders the protection of home an impossibility. There is nothing so dangerous to the order, quiet and study of a well-regulated home. It is a constant invitation to young men to leave the society of parents and sisters to find their way to the lodge-room where no chance to teach upright character and good conduct can be thought of.

BEECHER AS A SLAVE AUCTIONEER.

Even people of mature years whose memory is clear about matters before and during the war have practically forgotten that Henry Ward Beecher used his pulpit in Plymouth church, Brooklyn, as an auction-block for slaves. The most famous of his "slave sales" was that of the beautiful girl, Sarah, and it was upon this occasion that the most exciting scenes ever witnessed in Plymouth church, or in any other American church for that matter, occurred.

Mr. Beecher was unusually dramatic; he put a fire into his words, as he stood the slave girl on the platform beside him, which fairly burned into the hearts of his auditors. It was not long before the people became almost hysterical with excitement. But Beecher kept on until he was ready to pass the collection baskets. Then the auditors gave vent to their feelings, and not only heaps of money was put into the baskets but men and women took off their rings, unfastened their watches and threw them into the baskets and on the platform. It was a remarkable scene, and such a one as probably will never be equaled in this country.

Mrs. Beecher recalls the event with wonderful vividness in her article in the Christmas Ladies' Home Journal, when she tells the whole story of "When Mr. Beecher Sold Slaves in Plymouth Pulpit." The scene itself is remarkably well brought to the eye of the reader by a striking illustration made by De Thulstrup from material furnished the artist by Mrs. Beecher.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. E. Matthews, of Bath, N. Y., has been suffering severely from muscular rheumatism.

—Rev. W. H. Chandler and Elder Rufus Smith, of Wheaton, attended the Christian Worker's Convention in Chicago last week.

—Editor M. A. Gault preached last Sabbath evening in the Free Methodist church at Evanston on the secret lodge question, and received a cordial welcome from the pastor, Rev. O. V. Ketels, and his kind people. He was entertained in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Johnson.

—Rev. Amos Dresser, Sr., of Julian, Neb., accompanied by Mr. Kelsey of this city, visited the Cynosure office last week. He came through the hottest of the anti-slavery struggle half a century ago and stood in the front ranks in that conflict, He has, ever since the overthrow of slavery, taken a deep interest in the anti-secret reform.

—The Wesleyan Methodist says: "Many of our readers will learn with deep regret of the death of Rev. J. L. Barlow, which occurred at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Helen Rowley, in Bemus Heights, N. Y., on October 24. Bro. Barlow was a man of marked ability and special devotion to the anti-secret reform. We are sure the Lord will direct his falling mantle in the Baptist church."

—Mr. Josiah W. Leeds, of Philadelphia, Pa., has prepared an excellent tract entitled, "Against the Teaching of War in History Text Books." Let every pastor, evangelist, class-leader, Sabbath-school teacher, and all others who are interested in the spread of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, secure from the author a few copies of this tract for free distribution. Address Mr. Leeds at No. 528 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

—On last Monday evening the young men interested in good government met at Christ Chapel, Orchard and Center streets, to organize the Civic Improvement Club. George E. Cole gave the young men an idea how to proceed. Dr. Bayard Holmes, populist candidate for mayor recently, was among the speakers. There was a large gathering of young men reformers. Let the civic improvement movement go on.

—We are informed by Josiah W. Leeds that so much of the article lately copied from the Lancaster paper into the Cynosure as referred to him as "a prominent attorney" is incorrect. He has never been in the practice, though he has at various times sought the vindication of the law when he has beheld it outraged by the desolators of homes. In the sixth generation of descent from Daniel Leeds, who came over to the Delaware before William Penn, and was surveyor-general of West Jersey and author of either the first or the second book published in the Province of Pennsylvania. Friend Leeds claims to be to the manor born, also of honest descent as an essayist. Although not a graduate of any college, he deemed it best to refuse, some years since, the tender of an honorary degree, holding the old-time Quakers' indifference to titles.

—Mrs. J. G. Lorbeer, of Wheaton, Ill., recently returned from an extended visit in New York State to her mother's and the home of her childhood. Her father, Rev. Lewis A. Wicks, who died many years ago at Copenhagen, N. Y., was quite a noted evangelist in his day. Her mother was at one time suspended from membership in the Presbyterian church with ten others because they attended an anti-slavery convention. Her congregation also adopted a rule forbidding its members to pray for the temperance and anti-slavery causes. "What hath God wrought" since that day? Mrs. Lorbeer has several hundred volumes of her father's biography compiled by her mother. The volume has 370 pages beautifully bound, and containing a pen picture of her mother and her father's letters, sermons and notes. It is a readable and interesting volume, which she will sell for $1.

—Rev. W. F. Crafts, in his address before the late W. C. T. U. Convention in St. Louis, said: "For one thing, I see signs that the churches will adopt moral reforms as a part of their regular work early in the twentieth century, even as they adopted foreign missions as one of their God-given duties a century ago—the churches of the Reformation not having previously seen any call to foreign missions in their Bibles. When in a Scotch Presbyterian assembly, near the close of the eighteenth century, a member suggested that it might be well to consider whether foreign missions was not a duty of the churches, the Moderater called him to order, rapping fiercely and saying, 'Sit down; when the Lord wants to convert the heathen he will do it without your help.' But the speaker, with Scotch persistency, refused to be silenced. 'Raitch me the Bible, wull ye, Moderator.' From it he read: 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.' But even with such a plain command, and others of like import all through the Bible, it took a quarter of a century to get foreign missions fully established as a branch of church work, with regular collections and organizations and concerts of prayer."

KILLED OR CRIPPLED

THE FATE THAT AWAITS THOUSANDS IN THE ARMY OF LABOR.

Liability of Employers In Case of Accidents In Which Employees Lose Their Lives or Are Maimed Is an Important, Pressing Question.

[Special Correspondence.]

Among the many problems arising under the new conditions of modern industry the question of employers, liability for injury to employees is not the least important as well as perplexing.

In the operation of our railroads, mines and factories, with their swift moving machinery; in the construction of our mammoth buildings—in brief, in all branches of our modern industrial activity the army of the workers is being steadily decimated by frightful accidents. On the battlefields of labor the number of killed and injured every year in this country alone by far surpasses the number of the killed and wounded in any of the great battles which decided the political destinies of nations. Complete statistics on this point are not obtainable, but the annual reports of the interstate commerce commissioners show that on our railroads alone the number of employees killed annually amounts in the average to about 3,000, while the number of the injured by far exceeds 30,000.

Add to these the disasters in mines and mills, the daily victims of steam and electric machinery, the loss of life on ocean, lake and river navigation, in construction of buildings, railroads and roadways and the variety of other work involving more or less danger and risk and you may form an idea of the magnitude of the army of victims.

In the more advanced European countries legislation has taken cognizance of this new problem and attempted, with more or less success, to secure indemnity for the loss of life or other injuries by holding the employer liable for accidents and their consequences to employees.

In Great Britain the main obstacle in the way of remedial legislation was the principle of the common law, according to which the negligence of a fellow employee as cause of an accident served to the employer as a valid excuse which protected him against any claim on the part of the victims. The application of the same principle in most of the states of the Union is the main reason why our wageworkers are not adequately and equitably protected by laws regulating liability for accidents.

Centuries ago, when conditions were entirely different, there was reason for the legal fiction that any employee upon entering a workshop might know the character and reliability of his few fellow employees and be able to measure the risk he was assuming in working with them.

All this is changed now. Enterprises are managed on a gigantic scale, with thousands of employees, about whom the new applicant for work can know little or nothing. What risks and dangers he has to encounter he must assume, because necessity, the hardest of taskmasters, compels him. The railroad men, the miners and other workers are well aware that death takes frightful toll from their ranks, but they have only the choice between starvation or work under such conditions. If the employment of unfit men in the roundhouse, in the signal towers, on the switch or on the brake increases their danger—if long hours of work render even the otherwise fit employee temporarily and fatally unfit—the fellow employees have no say or influence over such matters. They are only doomed to take the fateful consequences.

Hence it is high time that this matter of liability in cases of accident be attended to thoroughly and in fairness to the workers and their families. In a few states, like Massachusetts and South Carolina, progress in this direction has already been made. In most of the other states the question is barely stirring, except among the members of organized labor. Every honest and fair minded man should help in pushing it to the front until it is properly solved.

The following main points should, in my judgment, be considered essential and fundamental in shaping proper legislation on this subject:

First.—Employers should be liable for all accidents occurring to employees while at work.

Second.—The primary entrepreneur should be responsible for his subcontractors.

Third.—Settlements should be had with as little delay as settlements in case of fire or life insurance; hence litigation and quibbling would be prevented as far as possible.

Fourth. — Any contract clause by which an employee waives his right of indemnity for accidents should be illegal and void.

The enactment of efficient legislation on this subject would result in the organization of insurance companies for accidents, so that the individual employer could measure and calculate this item of expense and add it to the general cost of production.

Still another result would be obtained—namely, the introduction and use of safety appliances that would reduce the number of accidents. At present many enterprises find it cheaper to have people killed or maimed than to provide for the best protective methods. When the destruction of life and limb becomes more expensive, however, there will be a great deal less of it. With most employers the pocketbook is still the sensitive nerve center.

MOSES OPPENHEIMER.

Importance of the Laborer.

There are in this country nearly 20,000,000 people who live on wages, and of these nearly 3,000,000 are women. Whatsoever helps the wage earners of America helps the people of America, and whatever is opposed to the interests of the wage earners opposes the interests of the American people.—Father Yorke.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Nov. 29. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—How to get good out of our troubles.—Ps. xxvii, 1-14.

If there is any way to get good out of trouble, we all want to know it. It would be a universal boon. Trouble is not confined to any part of the world, to any class or condition of society. It is universal. "Man is born to trouble, as the sparks fly upward."

One of the most attractive features of Christianity is that it assists its followers in time of trouble and even promises them good out of trouble. The invitation of its Founder to all who are borne down by sin, by distress, trouble, affliction and tribulation is, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest." David was a prosperous and successful man, yet he also knew what trouble was. But David had remedies for his troubles. His remedies were of such a character that they both sustained and benefited him. Three of them he gives us in the psalm before us:

1. David recognized the hand of God in trouble and made God the strength of his life. Then he had nothing to fear. "The Lord is my light and my salvation," he says. "Whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life. Of whom shall I be afraid?" Some people only see God in prosperity, others only in adversity. But we should recognize the hand of God in everything, in adversity and prosperity, in shadow and sunshine. Especially should we see it in adversity, and this should lead us to make Him our strength. If we recognize God in it, we will realize that it is for some good purpose and will strive to find out that purpose. If the purpose is accomplished for which God intended it, good must come out of it, for "all things work together for good to them that love God."

2. David got good out of trouble by serving God in His temple. David loved to serve God. One desire of his life was to dwell in God's house. "One thing have I desired of the Lord," he says, "that I may dwell in the house of the Lord forever, to behold the beauty of the Lord and to inquire in His temple." And for what other reason? "For in the time of trouble He shall hide me in His pavilion, in the secret of His tabernacle shall He hide me; He shall set me up upon a rock." Fidelity in the service of God will help us both to bear trouble and to get good out of it.

3. David got good out of trouble by prayer. David prayed unto God in time of trouble. God brings trouble upon us. God controls our troubles. What better way to get good out of them than to pray to Him in trouble, that He will sustain us and also benefit us? God is able to do both. Are we willing to have Him? If so let us ask him in Jesus' name. We endure many sorrows "all because we do not carry everything to God in prayer."

Bible Readings.—Job v, 7; Ps. xxxiv, 19-22; xlvi, 1-3; Isa. xliii, 1, 2; Math. xi, 28-30; xiv, 1-12; John xiv, 1-3; xvi, 33; Acts xiv, 21, 22; I Thess. iii, 1-8; Heb. xii, 1-8; I Pet. i, 4-9; Rev. iii, 19; vii, 9-17.

Be True to Personal Duty.

There is a general disposition to measure ourselves by others. So far as duty is concerned, nothing could be more dangerous. We lack the data for an absolutely correct estimate of others. Possibly we may correctly judge. But what others do or neglect to do, at least apart from relations to us, really does not determine or modify our duty. What is due from me? What ought I to do? These are the vital and pertinent questions for each individual. — Western Christian Advocate.

On the Other Hand.

On the other hand, if we have honestly laid hold on Christ, even though our faith has reached only to the hem of His garment, like the sick woman, we are made whole, and from the somber scenes of the passion we can go on joyfully to participate in the brightness of the resurrection, while with steadfast eye we look for Him to appear with all His saints.—Episcopal Recorder.

On Lower Levels.

We all live on far lower levels of vitality and of joy than we need to do. We linger in the misty and oppressive valleys when we might be climbing the sunlit hills. God puts into our hands the book of life, bright on every page with open secrets, and we suffer it to drop out of our hands unread.—Canon Farrar.

Prayer For December.

Pray that the month celebrated the world around as Christ's natal month may be marked by the gift of a multitude of young hearts to Him and by the more complete consecration of all His people to His service.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

Isn't there work for a senior society in your church?

Are you preparing for a glorious Christian Endeavor rally day to inaugurate the winter work?

In Guatemala city, Central America, has lately been organized a Christian Endeavor society appropriately called "the Lone Star society."

In old Boston, England, the city from which our New England Boston gets its name, Christian Endeavor is rapidly becoming a prominent factor of the religious life.

The executive committee of the District of Columbia Christian Endeavor union recently passed a resolution promising to the District Epworth League hearty support in their effort to bring to Washington the Epworth League's annual convention for 1899.

The concerts given frequently at the rooms of the Boston Seamen's Friend society are usually in charge of the Christian Endeavorers of the city. The seamen greatly enjoy them. During the past year 348 men have signed the temperance pledge presented on these occasions.

"As for me and my house," says the editor of The Christian Index, "we have put away ungodly competition, and purpose to work in Christian cooperation with all who love the Lord, and we rejoice that through this Endeavor movement we find an open door where we may enter in and work."

ARRANGING CURTAINS.

Points on a Subject That Causes Many Women to Despair.

The arranging of Windsor curtains is a matter of despair to more than one housewife, who either must put them up in a slovenly, half hearted way or depend on the professional draper. Artistic draping is much like trimming a hat—it takes an experienced hand to do it well. For a chamber window there can be nothing more dainty than curtains of snowy muslin, either striped, figured or plain, finished by the fullest of frills along the edge and arranged prettily at the windows. It is useless to try to make one curtain take the place of two. It is a feat that cannot be accomplished with success. Two good, full curtains are necessary, long enough to admit being tied up without escaping the floor by too great a distance.

A pretty idea is to cross the curtains, if of thin material, at the top, catch them back on a level with the window sill and tie them with immense knots of muslin.

Women and Professional Life.

Woman was created by her Maker to be the helpmate of man and to fill those highest and holiest of earthly callings—wife and mother. Married life is her natural sphere. The qualities which are needed to perfectly fulfill the duties of such a state are inherent within the true woman. When she assumes these duties, they are her life and her first thought. She will never forget or neglect them through the influence of past experiences or present necessities in another channel. In this age the practical side of our life is paramount. Professional life makes a woman more practical, more economical and of better judgment and must therefore fit her to be a greater helpmate to her husband. The true woman will never be independent of her husband, although capable of earning her own living, but will ever rely upon him and strive to fulfill his wishes. There are exceptions to all rules, but the true woman can never be unfitted for the highest fulfillment of the duties in her natural sphere of wife and mother by contact with professional life.—W. G. H. in Philadelphia Press.

Tinsel In Dress Goods.

This is to be a glittering season, says a fashion writer. Even the new cloth dress goods are woven with tinsel threads, and very pretty are the effects thus obtained. In the dark silk and wool mixtures the gleaming suggestion of tinsel is most effective. The newest gauze to be used, either as a trimming or for entire evening gowns, comes striped with either gold or silver, and the latest mousseline de soie is embroidered with glittering threads. From England comes the rumor that a powder has been made with luminous properties which, when applied to fabrics of all descriptions, will give to them the brilliant, scintillating coloring of the opal by day and render them phosphorescent by night. If this powder is all that the inventor believes it, we will soon have luminous chiffon frills and changing, glowing silks, which will look as if their designs had been dipped in fire.

She Loved Study.

Miss Anna Eliot Ticknor, who has lately died at Newport, R. I., was a daughter of George Ticknor, the historian. She was known not only in Boston, her native city, but every part of the country, through the Society For Home Study, which she established more than 25 years ago. She inherited a love of study and of books from her father, and her last years were devoted almost entirely to this plan for encouraging young people who were unable to take a college education to make the most of their opportunities and spare moments at home. She was also appointed one of a commission to superintend the disposal of a state fund for establishing public libraries in cities and towns where there were none.

Athletic Womanhood.

The revolution which has taken place in the training of girls within the past 20 years is almost beyond conception. The time will soon come when a reference to "the weaker sex" will provoke a look of inquiry, a merry challenge of the speaker. If our girls keep on as they have begun, there is no telling what degree of physical prowess will be reached by the women of another generation.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Plucky Helen Kellar.

With her hearing, sight, smell and taste all gone, Helen Kellar has still managed to learn more about the world she is living in than most people ever learn with all their senses to help them. If she lives a dozen years longer, she is likely to be one of the best educated women in the world, an example to all the world of what pluck and patience can do in accomplishing the impossible. —New York World.

Long Time Between Meals.

Some of our boys and girls think that one forenoon is a great deal of time to wait for dinner after breakfast is over. But there is a big anaconda in the Philadelphia "zoo" which ate its breakfast almost two years ago—22 months, to be exact—and has just got around to its dinner. During all this time it didn't seem to be a bit hungry, although when it was really ready for a meal it ate the whole bill of fare, which consisted of a fat rabbit, all at one gulp. It is not very unusual for a snake to abstain from food for several months, at the end of which time death generally results, but the anaconda's case is distinctly different from any other. Its fast lasted over twice as long as any in the history of the "zoo," and during the whole of its continuance there was no evidence of ill health.

Dolls' Eyes.

Little girls who play with their dolls may be interested to know what sets the fashion in dolls' eyes. When Victoria became queen of England, nearly 60 years ago, she was fair and young, with very blue eyes, whereupon blue eyes became all the fashion, and all the loyal dollmakers of her kingdom began sending blue eyed dolls from their factories. In Italy and Spain, where all the great beauties have olive skins and dark, handsome eyes, a blond doll is quite uncommon. Japanese dolls have twinkling, beady eyes, set in their heads aslant, while the gayly dressed dolly from Singapore looks from her copper colored face with a pair of narrow, coquettish, black eyes, quite different in expression from either the Spanish or Chinese beauties.—New York Times.

Dot and the New Moon.

I have been told—do you think it is true?—
That when the new moon first comes into view,
The bright little moon, like a bent silver bow,
If I see it just over my left shoulder—so—
Bad luck will follow me all the month through.

But I don't believe much in signs. Do you?
But the new moon last night above the elm tree
Over my right shoulder glanced down at me,
The pretty new moon, and, you know, that's a sign
That the best of good luck will surely be mine.
I can't help believing that sign will come true.
Signs may be silly; but, now, wouldn't you?

—Anna E. Langdon in St. Nicholas.

The Torch of Temperance.

While we sit at home rejoicing,
Safe from every storm that blows,
On the street our erring brother
Down the drunkard's pathway goes.
Let us reach our hand to save him,
Let us be his guide and stay;
Surely now he needs our friendship
On his dark and dreary way.

Keep the torch of temperance burning,
Flash its light upon our foe;
We may save our falling brother
From the drunkard's final woe.

Where the brilliant lights are flashing
In the gay saloon and grand
Stands a brother, husband, father,
Needing now our helping hand.
See, the tempter now besets him
With his demon's glass of rum.
Hasten—oh! I pray you hasten—
Lest he fall before we come.

Down among the poor and lowly,
Down the alleys rank with gin,
There must go the temperance workers
Who would save these men from sin.
We must take them, drunk or sober,
To our hearts and homes once more.
We must snatch them from the burning,
And their manhood must restore.

Rise, oh, rise, I pray you, brothers!
Wait no longer to decide.
Lo, the waves o'erwhelm the nation,
And we sink beneath the tide!
Blow the bugle blast of temperance,
Rally round your flag unfurled,
Forward let us march to rescue
Every drunkard in the world.

Keep the torch of temperance burning,
Flash its light upon our foe;
We may save our falling brother
From the drunkard's final woe.

—Good Templar of Canada.

THE CURSE OF THE POOR.

Nine-tenths of Their Poverty Is Due to Their Habit of Drink.

I believe the experience of every one who lives and has lived among the poor, whether it be Catholic priest or Protestant clergyman, sister of charity or district visitor, charity organization agent or brother of St. Vincent de Paul, will bear me out in my conviction that nine-tenths if not ninety-nine-hundredths of the actual destitution among the poor is to be traced, directly or indirectly, to habits of drink. It is not, as a general rule, the drunkard himself who has to pay the heaviest penalty, at least in this world, for his intemperance. It is too often the helpless wife and the neglected children who have to bear the burden of their father's sin. There is scarcely a city or a town in the whole world from which all abject poverty would not practically disappear if the vice of drunkenness could be banished. Of course there are besides a number of instances of destitution in no way connected with drink. The sudden death or long illness of the breadwinner of the family will, from time to time, cause a very acute phase of misery and want. The poor, helpless mother, with her hungry brood, is as sad a sight as well can be. But such cases are exceptional, and men do not legislate for exceptions. Such needs can easily be met and are met in every well organized community by Christian charity. They are also of their very nature only temporary. Even the poor widow left destitute with half a dozen little ones, if she is at all deserving, is sure to find friends and obtain employment. The pinch of poverty may be severe for a time, but in our complex civilization there is work for all who have willing hands and an honest heart. Add to this that the advance of habits of thrift, the increased facilities for insurance and the growing sense of the duty of providing for such contingencies make the occurrence of acute cases of unforeseen distress tend continually to diminish.—Rev. R. F. Clarke, S. J., in North American Review.

ALCOHOL MICROBE.

Minute Germs That Produce Vertigo, Rheumatism and Nausea.

An American scientist has discovered a microbe in alcohol which he believes is the cause of all the ills of intemperance. The theory that drunkenness with its accompanying evils is bacteriological in origin is attracting great attention. Professor C. Coles of Wilkesbarre, Pa., who made the discovery based on Dr. Talmage's description of these microbes, hopes to find some antitoxine which will destroy these dangerous germs. The discovery is expected to revolutionize the present methods of dealing with the drink habit, and incidentally to work a great moral reform.

Professor Coles states that he has found after careful experiment that all forms of alcohol contain parasitic life called bacalus potumaniæ. It follows, therefore, that every kind of drink, whether wine, brandy or beer, into which alcohol enters is infested with this curious germ life. These minute forms have been examined through a powerful microscope and their development carefully watched. They have been found to be especially plentiful in strong drink which contains a large percentage of alcohol. Any one who drinks is, of course, forced to introduce these dangerous forms into the system in large numbers. It is well known that microbes which are taken into the stomach in either food or drink quickly mingle with the blood and soon find their way to all parts of the body. Professor Coles believes that a man who in delirium tremens sees every form of reptile life in reality sees only these parasites of the brain in a greatly exaggerated form. It is therefore not a hallucination that the victim is suffering from, but he actually sees these germ forms. The presence of these minute germs, it is believed, also produces vertigo, rheumatism and nausea, which often come from excessive drinking.—New York World.

Opium In India.

Owing to the efforts of Burma's chief commissioners, Sir Alexander MacKenzie and the late Sir Charles Aitchison, strongly supported by the anti-opium party in England, Burma has enjoyed a measure of partial prohibition for the sale of opium since 1894. Defective as the law is, it has reduced the consumption of the deadly narcotic two-thirds and shows conclusively what can be done with honest officials behind a law.—Exchange.

In Rouen, a manufacturing city and frequented port, the annual consumption of alcohol for each inhabitant rises to 4½ gallons (more than 10 gallons of brandy at 45 degrees of alcoholic strength).

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON X, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 6.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings xi, 4-13 Memory Verses, 9, 10—Golden Text, I Cor. x, 13—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

4. "For it came to pass when Solomon was old that his wives turned away his heart after other gods, and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David his father." Last week's lesson was a picture of great glory to the honor of the Lord, His fame through Solomon reaching to the ends of the earth, but in this lesson we have a record of great failure through disobedience and the Lord's name dishonored. God, who sees the end from the beginning (Isa. xlvi, 10), had forbidden that a king of Israel should multiply horses or wives or silver or gold, but that he should render strict obedience to the law and lean wholly upon God (Deut. xvii, 16-20). The closing verses of the last chapter and the opening verses of this show that Solomon went directly contrary to the word of God, perhaps because it would have made him so very peculiar in the eyes of other nations to be so unlike them in these matters.

5. "For Solomon went after Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites." Loving these strangers to Israel, he would naturally do many things to please them, and it is impossible to please God and the enemies of God at the same time; therefore the sin of being unequally yoked together with unbelievers (II Cor. vi, 14). The friendship of the world is enmity with God; whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world in the enemy of God (Jas. iv, 4). Even in preaching the word we are to speak not as pleasing men, but God, who trieth our hearts; for if we yet please men we are not the servants of Christ (I Thess. ii, 4; Gal. i, 10). The Master Himself said, "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon" (Math. vi, 24).

6. "And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord and went not fully after the Lord, as did David, his father." The expression "in the sight of the Lord" is found again in verses 33 and 38, and over 50 times in Kings and Chronicles. If we would set the Lord always before us and speak and act as in His sight all would be well. And is this not included in following the Lord fully? Does it not mean believing His every word and acting accordingly and always as if He were right present with us? "Even Christ pleased not Himself," but He did always those things which pleased the Father.

7. "Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem." Thus he corrupted the mount of Olives with the abominable idolatries of the Zidonians, the Moabites and the Ammonites and became partaker of their evil deeds (II Kings xxiii, 13; II John x, 11), and for over 300 years these abominations remained till Josiah destroyed them, and they were on the hill facing the temple, even the hill from which the Lord ascended, and to which He will return when He shall come in His glory for the redemption of Israel (Zech. xiv, 3, 4, 9). Solomon united these nations to himself for his own gratification, but Christ shall draw all people unto Him for the glory of God.

8. "And likewise did he for all his strange wives, which burnt incense and sacrificed unto their gods." What a time he must have had with his 700 princess wives (verse 3)! What he did for one he would have to do for all, and thus was gathered at Jerusalem the idolatries and abominations of all nations, and this by one who sat on the throne of the Lord to be king for the Lord. Jerusalem had become a very Babylon, the habitation of devils and the hold of every foul spirit and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird (Rev. xviii, 2).

9. "And the Lord was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice." All our privileges increase our responsibilities, and these revelations of Jehovah to Solomon and His special favors to him should have deterred him all the more from all thought of turning away from Him. Israel had oft enough in past days provoked God to anger with their high places and moved Him to jealousy with their graven images.

10. "And had commanded him concerning this thing that he should not go after other gods, but he kept not that which the Lord commanded." His father had intreated him to serve the Lord with a perfect heart and willing mind, and in nowise to forsake Him. He had also prayed specially for him to this end (I Chron. xxviii, 9; xxix, 19). The Lord Himself had also admonished him in both of His appearances to him to be obedient (I Kings iii, 14; ix, 2-9), then He had done for him the great things and given him the great glory of which the queen of Sheba said that the half had not been told her, yet he disobeyed and turned his back upon God for the sake of earthly show and pleasure.

11. "Wherefore the Lord said unto Solomon, Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant, and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee and will give it to thy servant." Thus disobedience, for the sake of present gratification and praise of men, causes Solomon to lose the kingdom and brings a curse instead of a blessing.

12. "Notwithstanding in thy days I will not do it, for David, thy father's, sake, but I will rend it out of the hand of thy son." How wonderful the long suffering of God, how patient with the sinner, how unwilling that any should perish (II Pet. iii, 9). Consider the blessings through David and the curses through Solomon, and, remembering that no one liveth unto himself, consider whether it is a blessing or a curse that is coming upon others through you.

13. "Howbeit I will not rend away all the kingdom, but will give one tribe to thy son for David, my servant's, sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, which I have chosen." Compare with this verses 32, 34, 36, and notice the repetition of "for David's sake," and "for Jerusalem's sake." Our next and last three lessons of this year will be given to "Temperance," "Christmas" and "Review." The whole of 1897 will be devoted to the Acts and the Epistles. Who can tell what may come to pass in Emmanuel's land for David's sake and Jerusalem, the chosen city's sake, ere we come again in our studies to the Old Testament? Of this we are sure, Jerusalem shall be the throne of the Lord, and the Son of Mary shall sit on David's throne, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it (Jer. iii, 17; Luke i, 32, 33). If not soon as we count time, it will be soon in God's estimation. There is just one thing for the redeemed to do till then, and that is occupy till He come" (Luke xix, 13), by living to know Him and to make Him known.

WANTS OF GRANGERS

NATIONAL BODY ON THE REGULATION OF RAILWAY RATES.

Changes in the Present Interstate Commerce Law Suggested, Giving the Commission More Power to Prescribe the Tariff of the Roads.

Washington, Nov. 20.—The national Grange, after being in session for ten days, completed its work yesterday. A very elaborate report from the committee on transportation was presented and adopted. It detailed many of the complaints against carriers, among them elevator charges, manipulation of rates through "milling in transit privilege," cutting of export rates so that the middleman can ship from the interior to the seaboard cheaper than the producer; the unintelligibility of rate sheets posted at railway stations, etc. The report recommended several amendments to the interstate commerce law:

1.—That the procedure in the courts to enforce the orders of the commission should be confined to the record made up of the testimony taken before the commission, and the order of the commission should be enforced unless the court shall find in such proceedings some material error prejudicial to the carrier which furnishes sufficient reason for refusing to enforce it.

More Power for the Commission.

2.—That the commissioners should have power to require, after investigation and inquiry, that the rates, facilities, or practices involved in the case shall be changed, modified, or corrected as specified in the order, so that when the commission has determined what is unlawful it shall be its duty to prescribe what is lawful in respect to such rates, facilities, or practices.

3.—That uniform classification of freight articles should be established without delay, and the commissioners required to conform to such classification.

Through Rates for Freight.

4.—That the commission should have power to require connecting carriers to establish through routes for continuous carriage rates for shipments over such routes, and in case of disagreement between carriers in regard to division of rate between them the commission should have power to determine the apportionment of through rates between the several carriers.

5.—That the commission should have authority and determine and prescribe the form, contents and arrangement of the schedules and joint tariffs of rates required by the act to be published and filed, and from time to time change such prescribed form, etc., as may be found expedient.

6.—That the charging of higher rates on domestic traffic than for like service for through export or import traffic should be distinctly prohibited.

Committee Recommends Discussion.

7.—That the commission should have authority to require the prompt filing of annual and monthly reports by carriers. The committee recommends the discussion of transportation matters generally, and particularly those arising from time to time in various localities, in the local granges, and that our senators and representatives in congress be asked, as occasion may demand, to take necessary action for removal of transportation abuses by suitable legislation.

The reciprocity resolution was tabled because it trenched on politics.

BANK FAILURE AT SIOUX CITY.

First National Closes Its Doors—Run on a Savings Bank Follows.

Sioux City, Ia., Nov. 20.—The First National bank, of Sioux City, closed its doors at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, a result of heavy withdrawals since the failure of the Iowa Savings bank last week. The bank has always been considered as one of the solidest financial institutions in the northwest. It was organized in 1870. E. M. Hubbard, attorney for the bank made the following statement: "There is nothing to say, further than that the bank is closed on account of steady withdrawals and inability to get necesary money. Whether it will reopen again I can not say. No definite statement can be made until the bank examiner comes."

The bank had nearly $400,000 in deposits; loans and discounts,$492,000; capital, $100,000.

Sioux City, Ia., Nov. 20.—The failure of the First National bank caused a run on the Sioux City Savings bank, but it took advantage of the sixty-day law. The firm of J. K. Prugh, china and queensware, has assigned as a result of the failure of the First national. Later in the day a receiver was appointed for the Savings bank, to protect the stockholders and oreditors. No further trouble is expected by business men here.

It was given out at his request that he had hemorhoids. His death was a very hard one.

TWO GREAT FOOT BALL GAMES.

Princeton Downs Yale and Pennsylvania Is Too Much for Harvard.

New York, Nov. 23.—On Manhattan field Saturday the great foot ball game between Princeton and Yale took place before 35,000 people, thousands of them being ladies, in spite of a drizzling rain. For the first time since 1893, and for the fourth time since 1883, a representative team of the Tigers defeated the sons of Eli. The score was 24 to 6 and when it has been added that Yale's six points were scored on a fluke the story has been told, for never from the beginning of the game till its end were the men from New Haven able to cope with their sturdy antagonists. The Yale eleven was clearly outplayed on every point of foot ball; they did not kick as well, rush as well, nor run as well as the Tigers, and in their defensive play weakness was their principal feature.

Philadelphia, Nov. 23.—The game of foot ball here Saturday between Pennsylvania and Harvard was won by the former by a score of 8 to 6. It was one of the grandest foot ball battles ever witnessed in this country, and though the Harvard team was beaten it left the field covered with glory—and mud. In short Harvard went down with colors flying and died game, which makes the honor to Pennsylvania all the greater. Every player in the latter team was a star and the team nearly met its match.

Objected to Mrs. Solomon.

New York, Nov. 20.—The Council of Jewish Women adjourned sine die last night. When Mrs. Hannah G. Solomon was nominated for president for the coming three years, Mrs. DeSola, of Canada, objected because she said Mrs. Solomon did not consecrate the seventh day as the Sabbath. With much emotion Mrs. Solomon said that she consecrated every day in the week, and the incident passed over with the election of Mrs. Solomon. Miss Sadie American, of Chicago, was elected corresponding secretary.

Poverty and Intemperance.

At a recent meeting of Single Taxers in Washington, D. C., it was decided to send the following questions to the Woman's Christian Temperance union, the Anti-Saloon league and other temperance organizations:

"As appetite for bread causes bakeries, instead of bakeries causing appetite, does not appetite for stimulants cause saloons, instead of saloons causing appetite?"

"By care, anxiety and overwork burdening the poor, and indolence enervating the rich, is not the appetite for stimulants fostered?"

"Can we abolish intemperance without eradicating its primary cause—the unjust social conditions, which cause the undue extremes of wealth and poverty, fostering the appetite for intoxicants?"

"As land, labor and capital jointly produce all wealth, can labor's share thereof be increased without diminishing the share of either other factor? Can temperance, without altering the ratio of distribution, increase the already temperate laborer's wages?"

"As 'sweated' sewing women and many other total abstainers are very poor, does not something other than intemperance cause poverty? If, while competing toilers spree on surplus earnings, these abstainers still suffer dire want, what if their competitors reform, remain sober, compete incessantly and, needing no surplus for sprees, still further underbid their present wages?"

"If slum dwellers reformed, would not the increased desirability of living near them simply increase their rents?"

"If taxing tobacco, whisky and saloons makes them scarce, ought we make industry, food, clothing and shelter scarce by taxing them?"

"To make temperance reform effectual, must not economic reform precede it?"

Co-operating Against Sweatshops.

A new movement has started to combat the sweating system and the downward tendency of wages in the clothing trades. The Church Association For the Advancement of the Interests of Labor has held an investigation and embodied the result in a report to the Central Labor union. Bishop Potter is prominent in this work. The report says:

"In a recent investigation by a factory inspector a sweatshop room was found measuring 12 feet in width, 15 feet long and with a ceiling only 6 feet above the floor. In this room were employed four men, two boys (one 16 and the other 19) and three girls. The number was twice as large as the law allows in a room of these dimensions. With several machines and tables in the apartment, the workers were literally packed in, and some of them had to sit so close that they jostled each other as they worked."

The report said children recovering from scarlet fever had been employed to remove basting threads from garments afterward sold over the country. Smallpox patients had been found sleeping on piles of garments in sweatshops. The reason given for the downward tendency of wages was the increasing demand for cheap clothing.

Delegate Lawrence of the Clothing Cutters' union supplemented the report by a statement that the clothing trades were in a bad way. The Central Labor union decided to co-operate with the association.—New York News.

Bakeshop Legislation.

The most conspicuous feature of the movement in the baking trade this year and last, says John Schudel, assistant secretary of the Journeymen Bakers and Confectioners' International union, was the passage of laws for clean and sanitary bakeshops in the legislatures of five states—New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Maryland and Massachusetts. These laws, which are the fruit of persistent and intelligent agitation on the part of the Bakers' union, prescribe the height of the shop, good ventilation, etc., and limit the hours of work for the journeymen to 60 per week. The state of New York was the first to pass a bakeshop law, and this is mostly due to the exertion of the international secretary, Henry Weismann. This law, which was amended and improved this year, was passed in 1895. This success smoothed the road, and it was a comparatively easy task to have similar laws enacted in other states.

This Is Our Civilization.

It is a most remarkable fact—indeed, we may say unparalleled paradox—that in a country in which food is cheaper and more abundant than in any other country in the world, in which civilization is further advanced, and the comforts and luxuries of life more easily attained, there is a great and growing army of ablebodied, homeless, friendless, hungry men and a still greater number of destitute, dependent women and children.

There are hundreds of men in Chicago who have had nothing to eat today except what they have been able to cull from the refuse of restaurant tables or to pick out of garbage barrels. There are hundreds who tonight will find no better lodging than an empty boxcar on the lake front, a delivery wagon, an empty drygoods box or the shelter of a heap of rubbish.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Chicago.

Paternalism In New Zealand.

A bill before the New Zealand legislature provides that every citizen aged 65 or upward who has been a resident in the province for the preceding 20 years or more shall be entitled to a life pension of 10 shillings a week upon application. The premier talks of introducing state pawnshops. A bill for a statutory half holiday for domestic servants has already received its second reading.

Another "Unconstitutional" Labor Law.

The Central Labor union of New York city is very much exercised over the decision of Justice White of the appellate division of the supreme court in Buffalo declaring as unconstitutional the law of 1894 which directed that only citizens should be employed on public buildings in the state.

The Granite Cutters' union of the city has had several cases thrown out of court in consequence of Justice White's decision.

This was the first intimation that the union had of the decision, and it was then too late to appeal the Buffalo case to the court of appeals, inasmuch as the time limit for appealing had already expired.

The law which has been annulled by Justice White's decision was drafted by the legislative committee, and when it passed both houses of the legislature and was sent to Governor Flower he asked the opinion of the attorney general and other legal advisers, and they pronounced it to be constitutional. So the governor signed the bill.

The building trades unions were somewhat at a loss what to do in the matter. They could not introduce new test cases into court, as they would be thrown out, and it was too late to appeal the Buffalo case.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

Civil Service Law Made It Possible, and the Secretary Wants More of the Same—Figures on the Inspection of Cattle—Opposition to So Much Printing.

Washington, Nov. 23.—Secretary Morton in his fourth annual report, just made public, shows that with $280,000 which may be saved from the appropriations for the current fiscal year there will have been covered back into the treasury since March, 7, 1893, over $2,000,000 out of total apropriations of $11,179,455.45. That this great economy was effected without any loss of efficiency he attrbutes in a large degree to the improvement in the personnel of the force under civil service rules, which he declares to be "absolutely indispensable to the maintenance of an economic and efficient administration of the public service." To complete "the already almost perfect system of civil service" in his department the secretary recommends the appointment of a permanent director in charge of bureaus and scientific investigations.

The inspection of animals intended for food is treated at length, and stress is laid upon the increased efficiency of the work due to the extension of the civil service rules, which has been very rapid in this service. The total number of ante-mortem inspections of cattle, sheep, calves and hogs during the year was 35,917,879, an increase over the previous year of over 50 per cent. The total number of post-mortem inspections was 23,164,858, an increase of 25 per cent. The total number of abattoirs under inspection in 1896 was 102 in 26 cities; in 1892 there were but 28 in 12 cities. For the sake of economy the exports of microscopically inspected pork to countries not exacting such inspection have been greatly discouraged. The total amount thus inspected was in round numbers 23,000,000 pounds, of which 21,500,000 pounds went to countries requiring inspection.

Would Inspect All Food Animals.

Morton urges strongly that government inspection should be extended to all animals intended for human food, whether for consumption in the United States or abroad. The cattle and meat trade of Great Britain is reviewed at length. Of live meat arriving in the United Kingdom during the first six months of 1896 the United States supplied 75 per cent. of the cattle and 45 per cent. of the sheep. The testimony of the department representatives abroad is that cattle from the United States arrive in English ports in excellent condition. The Glasgow market is especially commended to American shippers. The report shows a steadily increasing demand in England for American horses. During the first nine months of the present year more of these animals were shipped to that country than for any previous entire year.

During the year the department issued 376 publications, mainly for gratuitous distribution. The aggregate number of copies printed was 6,561,700. The publication work has grown enormously during the past few years, and increased appropriations must be provided, but the secretary declares that neither the department of agriculture nor the government itself can continue for the next five years to increase its publications for gratuitous distribution in the same ratio as for the last five years without disbursing millions of dollars. He protests against the intrusion in the act of appropriation for the department for the current fiscal year of $82,500, for reprinting horse books and cattle books to be given away by congress. The secretary again takes occasion to express his opposition to the gratuitous distribution of seeds and to express the hope that the practice will be discontinued.

In his reference to the condition of American farmers, heretofore noted in these dispatches, the secretary says: "Legislation can neither plow nor plant. The intelligent, practical and successful farmer needs no aid from the government. The ignorant, impractical and indolent farmer deserves none. It is not the business of the government to legislate in behalf of any class of citizens because they are engaged in any specific calling, no matter how essential the calling may be to the needs and comforts of civilization. Lawmakers cannot erase natural laws nor restrict or efface the operation of economic laws. It is a beneficent arrangement of the order of things and the conditions of human life that legislators are not permitted to repeal, amend, or revise the laws of production and distribution."

Stress of Competition.

Referring to the stress of competition which the American farmer is compelled to endure Morton calls attention to the nearly 2,000,000 of farms of 80 acres each given away by the government under the homestead act of 1866 during the past thirty years, and to the amount donated under the timber culture law, equivalent to over 550,000 more farms of the same size. Lands long tilled and rendered practically infertile could not, of course, enhance in value and sell in competition with virgin soil donated by the government. No legislation relative to the public domain has been so directly inimical to the farmers who had bought and paid for the lands upon which they had lived and labored. It was impossible for farmers in the old states to profitably sell their products in competition with those of the newer states grown upon lands which cost their owners nothing.

During the fiscal year just ended the exported products of American farms aggregated $570,000,000, an increase of $17,000,000 over the preceding year. In spite of this there was a falling off in the percentage of agricultural products exported to the total exports, but this was due to the unprecedented sale abroad of American manufactured goods. The largest market for our products is admitted to be the home market, but the export trade is the regulator, the balance wheel, for domestic trade. It follows that the interest of the manufacturer as well as of the farmer is found in the most rapid possible increase of the export of farm products. General prosperity depends absolutely upon agricultural prosperity.

Austin, East St. Louis; John Taylor, Glen Carbon; John R. Holmes, Springfield; Herman Libbing, Quincy; Millard Lloyd, Bloomington, and John D. Potter, Peoria.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 21.—The K. of L. assembly yesterday added to the seventeenth plank of the declaration submitted by the law committee the following: "And that gold and silver when so issued shall be by the free and unlimited coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1 regardless of the action of any other nation." The session adjourned until today, as it was evident that the work could not be finished last night. The assembly will probably adjourn finally tonight. Several committee reports are to come up but little of public interest.

Preaching in a pulpit dishonored by pagan or profane symbols is almost worse than plagiarism.

The report of the Pennsylvania convention by the secretary, Rev. Allen M. Fretz, came too late for this issue.

Rev. P. B. Williams is now engaged with encouraging prospects in arranging for the Washington State Convention at Seattle in December.

If many men are adhering Masons through thoughtlessness, there is hope that the gentle influence of kind words of wisdom will bring thoughtfulness.

Dr. H. H. George of the National Reform Association has been in the city for some time arranging for a Christian Citizenship Convention, the call of which is published on our third page.

Fellowship is too noble a word to be made the synonym of conspiracy. But Masonic so-called fellowship is according to the universal standards of common sense and morality the fellowship of conspirators, or at least one adapted to conspiracy.

What is needed in our religious work is solid instruction that will convince the mind and judgment, and less of that which merely stirs the feelings. We want more solid bone in our religion. Let every pastor run a religious bone factory. Let them preach more doctrinal sermons. A sermon without doctrine is like a house without timbers. The evangelism of our times turns out too many pulpy, gelatin, velvety sort of Christians, who make a great fuss "getting religion" in winter only to lose it all backsliding in summer.

Dr. A. J. McFarland, of Beaver Falls, Pa., is in the city this week working on his favorite line, "Loyalty to Christ in the Realm of Christian Citizenship." He will address union meetings next Sabbath at Waterman, Ill., and on the Sabbath following at Elgin.

MYRICK JONES, THE IRISH INFORMER.

Among the Irish informers of the past, Warner, Talbot, Pierce, Nagle and Carey were shot. Corydon had his throat cut; Piggott died by violence, and LeCaron dropped dead. What the fate of poor "Jones," the latest informer, will be, is a matter of much speculation. This demonstrates that the "Clan-na-Gael," "United Irishmen" and similar societies, like Freemasonry, have a death penalty and execute it. These organizations are murderous in their nature and must be suppressed by law if the republic is to endure.

"Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and evil speaking be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." Eph. 4: 31,32. This was written by one who could use great plainness of speech and severity. In fact, the admonition itself is full of sharp implications. For these very reasons the spirit and import may be the more impressive and instructive to an ardent reformer. While it may seem to bear more directly on personal relations, it can hardly fail to be a light to the path of him who "speaking the truth in love" goes forth on an errand that requires him to "reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long suffering and doctrine." "And the servant of the Lord must not strive, but be gentle to all men; apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those that oppose themselves, if God peradventure will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth; and that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him at his will."

The law students of an eminent member of the Massachusetts bar were taught this principle: "Always keep your adversary in the wrong." There is one legitimate way to do this, and that is always to keep yourself in the right. If there is bitterness or questionable accusation let it be something for which your adversary is responsible.

An industry which is sure to receive more attention and to be developed in the future in this country, is the raising of beets for making sugar. It may surprise some to learn that we make seven times as much beet sugar as maple, and more than fifty times as much beet sugar as sorghum, though the latter was tried long ago. In Nebraska sugar beets have been raised to the extent of more than thirty tons to the acre.

"Worry will kill," says The Journal of Hygiene. How to quit it is simply to drop the morbid idea that causes it, and put in its place a true thought. Let go of it! If it comes back, kick it out as you would a hog. Stamp your feet on the floor; clinch your fists if need be, but in some way oust it. Cultivate a prayerful habit of mind, "praying will make you leave off sinning or sinning will make you leave off praying."

One of our contributors this week remarks that in writing for the Cynosure one only reaches the friends of the cause. But let each of our subscribers hand the paper to a neighbor and its circulation will be doubled.

"Grips, signs and obligations are necessary for our protection against the false and the unworthy." This is a stock argument of secretists. How unavailing it is to evil men who are organized criminals, as is the "Molly Maguires" of the "Ancient Order of Hibernians," was shown when Pinkerton's detective brought numbers of them to the gallows. Take the Clan-na-Gael which murdered Cronin, and whose late plans of deviltry were exposed by "Jones," as another example of the folly of the claim for grips, signs and obligations. The November, 1896, Voice of Masonry adds its testimony as to the character of some of its Masonic brethren as follows: "No good, absolutely." "Utterly worthless." "Never pays anything." "An utter dead-beat." These kind of Freemasons are its worst foes, says Editor Brown. Well, why not give them a few more grips, etc., for your protection?

DON'T DO AS OTHER PEOPLE DO.

BY A. R. P.

Don't do as other people do
  Unless you know they're right.
'Tis better far to stand alone
  Than with the wrong unite.
This trying to be popular,
  And mingling with the throng,
Has led to ruin many souls
  Who yielded to the wrong.

Don't do as other people do
  Who walk the downward way.
Temptations are on every side,
  To lead your feet astray.
And Satan walks throughout the land,
  God's children to deceive,
With just as smooth, enticing words
  As when he tempted Eve.

Don't do as other people do,
  Who Jesus have denied;
Nor go where you would be ashamed
  To have him at your side.
"In all your ways acknowledge him,
  He shall your paths direct;"
But if with wicked men you join,
  Evil you must expect.

CHRISTIANS MUST LEAVE THE LODGE.

BY REV P. B. WILLIAMS.

Among other reasons why Christians should not belong to the Masonic order, or any other of the kind, is, that it panders to "the pride of life." The institution is of the grandiloquent order, and its titles savor of anything except humility. Everything is "grand." There are the Grand Tyler, Grand Stewards, Grand Secretary, Grand Treasurer, Grand Chaplain, Grand Wardens, Grand Deacons, Grand Sword-Bearer and Grand Master. Then in the Select Master's degree, they have the Thrice Illustrious Grand Master, and other high titles peculiar to the degree. There is also the order of High Priesthood, in which there are the Grand Royal Arch Captain, Grand Captain of the Host, Grand High Priest, Grand Marshal and Grand King! The High Priest is addressed as the Most Excellent Grand High Priest! And then we have such addresses as these: Most Worshipful Grand Master, Most Worshipful Grand Lodge, etc.

Do these high-sounding titles mean something or nothing? If they mean nothing, why use them? And if they mean what they express and imply, by what authority can Christians wear them or apply them to others? Call no man on earth your master, for one is your Master, even Christ, is an injunction higher than Masonic authority. And then, what an abuse and prostitution of language to call wicked men (and that they are often wicked, unbelieving men cannot be denied) by the title of Most Excellent Grand High Priest.

Grand High Priest of what? There is only one "Great High Priest now in the universe of God, and that is the Lord Jesus Christ, the Great High Priest of our profession; and it is profanity to apply this august title to any mortal man no matter how pure. What then shall we say of its application to sinners? These high-sounding titles do not savor of that humility the Lord taught his disciples when he placed a little child in their midst and said, "Whosoever shall humble himself as this little child, the same shall be greatest in the kingdom of heaven." We are persuaded professing Christians have not paused to consider and investigate this subject in all its bearings, for if they had done so, there have been pious and worthy professors who would not have united with the Masonic fraternity.

An additional reason why Christians should not unite with this order is found in the declaration of Christ, that "If the truth make you free, you shall be free indeed." Christians are Christ's freed men, and are not to be the servants of men. Masons call themselves "free," but are they free? What sort of freedom is that in which you are bound by the most solemn obligations "to conceal and never reveal" those valuable secrets which are locked up in Masonic lodges? What sort of freedom is that which compels a Christian man to lock up in his own mind and heart wise and serious truths which, if divulged, would benefit the whole race?

What sort of freedom is that which so seals your lips that you cannot reveal to the world, to your brethren and not even to your wife and children, those important precepts you profess to have? They profess to have light, but it must not shine out on the world. To have valuable secrets, serious truths and important precepts, but are forbidden to divulge them. This is Masonic freedom and Masonic philanthropy.

Another reason why Christians should not unite with the order is, that they are not their own; they belong to Christ. And hence, all they do must be done in his name and by his authority. The Lord's treasury has a high claim upon their funds, and they are required to give into this treasury as the Lord prospers them. They have no right to divide their means between the Lord's and the Masonic treasury. They have no right to give of the Lord's money to erect Masonic temples, and to purchase costly robes and badges with curious devices wrought thereon. Their benevolence must not be Masonic but Christian benevolence. They must give in the name of the Lord, and not in the name of Masonry.

No wonder the cause of Christ languishes, and his evangelists are not sustained, when professing Christians put a hundredfold more into the Masonic than they do into the Lord's treasury. No wonder the house of God is often nearly empty and the lodge crowded by professing Christians. They love the latter more than the former, and show their faith by their works.

How often have we heard professing Christians remark that if they had to leave the lodge or the church, they would leave the church; yes, leave the temple of God for the Masonic lodge; leave the church of the living God, the ground and support of the truth, for Egyptian or other ancient mysteries; leave their brethren in Christ to associate with unbelievers, wicked men and deists; leave the church of God and its holy altar and ordinances, for the altar, mystic forms and badges of Masonry.

Such professors know not what they say. They are assuming a fearful responsibility, and insulting the Author of our holy religion. Let them pause, reflect, consider and examine this matter before they make total shipwreck of the faith, defile the temple of God and become fit subjects for destruction.

THE SPIRIT WITHDRAWING.

One of the most alarming facts recorded in Scripture and verified in experience is, that the Holy Spirit judicially abandons men after they have passed a certain limit and leaves them to themselves. By invitations, instruction and warnings he strives to bring sinful men into the right way. But when these overtures are rejected or neglected he departs and leaves them to their fatal choice. For 120 years God warned the antediluvians of the coming flood. He instructed them as to the way of escape by the ark. And he invited them to come and be saved. But no heed was given, and they were lost. "My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh, yet his days shall be an hundred and twenty."

You tell a man of his wrong doing and point out the right way and urge him to turn. He listens with respect, but does not act. Again you approach him and you find him less inclined to listen. Another time you try to reach him and he discovers impatience. And by a fourth trial you find him exasperated, and recognize that further effort is worse than useless, and wisely drop the matter. The Spirit approaches unregenerate men through the message of his people, enlightening the mind, quickening the affections, awakening the conscience and directing the thoughts and desires to God. But the indisposition of the heart to God defeats his efforts. Every time this is repeated the opposition of the depraved heart to God becomes more pronounced, until the Spirit ceases and withdraws. Thus "the Lord hardened Pharaoh's heart."

The hardening of Pharaoh's heart was the prelude and prophecy of his destruction in the Red Sea. The Jews' rejection of Christ and his message was the infallible evidence of their overthrow by the Roman armies a few years later. The rejection of the message of the Abolitionists by the slave-holders before the war was the sure sign of the downfall of the accursed system in the fearful carnage of fratricidal strife.

The utter indifference with which the lodge men regard the testimony of the witnesses against the unfruitful works of darkness by the secret empire, is an unmistakeable indication that the time is near at hand when the secret lodge system shall be brought into the light, and its deeds of darkness exposed to the gaze of an awakened people. The volcano is sleeping now, but when the day comes for it to break out amid the roar of the troubled elements and the blackness and darkness and tempest that envelop the mountain, the torrents of melted lava will pour down its sides and consume all before it. Carthago est Delano.

J. M. FOSTER.

Boston, Nov. 14, 1896.

ETERNAL VIGILANCE THE PRICE OF LIBERTY.

'Tis weary watching wave on wave,
  And yet the tide heaves onward;
We build like corals, grave on grave,
  Yet pave a pathway sunward.

We're beaten back in many a fray,
  Yet newer strength we borrow;
And where the vanguard rests to-day
  The rear shall camp to-morrow.

At the flight of Governor Geary, Secretary Woodson again became acting governor, and as usual tried to stir up war. Walker was appointed successor to Geary, and Stanton was appointed Secretary of the Territory, to Woodson's chagrin. Walker, not being able to assume the duties of his office at once, Secretary Stanton hastened to the Territory before Woodson had time to call the "Territoral militia to wipe out the Abolitionists," and acted as governor. The Pro-slavery Territorial Legislature had, in 1856, enacted a law providing for the election of members of a Constitutional convention.

In view of this fact, Stanton at once showed his Pro-slavery sentiments by taking a census and cutting off a portion of the Free State settlements from representation in the proposed convention. Walker arrived in May, 1857, and also ignored every vestige of Free State authority in the Territory. This Constitutional convention assembled in September, 1857, in the State house in Lecompton (still standing), with John Calhoun president. John Calhoun was nephew to John C. Calhoun. The table, on which this Lecomption Constitution was drafted, was afterwards sawed in two both ways and one-fourth of it is still in the old State house, upon which the gavels of the G. A. R.'s and Odd-fellows have descended of late years.

Walker assured the Free State element of a fair election and urged them to vote on its adoption, as he could not promise them another opportunity. Before the time for the ratification of this constitution the October election took place, and being assured of a fair election the Free State party put their ticket in the field, and voted under the provision of the pending instrument. The usual Pro-slavery frauds were perpetrated and the returns showed a majority elected Pro-slavery. Complaints were made to Governor Walker, and the frauds were so apparent that upon investigation he threw out 3,000 fraudulent Pro-slavery votes, which unseated enough Pro-slavery legislators to give the Free State party a clear majority.

The party however could not assume control constitutionally till after the adoption of the Lecompton Constitution. Judge Cato threatened Governor Walker and commanded him to issue certificates of election to those he had unseated. Walker, true to his promise of a fair election, refused; and, as usual, letters were written to the Pro-slavery President by the Territorial authorities. Sheriff Jones was one who was deprived of a much-coveted seat in the legislature, and publicly denounced Governor Walker and tried to pick a personal quarrel with Secretary Stanton. It was now discovered that the constitution was so drafted that it would not admit of a vote against it in any form; that it could be voted for, with or without slavery, but a vote against it as a whole would not be counted. Moreover, that if slavery should be voted out of it, the slavery then existing in the Territory, which was considerable, could not be interfered with for all time.

Upon this discovery the Free State element was so enraged that they denounced it in the strongest terms possible; holding conventions and mass-meetings to express their rage and contempt for it, and concluded that the party was now strong enough to vote the whole contemptible thing out of existence and force a correct count of the vote. Walker was astounded when he became aware of the poison lurking in the instrument, and illy concealed the fact.

By November, 1857, it was so hot for Walker on both sides that on the 19th he left the Territory, "to be gone two or three weeks on business," as he said. He went to Washington to see the President about having the Constitution so modified as to admit of a vote against it; but finding himself out of favor with the President on account of the letters written to him, he was not successful. He discovered that Jeff Davis was the originator of that Constitution, and was so disgusted all around that he did not return to the Territory, to the fate of his predecessors. Secretary Stanton then became acting governor.

He had so much faith in the Pro-slavery Territorial government, and in Lecompton as a future great capital, that he purchased 400 acres of rough timber land two miles from Lecompton, on which, at enormous cost, he built an imposing residence. It stands on an eminence, and now when the leaves are off the trees, it is plainly visible from Lecompton and vicinity—a monument of over-confidence. Walker not returning, the Free State party besieged Stanton to call an extra session of the legislature and try and have it make provisions for a vote against the odious Constitution. The session was called, but the object was not accomplished.

On Dec. 2d the Free State party held a convention at Lawrence to consider whether to vote under the provisions of the odious instrument again, but arrived at no definite conclusion. For calling the extra session Stanton was summarily removed from office, and all his hopes of financial success and official glory in Kansas were blasted. Thirty years afterward his costly estate at Lecompton was sold for about $1,500, having stood unoccupied, for the most part, all that time.

Lecompton, Kan. S. C. HART.

THE W. C. T. U. CONVENTION ADDRESSED.

MOUNT AUBURN, Iowa, Nov., 1896.

Miss Frances E Willard, President of the World's and of our National W. C. T. U.:

RESPECTED MADAM:—All good people rejoice to see in the program of your convention, which meets this week in St. Louis, Mo., that you have set apart a Sabbath afternoon in Nov., 1896, for a mass-meeting in the interests of the Armenians, who have suffered the loss of 100,000 of their number, massacred by the cruel Turks and Kurds, because they believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. This is a grand and good cause, well worthy the attention of your influential convention. We hope your mass-meeting in behalf of this cruelly-oppressed people will be of such an influential character as to stir up all Christian and civilized nations to immediately put an end to these horrible massacres and shocking outrages committed upon innocent women and children.

In your mass-meeting on a Sabbath afternoon in behalf of the Armenian sufferers, with all our hearts we bid you God-speed. While we thus bid you God-speed, permit us to ask your noble and influential convention if they cannot also set apart a day for the consideration and destruction of a far more direful evil than the massacre of the Armenians—namely the temporal and eternal destruction of 100,000 men and women in this Christian land every year by the legalized liquor traffic. The cruel Turk and Kurd have brought 100,000 unoffending Armenians to an untimely temporal death in a most shocking manner, and most inhumanly treated the wives and children of those whom they thus murdered. But they could not by their cruelties send the bodies and souls of those whom they massacred to hell. Yet the legalized liquor traffic of this Christian land not only ruins the temporal interests of 100,000 of the human family every year and brings them to an untimely and dishonored grave, but sends body and soul to hell. What a terrible and great evil this is to exist in a Christian land!

While we should do all in our power to put a speedy end to the barbarous and inhuman treatment of the Armenians by the Turks, let us by no means overlook the far greater evil in our own Christian land—namely the legalized liquor traffic—which not only brings the body to an untimely and dishonored grave and blights every earthly interest, but which sends both body and soul to hell.

So, while the wholesale slaughter of the Armenians is an evil, and a very great evil, and we should do all in our power to stop this work of death speedily, yet compared with the far-reaching evil of the liquor traffic it is but a "mote."

While then we attend to the great temporal evil in Turkey, let us by no means overlook the far greater spiritual and eternal evil in our own land, lest God and angels and good men say to us, first cast out the great "beam" out of thine own eye, O Christian! and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the great "mote" out of the Turk's eye.

That the W. C. T. U. may be abundantly blessed in all the great and good work their hands find to do, and that the Christian heart and conscience of this nation may be quickened to a deep and true sense of the terrible evil of the legalized liquor traffic as they have never been before, is the prayer of your brother,

WILLIAM A. CAMPBELL.

SYMPOSIUM ON SCRIPTURAL HOLINESS.

Attention has already been called to the book with the above title, which was recently issued by the Free Methodist Publishing House, 14 North May street, Chicago, and we take pleasure in giving our readers the following extract from its pages, and hope that many may purchase the book:

"That holiness which will allow persons to adhere to secret societies is spurious. The Bible demands our separation from unbelievers. Secrecy unites the just and the unjust, believers and sinners, the preacher and the libertine, in one bond of fellowship; united by oaths forbidden by the Word of God; united by principles of the most intense selfishness the world ever saw. True holiness is open and free and benevolent. Secrecy works in the dark and is so clannish that it regards none but its own adherents in its ministrations of pretended charity. Christianity teaches that all men are brothers. Secrecy limits its obligations to those who have taken its blood-curdling oaths and sworn allegiance to its mandates. It robs the church of the proper service of her members and puts a spiritual blight upon those who associate in its councils. Some lodges deny the name of the Lord Jesus Christ a place in their ritual and in their prayers, and most of them deny the principles which he taught. At the threshold of every lodge in the land, in the promise of secrecy, persons are required to violate plain commandments of the Bible. It is written: 'If a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or to do good, whatsoever a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these.' Lev. 5:4. Such a person was required to offer a sin offering for his trespass that he might secure pardon. Yet professed Christian ministers and holiness teachers and professors are numbered among this selfish clan, and the holy cause of Jehovah is dishonored and robbed of its glory."—Rev. J. T. Logan.

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP CONVENTION.

TO MEET IN CHICAGO, DEC. 16, 17.

The following call for this convention is being widely published and signed by many of Chicago's leading citizens, among whom are Dr. Herrick Johnson, Dr. P. S Henson, Dr. E. P. Goodwin, Dr. D. C. Marquis, John G. Woolley, Edwin D. Wheelock, Wilber F. Atchison, Dr. Johnston Myers, Thomas H. Gault, Rev. E. B. Graham, Rev. J. A. Collins and others:

"What is most needed in our social and national life to-day is the development of conscience. And to develop the conscience or moral sense in our nation, we must as a nation know and apply the moral law. We need as citizens, and as a nation, to understand that social and national wrongs are not only crimes against citizens and other nations, but sins against the law of Christ, the highest standard of morals for nations as well as for individuals; and that social and national duties are to be discharged under the acknowledged law of him who as governor among the nations is our nation's Saviour King.

"We need to have wrought into the heart and life of our citizens and of our nation the truths embodied in the President's Thanksgiving Proclamation, namely, 'that we owe gratitude to the God of nations for all our blessings; that we are prone to turn away from God's teachings and to follow with sinful pride after our own devices; and that we should, through the mediation of him who has taught us to pray, implore the forgiveness of our sins and the continuation of heavenly favor.'

"It is evident to every thoughtful mind that the greatest of our national perils is the deadening of the sense of moral responsibility. No one can be blind to the fact that this evil is eating like a canker into the vitals of our social structure. There is a widespread and ever growing disregard for the obligation of God's day and God's law upon the business, pleasures and politics of our land. If this moral disease be not checked by the quickening of conscience, our country must, sooner or later, come to a reign of terror with unbridled lusts and passions transforming lawless men into beasts of prey and demons of destruction. What must Christian patriots do?

"There can be no more effective means of quickening the moral sense of our citizens and our nation than by the application of the law of Christ to the great moral issues of our social and national life now pressing for settlement, and on the right settlement of which our country's future depends. Among these questions are the liquor traffic, Sabbath desecration, gambling, social impurity, including the evils of loose marriage and divorce, and the relation of public education to the principles of Christianity. Christian Citizenship means the consideration and settlement of these and all other moral issues in our civil life in conscientious acknowledgment of the supremacy of Christ and his law.

"Believing that now, after the intense excitement of a Presidential campaign, is a most opportune time for Christian citizens, irrespective of party or denomination, to meet and consider the above and kindred questions in the light of Christ's law, the National Reform Association, which labors to make an ultimate appeal to that law a constitutional principle of our national life, and the National Christian Citizenship League, which together with the National Reform Association labors to make Christian principles operative in public affairs, invite all friends of Christian Citizenship to meet in a convention to be held in Chicago, December 16 and 17, 1896."

SCORES THE COMMISSIONERS.

The Florida Voice takes its hat off to the Clear Water Press, whose position is in marked contrast with some other Florida papers.

"At the meeting of the county commissioners Monday, a very strong plea was presented to the board in behalf of a Freemason, Paul Bullock, of Tarpon Springs, who was convicted at the last term of the criminal court for illicit selling of liquors and sentenced to eighty-nine days' hard labor. His attorney, M. B. Macfarlane, stated the condition of his family as being dependent upon him, and that Bullock's own health was feeble, and tendered the sum of $10 a month for the three months' imprisonment. The board accepted the terms and ordered the prisoner turned over to Mr. Macfarlane."—Plant City Courier.

"Our criminal court is a failure! Our jury system is a worse failure! Our whole court system, from prosecuting attorney down to witnesses, is in all cases a miserable failure. The county commissioners of Hillsboro county by their acts say so. The proper way is just to listen to a little special pleading from a man's attorney and do as HE says. The verdict of twelve men who heard the testimony is worthless; the sentence passed by the judge who heard the testimony is all wrong. Our laws are made to be ignored. Yet we go to the expense of paying the salary of a criminal court judge, a prosecuting attorney, sheriff, jurors, witnesses, clerks, etc., when the whole business can be done by our sublime board of county commissioners. They do not need witnesses to let them know the merits of a case. All they need is to hear a statement from an accused man's attorney.

"This would be a large saving to the tax payers of the county, as our courts, as at present constituted, are a costly luxury. There is no need for a man to pay license to sell liquor when he can sell all he wants to and pay the county commissioners one-tenth of the fine provided by law for violations of the law. The saloonkeepers of the county are very foolish to pay for a license under the circumstances. The man who dosen't pay the license can undersell them and run them out of the business. We would advise all law-abiding, order-loving citizens to refrain from making any effort to have our laws enforced. Hold your own and defend yourself if you can, for you will surely get no protection from the law that you are taxed to make and enforce. The county commissioners will see to it that the law-breakers are protected—for ten dollars per month."—Clear Water Press.

REFORM NEWS.

THE IOWA STATE CONVENTION.

WASHINGTON, Iowa, Nov. 25, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Annual Convention of the Iowa State Christian Association met in the house of worship of "The Friends," at New Sharon, Iowa, Nov. 17th, at 2 P. M.; Pres. Rev. T. P. Robb in the chair. A half hour was spent in devotional exercises. In a brief address Rev. H. C. Pemberton, pastor of the congregation in whose home we convened, extended a most cordial welcome to the delegates present, and Pres. Robb responded in fitting words. The call did not show a very large attendance of delegates, but those present represented a large and varied constituency.

Representative men were there from the following churches: The Friends, Free Methodist, Baptist, Methodist Episcopal, Congregational, United Presbyterian and Reformed Presbyterian. The convention was also favored with the presence of Rev. S. H. Swartz, president of the National Association, and Rev. Wm. I. Phillips, general secretary and treasurer. Edmond Ronayne, of Chicago, was also present, and by his presence and stirring addresses contributed much to the interest of the sessions of the convention.

A fairly large and deeply interested and appreciative audience was present at all our meetings, and the community about New Sharon has heard at least the testimony of God's truth on the subject of oath-bound secret societies. The eloquent addresses of Rev. W. L. Ferris and Dr. Swartz will never be forgotten by those who were present. Delegates from a distance were most hospitably entertained, and homes thrown open to welcome guests. We felt it good to be there, and regret that there were not more present who have been deluded into joining the lodge. The Association was invited to hold its next annual convention in Morning Sun. An invitation was also extended from Oskaloosa. The place of meeting was left with the Executive Committee.

The following officers were elected. President, Rev. C. C. Potter; Vice Presidents, Rev. H. C. Pemberton, Rev. W. C. Ferris, Rev. J. A. Fenwick, W. J. Cubit, Ira. F. Beach; Secretary, Rev. W. C. Allen; Treasurer, Abner Branson.

CONVENTION DISAPPOINTMENTS AND WHAT CAME OF THEM.

LINTON, Iowa, Nov. 25, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It seems to me that I ought to let the readers of the Cynosure read a page from my experience.

In the midst of a very busy autumn of work in my pastoral charge came the preparations for the State convention. I had consoled myself with the thought that the secretary, Rev. J. B. Jackson, would do most of the work, and being so near me I could communicate with him frequently. Just when the work was begun, he moved away to Albia, and I could not ask him to move and do this work too. Bro. A. Branson came to the rescue. The program was made out, and all things looked promising. But the morning I left home a letter stated that Rev. J. A. Black could not be present, and that made a big hole in the program. At Morning Sun, Rev. C. D. Trumbull said he could not go, as a young man had died and he was called to conduct the funeral. When we stepped from the train at Oskaloosa, here stood Bro. Boyd, and a little further on was the genial countenance of Rev. Samuel H. Swartz, evidently looking for some one he had not yet found. A few minutes later the train from Albia brought our Iowa secretary, Rev. J. B. Jackson, and Rev. W. C. Allen of Washington.

That night a good audience in the Free Methodist church of Oskaloosa welcomed the truth, and sent delegates to the convention at New Sharon—and delegates too who went and did the Lord's work. The next day at New Sharon others appeared, and at noon our host, Bro. A. Branson, came in and told us that Bro. W. I. Phillips had arrived, and with him Edmond Ronayne. "Oh," I said, "is Ronayne here? How nice! He will fill the place made vacant by Mr. Black's absence." And so, at every turn of the convention the disappointment that had been so very big when a little way off, disappeared altogether when we reached the spot. And as I look over the days and evenings of the convention, I say it was all ordered by a divine hand.

But the most unexpected and, in many ways, the most significant and impressive feature of the occasion was the presence of our well-beloved brother Ronayne. I had not seen him for twenty years. I have changed much in these years; so has he. We are both nearer the coming kingdom than then.

But I want to thank God to-day for the disappointments of the convention.

We hope to locate the next annual convention in Morning Sun, and shall hope that our brethren from Chicago, Phillips and Ronayne, will think worth while to come to our help.

The after-meeting at Morning Sun on the following day when Bro. Swartz dealt out truth, in doses not homeopathic, was a success. A splendid audience, good music, profound attention, and, best of all, an unanswerable argument, made us all feel comfortable. T. P. ROBB.

IOWA STATE MEETING.

MORRIS, Ill., Nov. 24, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was my privilege to attend the anti-secret convention held at New Sharon, Iowa, on the 17th and 18th of November.

We met at the Friends' meetinghouse, Rev. T. P. Robb, of Linton, president of the Iowa Anti-secret Association, in the chair. An address of welcome was delivered by Rev. H. C. Pemberton, pastor in charge of Friends church at New Sharon, and was replied to by Rev. T. P. Robb, chairman of convention.

From beginning to the end of the meeting the Spirit of God was with us. In the first utterance of the welcoming Friend the keynote of the convention was set; and all the way through to the end we were reminded of the scene on Mount Herman, when the Christ was transfigured before Peter, James and John, when lifting up their eyes they saw no man save Jesus only. For the Lord Christ was indeed lifted up, and his blessed salvation set forth as the only remedy for sin, the only way to the Father's heart and ultimately to the eternal home of the soul.

All through those days of tarrying there was an intensely earnest Christian spirit manifested, not only at the sittings of the convention, but in the homes, Christian homes, where we were so hospitally entertained; so that from beginning to end it was a feast of good things; "fat things, a part of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow; of wines on the lees well refined."

The able and tender address of our brother beloved, Edmond Ronayne, who is an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God for this one work, and growing tender and mellow in the Christ life; and the earnest but logical putting of the truth by our fellow-worker in the Gospel and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, Rev. W. L. Ferris, of Cherokee, Ia.; the telling thrusts of Rev. Howard Brown, of Indianapolis, a leader among the young people of the Friends church, together with encouraging words of outlook from our honored national secretary and treasurer, W. I. Phillips, must have carried conviction to many who heard them, and in the harvest must bring forth fruit. They warmed our hearts and will linger long and helpfully in our memory.

I was glad to be there, and thankful that I am counted worthy of such yokefellowship as we turn our faces toward the future and its work; let us go forth so to live and do as that we may be worthy of the fellowship of the cloud of witnesses who compass us about; they who laid the foundation upon which we build and now rest from their labors. Go forth! not fearing the wrath of the secret empire, nor seeking the honor that comes from man, but with patience enduring all things, "as seeing Him who is invisible." SAM'L. H. SWARTZ.

IOWA CONVENTION NOTES.

In his address pastor H. C. Pemberton said that he extended a very hearty welcome to the convention; that he had frequently said from his pulpit that the Friends were champions of every reform; that he believed that God's highest desire is the salvation and redemption of man, and hence he was glad to welcome the Iowa Anti-secret Association; that as a pastor it was his duty to investigate and advise his young people to avoid everything that militates against godliness.

Let every word he said be spoken in the spirit of Christ, and then as a people, after these sessions shall have closed, we shall have had an uplift, and pure and undefiled religion will have been clearly set before us.

In the reply to the address the chairman, Rev. T. P. Robb, called particular attention to the relation which Christians sustain as sons of their Heavenly Father, and that every true son wants to be like his father. Hence a Christian can not go into these worldly secret orders because his Father is not there, and he cannot be like Father and be there. And we must be like Jesus Christ if we are to be with him and see him as he is.

It was a beautiful comment on the words of the Saviour: "He that will lose his life shall save it," to see at such a meeting the eloquent pastor of a Methodist Episcopal church, who had come several hundred miles from one direction, and the no less eloquent pastor of a Congregational church of over three hundred members, who had come some two hundred miles, from the opposite direction, meeting on such a platform that they might be true to the best interests of their fellows and their God. It means more to brethren Swartz and Ferris to defend and advocate a despised, unpopular cause than it does to those whose financial support and church positions are not threatened by such advocacy.

Like Moses of old they have respect to the recompense of reward, and would rather die with their Master and his people than to have for a season the riches of Egypt.

There were eight denominations represented: Friend, Covenanter, Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, Free Methodist, Methodist Episcopal, Congregational and United Brethren (Radical).

Several evangelists were present to whom the matter was comparatively new. It was pleasant to give to such additional information in private, and to furnish them with needed books.

Four new yearly subscriptions to the Cynosure and nine for the Lodge Lamp, together with sale of books, the gift of tracts to individuals, and distribution from house to house in New Sharon, go to make up a part of the results of the Iowa Annual Meeting. The new president is Rev. C. C. Potter, of Ireton, near Sioux City, and the new secretary is Rev. W. C. Allen, of Washington. The former is well and favorably known to Cynosure readers, and the latter, who was present at the convention, made many friends and will prove a valuable officer and leader in the State work.

Credit is due Rev. T. P. Robb for arranging meetings in connection with the one at New Sharon, both at Oskaloosa and Morning Sun. And I understand that our Washington friends expect Rev. Dr. Campbell, of Monmouth, Ill., to deliver a course of lectures on this reform in their city in the near future. P.

OBERLIN OPPORTUNITIES.

OBERLIN, Ohio, Nov. 16, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—They are to have a debate on secret societies in the college chapel two weeks from to-night, so I am told. I would like to do missionary work in Oberlin with anti-secrecy tracts; to visit the pastors, then professors, then theological students, then the leading church members, then the college students, to talk it over as time and opportunity allows. Perhaps the Lord's will is in that direction. I have prayed to be directed. Can you send me tracts?

Later, Nov. 21st. Your express package of tracts and booklets came to me to-day. It is said that Oberlin is gradually coming under the influence of secretism, but I trust that the Lord will beat back the powers of darkness. At any rate, Rev. Dr. J. Brand and Prof. H. C. King give decided testimony against it; and I doubt not many others also.

I have seen Bro. J. L. Burrell. He is as earnest as ever in opposition to the lodge. Yesterday evening I preached in the Rust M. E. church to a full and attentive audience.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE CAUSE WILL MISS HIM.

SENECAVILLE, Ohio, Nov. 18, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Daniel Riggs died at his home in Senecaville, Ohio, on the 28th day of October, 1896, being in the 84th year of his age. He was born and raised to young manhood in the State of Virginia, but emigrated to the place where he died, about the year 1832, and continued his residence here until death, or about 64 years. He espoused the cause of Christ in the year 1833 during the great revival of religion that prevailed in the village of Senecaville and vicinity in the autumn of that year, in which it was thought that from two to three hundred were brought to Christ and secured an interest in his pardoning blood.

He was a very worthy Christian man, and his life adorned the profession he made. He was for a goodly number of years a member of the Presbyterian church, and died within its pale. He left good testimony behind him that he had gone to be numbered with the saints on high, who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. He has left on this side of the river a second companion and seven grown children to remember and reflect over the loss they have sustained.

His death was resultant from the infirmities of age together with some species of stomach trouble. His sufferings were very meager, save only that which weakness might have caused. He was a thorough prohibitionist and anti-secretist, being a warm friend of the Cynosure and the truth it vindicates from week to week. Was a subscriber for many years, and requested at my hands that an obituary notice of his demise appear in its columns.

Esteemed brother and life-long friend, farewell until we meet, by the grace of God, in the happy "home of the soul" in the glorious beyond. The funeral was well attended; the pastor of the church delivering a short and appropriate discourse. Then the body was carefully laid to rest in the house appointed for all living.

EVANS THOMPSON.

CHRISTIANITY VS. ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

LARWILL, Ind., Nov. 23, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—After the blindfold is taken off in Odd-fellowship, and the binding obligation administered, which I quoted in a previous article, another admonition is given by the Vice Grand, which I quote only in part. The candidate is assured that he has entered into a society that is far more important than he can imagine; that it conforms to law, religion and sound morality, and does not permit anything contrary to the allegiance we owe to our country, or the duty we owe to ourselves.

Dear reader, to the best of my ability I have presented for your consideration the points and facts as they present themselves to our view, and will leave you judge for yourself whether the claims presented are true. Before closing this article I wish to invite special attention to one clause found in the obligation of the second or degree of Friendship, and reads as follows:

I hereby pledge myself to help and support my afflicted and persecuted brother, and warn him of approaching danger, whether it be from his own imprudence or from the evil designs of others, or from some accidental cause. I wish to call special notice, how the candidate pledges to befriend, and the conditions under which he agrees to do so:

1. Warn him of approaching danger. Thus far it is a duty we owe to one another as good American citizens.

2. Notice what follows: Whether it is from his own imprudence—the word imprudence inserted as it is covers a wide scope of territory—a man may take one or two drinks of whiskey and while under, or the pretense of being under the influence of the same, can commit almost any crime imaginable, and it may be construed to be of his own imprudence. With these conditions, is it not possible for an Odd-fellow to commit a crime, even after a warrant has been issued and placed in the hands of the proper officer for his arrest; and a brother of the order knows all about the proceedings and nature of the crime that it is of his own imprudence, is he not, according to his obligation, duty-bound to warn his criminal brother of the approaching arrest, thereby assisting the brother to flee from justice, and by being thus warned and securing the services of a lawyer belonging to the same order, secretly compromise the same, and then go through a sham prosecution; and when it is over with, everybody is amazed and wondering how in the world did he get off so easy, or I don't understand it, etc. Part of what has been said I have from observation and part from information by old gray-headed men who used to belong to the order, whose veracity and integrity cannot be questioned; and they say the above means just what it says; but adhering ones say if you would view it from an unbiased standpoint and without prejudice you would find that it portrayed quite a different meaning.

Again we will take up the part of the clause alluded to above and see how it harmonizes with the comments already given:

1. I hereby pledge myself to help and support my afflicted and persecuted brother; notice closely the help and support of my afflicted and persecuted brother. Why is he to do all this, according to the obligations. Is it on account of sickness, disease or death? No. Is it on account of poverty or some inability to provide for his family? No. Is it on account of being lame, blind, halt, deaf or dumb? No. It is when he is afflicted and persecuted. According to the obligation, can it be for righteousness sake? No. What then can it be for? It must be for his imprudence sake. Is it any wonder that in this fair land of enlightened and civilized Christian liberty, that justice is perverted in the courts of our country in the way it is in many instances?

I think enough has been said to convince any sensible-minded person of the ungodliness connected with the order of Odd-fellowship, and the inconsistency of a Christian, especially a minister of the Gospel of the Lord and Saviour, having any connection with the same. In conclusion will say, anyone desiring Odd-fellowship complete, send for "Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated", 50 cents inclosed with your order, to W. I. Phillips of the National Christian Association, 221 West Madison St., Chicago, Ill. I have proved the above work and find it true to the letter, and reliable in every particular.

JOHN HELFRICH.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

TENTH LETTER.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Nov. 25, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We are not quite through with our fire yet. The question will naturally arise, where was our druggist during the fire? His home was one and one-half blocks east from where his store was where the fire originated. A half a block further east was the schoolhouse, and two blocks east of his house was the M. E. church. The bells on both of these buildings were rung long and loud; and the crowd from the east part of town swept past his door, yelling and making the board sidewalks ring with the stamp of their feet, yet, as he testified afterward, he slept soundly for half an hour after the first cry of fire, and appeared on the scene when his whole store was in flames and he could save nothing. This statement is hard to believe. He said he retired about 11 P. M. This probably is true.

Another strange incident was that the lodge editor never knew of the fire until it was over. His office and press were in one of the burned buildings and were a total loss. He lived two blocks away from the scene, and the wind was not blowing in that direction, and few would pass his house coming to the fire. But there was another matter that might have made him sleep soundly. He had sold his paper and whole outfit to the temperance people, and had unjustly obtained the greater part of the money and thought he was sure of the remainder. The three men who took matters the coolest that night and the next day were, this editor, the druggist and the man who is believed to have kindled the fire, and they are all lodgemen. Their indifference was so extreme and unnatural that it was noticed by many.

Another feature of the scene, which I wish to emphasize more strongly, was the general indifference about putting the fire out, or even trying to check it. I for one feel that if all had worked as some did the end would have been different. The greater part of the property destroyed belonged to those who either belonged to or sympathized with the temperance people. It has always cost something to be on the right side in this sin-cursed earth, and there are those who always quail before this cost, and are ready to give up the fight. But if we will look back through the ages we will find that every advance our world has made has been accomplished by great cost and sacrifice. Think of what it cost to put down human slavery in our land and the world. Think of what our liberties cost our forefathers. Think of the struggles for civil and religious liberty in the British isles and over the continent of Europe.

It is agreed on all hands that intemperance is one of the greatest enemies that our race has ever had to contend with, and yet there are those who think it can be and ought to be put down without cost; and if it is going to cost anything they will not take part in the work, Yea, there are those who will not sacrifice even their party prejudices to take part in the work. I want to say simply that this work of elevating the race must go on, and will go on, and those who stand back and will not help because it is going to cost something, will in the end reap only dishonor and loss, even in this world, much more in the world to come.

This has proved true right here. The good people have lost, but they are conscious of having done right, and there is joy and gladness mingled with the sacrifice. Their sacrifice has accomplished something. Others have lost, but they have nothing to comfort them, and their support of the evil, their winking at it, letting it alone or cowering before it is a sting of shame that is not easily removed. If intemperance is the great evil that we say it is, it will most certainly not go down without great sacrifice and loss.

Let us then nerve ourselves for the conflict. Let us see to it that all our loss and sacrifice is made on the side of right and in an honorable way, so that it will be found at last among our treasures laid up in heaven. The saloon and the lodge may destroy our property, injure our bodies, or even kill us, but let us not fear those who kill the body, "but are not able to kill the soul, but rather fear Him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 18, 1896.

The annual convention of the District of Columbia Sabbath-school Union was held this week at the First Congregational church.

A comparison of the enrollment with the population of the District of Columbia shows that there is room for plenty of hard work on the part of those interested, as only 18 per cent of the population is enrolled in the Sabbath-schools, including the 94 colored schools with an enrollment of 15,000 and the seventeen Roman Catholic schools with an enrollment of 4 250, which make the total Sabbath-school enrollment of the District in round numbers 52,000. A police census taken last year gives the total population as 285,000. Among the out of town speakers at the convention were Mr. William Reynolds, international field superintendent, Rev. Dr. D. J. Burrell, of New York City. Dr. Burrell was very emphatic in asserting his belief that no unconverted person should be allowed to teach a Sabbath-school class.

In view of the meeting of the American Anti-Saloon League in national convention in this city on the 8th of December, the following definition of what the league is, given by Mr. A. N. Canfield, vice president of the loyal league, is timely: "The Anti-Saloon League is not a temperance society, but is a society of delegates from associations that are active in temperance work. The Anti-Saloon League takes no pledge and gives

ADDRESSED TO THE IOWA CONVENTION AT NEW SHARON, NOV. 17, 18.

Hon. S. C. Nielsen, Atlantic, Ia.—Accept my sincere thanks for your kind invitation to attend the Iowa convention opposed to secret societies. I am heartily in sympathy with the work of the convention, and pray that the blessings of "our Christ" shall be with his people when they meet in New Sharon.

Dr. E. A. Taylor, Griswold, Ia—I will attend the convention if possible. I am doing considerable work here in the way of scattering literature and personal work. I believe I have materially checked the progress of secret orders here in this town. I have suffered considerable loss of business as a reward.

Rev. J. A. Black, Wyman, Ia.—Things are in such a shape, on account of the absence of Mrs. Black, that I cannot well get away from home. Please express my regrets to the convention that I am obliged to be absent. I hope you may have a good live convention at New Sharon. We took up a collection for the convention amounting to some $13.

Rev. J. A. Frost, Marshalltown, Ia.—I must say that I feel very much interested in this work and would like to attend the meeting the 17th and 18th of this month at New Sharon, but it will be impossible for me as I have to be in Webster county those days. We have a mission meeting and a reformation festival there. May God bless your meeting at New Sharon and this good work all over Iowa.

Rev. W. A. Campbell, Mount Auburn, Ia.—I would be glad to have one of your traveling secretaries, who is a minister, to spend a Sabbath with me, as soon as the times brighten up a little, and preach to my people against the evils of secret societies. I will be glad to take up a collection for the good cause, and go around among our people with him and see if we cannot get subscribers for the Cynosure.

Daniel McPherson, Des Moines, Ia—I would gladly participate with you in your deliberations and show my sympathy with you in this so much needed reform. We are taught in the Word, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." To-day the church is honey-combed by these orders, and so the life is taken from her. It is not unusual to meet a church member, or even an officer, wearing two or three badges. And it is hard to find a civil officer who does not belong to two or three orders. May God bless you and endow you with the needed wisdom. I have been entreated again and again to go into some of these orders. God help us to stand for the defense of his truth.

Rev. Cyrus Smith, DeKalb, Ia.—Those institutions which have no place in the economy of God are about as numerous as the frogs of Egypt, and claim much of the time and money of their members. The cost of so much worse than useless machinery should be turned into legitimate channels, to convert the world to Christ. As long as the secret lodges are so numerous the cause of Christ will suffer. But it certainly will be fulfilled through legitimate Christian endeavor that "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up," as the Son of God has said. And he expects the workers in his vineyard not to neglect to "root up" the weeds if they hope to reap the right kind of fruit. They will not be able to "gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles."

Rev. O. T. Lee, Northwood, Ia.—Yours of Oct. 6th is at hand. I am opposed to all secret orders believing that they are thoroughly anti-Christian and un-American. I am interested in all work that tends to overthrow these institutions. If we would build up the church of Christ we must certainly make war upon all oath-bound societies. In my congregations lodge members are not tolerated, but are expelled as other malefactors. It is doubtful, however, if I can get away to your convention. I have six congregations in my charge and have my hands full. I have been making several trips for the anti-secret society cause, and will probably have to make another about the time of your convention. If time should permit me I would certainly be interested and come. But it is doubtful. With best wishes for the convention.

Rev. C. C. Potter, Ireton, Ia.—I would so much enjoy being with you in our State convention. I have opposed the orders in Ireton since coming here, and they have called me a "fool," charged me with almost every thing except "stealing sheep;" and I have learned that they have several men watching me. One of the leading members of the M. E. church here, who is a prominent order man, has been telling around that I am one of the meanest men in this part of the country, sticking my nose in other people's business, etc. Several months ago we had Pres. Blanchard expose the orders in our town; and the word came to me from Masonic sources that "this is a secret society town, and if I did not like it I could leave" I have a job printing outfit and have circulated much literature exposing the wicked institution. If matters should so turn that I can be with you I shall rejoice in the privilege.

Rev. C. Kirkland, Burlington, Ia.—I find it will be impossible for me to attend the annual meeting. I saw Bro. Trumbull and gave him the books of the Association, also the money due, which was $10.64, as the books will show; part of which I raised on my districts this year. I had hoped to raise more but my other work was so pressing that I did not have the time. I raised between five hundred and a thousand dollars during the summer for church work. I enclose order for sixty-four cents, which will make balance of money in treasury which with the ten dollars turned over to Bro. Trumbull will make the $10.64. I hope you will have a successful meeting. Bro. Branson was very anxious you should get Bro. Swarts there. I think it would contribute largely to the success of the meeting if you could secure him. If you get him I wish you would write me, as I think by writing to some that heard him last year, quite an interest could be aroused among our people which would insure a larger attendance. I pray that God's blessing may rest upon the meeting and a large measure of his grace upon yourself.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS

ADDRESSED TO THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION, AT OAKS, NOV. 18, 19.

Stephen Merritt, Office of King's Messenger, No. 210 Eighth Ave., New York.—Much as I would desire to be at Oaks, Pa., at the testimony service, and contribute my mite as a witness against the iniquity of the last days, I must forego the privilege, and ask you to see that my place is filled and my apology presented. Convey to our associates in this work my assurance of sympathy and love. Kindest regards to thee and thine. I am His and thine.

Rev. J. R. Latimer, Rose Point, Pa.—I much regret that I cannot be present at the convention. I write to express my hearty sympathies with its object. I am becoming more thoroughly convinced of the vast importance of the anti-secret reform. I believe organized secrecy is one of the most powerful, if not the most powerful, opponents of all moral reforms, temperance, national, Sabbath, divorce, etc. I believe it to be the greatest support and bulwark of the liquor traffic, of political corruption and demagoguery, of the secularism of our national Constitution and the government based thereon, etc. It is Satan's masterpiece for maintaining the conflict against the coming and establishment of the kingdom of our Lord. May the Lord speed the day of the utter rout and overthrow of all these works of darkness. Yours for the royal claim of Christ our King.

David Molyneux, Millview, Pa. —Enclosed please find one dollar to be expended as you shall see fit for expenses, etc. I would like to be with you, but circumstances will not permit. Should it be convenient for you to make our section a visit sometime this coming winter, drop a line to Rev. S. F. Frazier, the pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist church, as he could better arrange for you a hearing than anyone else. The people in this section of country need educating on this evil of the lodge as well as elsewhere, for whilst secret societies flourish and absorb so many of the youth of our land, and the members of our churches, whilst the churches languish both in numbers and spiritual power, thus plainly showing the truthfulness of the teachings of Christ; that ye cannot serve God and mammon, as that they will hold to the one and despise the other. And that where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.

Rev. W. M. Lyon, Washington, D. C.—I send this message to remind you of our interest in behalf of you and the great work which you represent. And while I am not at present in a position to render financial aid in behalf of the convention, yet I assure you that you have the prayers and sympathy of myself and congregation. I trust that the Lord may wonderfully bless the work of the convention.

Sanballat, Geshum & Co., (Neh. 6:2 etc.) are still pressing their claims, it is true, but thanks be to our God, Nehemiah is still at his work on the walls of Jerusalem, and by and by the rubbish of lodgism and all other isms will have been cleared out of the way, the walls of the New Jesusalem will have been finished, and we shall all unite in the songs of victory. For this let us all still work and pray.

And now may the spirit of Him who hath said, "In secret have I said nothing," be present with you all, and guide, direct and bless, is the prayer of his humble servant.

Edward J. Chalfant, West Market St., York, Pa.—As a seceder from the Know Nothing Order and the Secret Union League of America, two of the greatest frauds ever devised by the Jesuits to help their Masonic conspirators to outwit American voters, I feel it to be my duty to write a few words of encouragement.

William Penn intended that Philadelphia and Pennsylvania should stand before all cities and States for civil and religious liberty. The motto of our State is "Virtue, Liberty and Independence." But while we are holding this very important convention, a brass statue, thirty-eight feet high, of honest William Penn is looking down with shame upon a great city, which is cursed and degraded by the greatest ring on earth, known to Philadelphians as the "Hog Combine." And turkey buzzards have been seen to soar slowly and sadly over the political conventions of this demoralized State. Secret rings, based upon secret orders, rule us in every town and county of Pennsylvania. And, "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The Jesuitic secret empire of the United States is now fully established; and the Constitution of the United States is only read as an interesting novel, such as "Jack the Giant Killer," or the "Wandering Jew." And the riots at Homestead gave us a lesson in civil government, which may only be the prelude to our French Revolution.

Those who are opposing secret societies should look into Webster's great dictionary to see what he says about a famous secret society that gave to the world the word "assassin." And keep in mind the terrible fact that there are now at least fourteen secret societies in the United States which have death penalties and resort to assassinations.

Secretiveness, when rampant, or uncontrolled by reason and conscience, is the most dangerous faculty or power of the human character. And the secretive lunatic is the most dangerous of all lunatics; because he is always secretive, sly, cunning, crafty and double-faced. His great delight is to hoodwink and outwit the unsuspecting and unsophisticated.

The liquor power and the secret empire are joined in holy Romish wedlock, and they will never ask for a divorce; as the spirituous drinks of the liquor power promote the spiritual delights of Purgatory.

There are at least fifteen classes of citizens in the United States who should oppose all rings and secret societies. But the deceived lodge members are the most important to the great anti-secret reformation; as they are the host of witnesses who can tell the terrible truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

HOW TO TREAT FLOWERS.

Preserve Them According to the Nature of the Plant.

Those who wish to enjoy the whole of the short life of their cut flowers instead of only a small portion of it will not settle down upon any one undeviating method of preserving them, but will rather vary it, according to the different causes which lead to their decay.

Take, for instance, the flowers of a succulent nature, like the iris. The stems, when put into water, slough away and soon give forth an unpleasant odor. There are two remedies which may be applied in this case. Either one should put a mild disinfectant in the water and frequently change it or cut off the ends of the stalks at short intervals.

Another flower whose stem most rapidly decays and corrupts the water is mignonette, and it is often best, therefore, to sacrifice it while its head is still freshly green. Heliotrope, like mignonette, should always be put in water by itself, for it not only fades and turns brown rapidly, but it will kill almost any flower put with it.

The cause of decay in hard wooded plants like the azalea and camelia is that they do not take up enough water, not that they have any tendency to pollute it, so that to cut their stalks frequently would be of little avail. But if when putting such flowers in a vase or bowl you make sure that the lowest leaves attached to the blossoms are under water the effect is magical.

Ferns, and especially maidenhair, are very short lived when they have to look to the stem alone for nourishment, and the most effectual way to preserve them is to see that the lower part of every frond is well under water. Cut flowers require as a rule a far greater quantity of water than is given them.

Flowers should always be placed in water as soon as possible after being picked. When received by post in a somewhat wilted condition, an immediate plunge into hot water with a little sal volatile will accomplish wonders in the way of reviving them.

And if you wish to wear flowers in your hair or on your corsage, they may be made to retain their freshness for an entire evening by putting a bit of sealing wax over the ends.

How to Make Cheese Cream Toast.

Toast the slices and cover them slightly with grated cheese. Make a cream for five slices out of half a pint of milk and a tablespoonful of flour. The milk should be boiling and the flour mixed in a little cold water before stirring in. When the cream is nicely cooked, season with a small half teaspoonful of salt and one of butter, set the toast and cheese in the oven for four minutes, then pour the cream over them.

How Long the Heart May Stop Beating.

When the heart stops death ensues, as a matter of fact, through asphyxiation. The circulation ceases, the capillaries of the lungs become gorged with stagnant blood, while the blood in the brain no longer carries away the waste products and brings the oxygenated fluid to restore the tissues. As the blood takes about half a minute to circulate through the whole system, it may be taken that at the end of this period after the stoppage of the heart the arteries would be filled by the last effort of the left ventricle, while the veins would be pouring their contents into the right auricle. In a few seconds more the nervous centers would cease to act, and probably by the end of the minute the subject would be practically dead from suffocation, although reflex muscular action would probably keep up the appearance of life for some seconds longer.

How to Mend China.

Take a very thick solution of gum arabic and water and stir into it plaster of paris until the mixture becomes a viscous paste. Apply it with a brush to the fractured edges and stick them together. In three days the article cannot be broken at the same place. The whiteness of this cement renders it doubly valuable.

How to Make Sweet Tomato Pickle.

A peck of green tomatoes, 10 small onions, whole spices, pepper, bay leaves, 2 tablespoonfuls of sugar, vinegar and salt. Peel tomatoes like an apple, leaving them whole, and sprinkle with two-thirds of a cupful of salt. After standing 6 hours hang them in a bag to drain all night. Break up cinnamon and cloves and put into a thin muslin bag. Peel and chop the onions, sprinkling them with salt. When tomatoes and onions are well drained, pack in layers in a jar, putting bits of bay leaf and small peppers on each layer. Cover with good vinegar, put in the spice bag and let stand 9 days, having them well covered and pressed down by a cloth, plate and weight. When the time has passed, boil the mixture as it is, adding the sugar. Seal in glass jars after laying horse radish slices and black mustard seed on top of the pickle.

How to Make Fish Scallop.

Remains of any white fish make a delicious scallop with the addition of cheese, and, by the way, it is satisfactory to know that good American cheese, if not too fresh, is pronounced by the proper authorities as excellent for cooking purposes. Mash the fish with bread crumbs, grated cheese and anchovy sauce or any catchup liked. Bake in shells with a layer of bread crumbs, grated cheese and wee "dabs" of butter on top.

How to Stiffen Meringues.

In making meringues add a pinch of salt to the whites of the eggs. They will stiffen quickly.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 3, 1896.

ESTIMATE OF A MASONIC PRESIDING ELDER.

Every professed minister of the Gospel who belongs to the Masonic lodge should be held up in his nude state, with his clothes half stripped off, with a rope tied around his neck, blindfolded, on his knees before the Worshipful Master, with his hand under the Bible, swearing he will have his throat cut across and his tongue pulled out by the roots, and a number of other horrible things he will have done if he fail to keep the oaths. Horrible to be told! Can it be possible that any sane man could think of defending such infamy?

What is to be thought of a doctor of divinity, a presiding elder in the Methodist Episcopal church, taking thirty-two degrees in Freemasonry and now claiming to be non-adhering, and yet keeps as silent as the grave regarding the deception and dupism of the whole performance? Can there be anything more destructive to Christianity? Can truth have any greater enemy? Can any man be more dangerous to consistency and sincerity? Surely not. Such must be the decision of every honest person.

"JONES" THE GOVERNMENT SPY.

In the Cynosure of Nov. 19th was reported the sensational trial recently held in London in which Edward Bell charged with being a dynamiter was confronted by a government spy known as "Jones." From the London Daily Mail of Nov. 14th, we glean the following additional facts:

Yesterday Bell, or Ivory, the alleged dynamitard, was finally committed for trial after the examination of thirty-six witnesses. The sitting, which lasted from one o'clock to nearly seven, was occupied with the evidence of a mysterious Mr. "Jones," an agent of the Secret Service, who revealed many startling things in connection with Irish secret societies over the water. Bell looked somewhat grey, and his hair was ruffled as by the raking of anxious fingers, when the Secret Service agent was called and stepped into the box, the recognition of him visibly disconcerting the prisoner.

He told how he was sent to America in 1891 to make inquiries, and how, having established himself in a grocery business to mask his real occupation, he joined in 1894 a secret organization known as the "United Irishmen." He became intimate with William Lyman, proprietor of the "Irish Nationalist," who also formally controlled the "United Irishmen," and with his friend Boland. At the witnesses' initiation into the brotherhood there were present Lyman, Boland, Kearney, P. J. Tynan, and a man named Gallagher. He was initiated at Brevont Hall, Fifty-fourth St., where the organization was publicly known as the "Shamrock Club."

Directly after his initiation, "Jones" started the "Nally Club" in public, and No. 197 among the brothers. Among the members of the new club were two men, Mearna and Nolan, who had been connected with an explosion in Dublin. The witness was made treasurer and soon possessed himself of the secrets of the organization, and became vice president on the death of Boland. The officers of the different camps held district meetings once every month, and the district supervisor of New York appointed "Jones" his secretary.

The club meetings were held in the greatest secrecy. Once a month "district orders" were distributed by the secretary of the executive, containing particulars of the candidates for membership. They were burnt after being read. After initiation the candidate ceased to be known by his name, and bore a number instead. The sign and password of the society were changed every few months. An entrance fee was paid on joining the camp, and afterwards a weekly subscription, while there were special whips-round for celebrations or demonstrations. They celebrated the anniversary of the death of the Manchester "martyrs" (meaning thereby the murderers of Sergeant Brett), and there were also the Robert Emmett and the Amnesty demonstrations. Kearney, who is a notary public, and also runs a paper, the Irish Nationalist, and is the author of a pamphlet with the significant title, "Scientific Warfare; or, the Resources of Civilization," was vice president of club 81, while Tynan's club was 98.

It was at the Chicago Convention in 1895 that "Jones" met the prisoner, who was introduced to him by Kearney as a "brother." He learned from Tynan that Bell, or Ivory, belonged to his camp. At Chicago open meetings of the "New Movement" were held, and also secret ones of the members. He met Ivory at the last of these secret meetings, where officers were appointed to control the new movement. The open meetings were "bossed" by the secret organization. At a meeting of the club publicly known as the Robert Emmett Club, violently revolutionary speeches were delivered, and Kearney distributed copies of his pamphlet. O'Donovan Rossa, Tynan, Kearney and Bell traveled with "Jones" on the car going to Chicago. About four-fifths of those present at open meetings were members of the secret organization. During the whole of this time witness was continually collecting documents connected with the organization, and here Mr. Gill dived into his black bag and produced a rustling bundle of them. It turned out that none of them bore the printer's name, or indeed names of any sort. They were copies of the constitution of the society, their ritual, rules, and regulations —in fact, a complete dozzier, as they would call it across the Channel. Sheet after sheet was read, and the audience in court hardly knew whether to be amused or bored with the ridiculous ritual, and the descriptions of secret passwords and signs.

One consisted of catching hold of one's right ear between the finger and thumb; while a series of passwords composed the following questions and answers: "When are you going home? "In 1898." "Who will be there?" "All the boys." Several circulars were produced and read, some advocating active measures and military preparations, the old tag about "the hour of England's extremity" being trotted out again; while others condemned the apathy of English Liberals, and spoke of the "folly" of constitutional agitation. Mr. Gill also read the 1895 report of Lyman, wherein was an item of $3,500 for merchandise, which "Jones" explained meant dynamite. The witness explained that on one occasion a man named Johnston came to his club, and complained bitterly of the manner in which the vigilance of the Irish police hampered the holding of meetings on the "ould sod."

Mr. Cudby's brief cross-examination did not help to bring forward anything material, and the Secret Service man stood down, having been in the box for about five hours. He had throughout given his evidence in a cool and workmanlike manner. Bell, in answer to the usual question, said that he had nothing to say in a hoarse, strained voice; he seemed thoroughly cowed by the evidence of the trump card of the prosecution, "Mr. Jones," and Mr. Vanghan formally committed him to take his trial.

SECRET SOCIETY INFLUENCE IN POLITICS.

New facts are daily coming to light proving that secret orders are becoming a more powerful factor in our politics. Leading representatives of the American Protective Association in Pittsburgh say that a united effort will be made by the heads of that order in every State in the Union to have President McKinley appoint Representative Linton, of the Fifth Michigan District, who was defeated for re-election, to a position in the Cabinet, or to some other place equally acceptable, at home or abroad. It was generally accepted as a fact before the election that this strong anti-Catholic order had agreed to support Mr. McKinley, as the result of a conference held with the Presidential candidate by a select committee sent to Canton at the time the national council of the order was in session in Pittsburgh last summer.

It was stated publicly at the time by the men who went to Canton that Mr. McKinley was in no wise opposed to the principles of the order, and that all the members would be advised and urged to vote and work for his election. Now the order proposes to ask, in recognition of this open and avowed support, that Mr. Linton, whose views on Catholic matters have been repudiated by the majority of the voters in his own district, be taken in out of the cold. Mr. Linton was re-elected to the Fifty-fourth Congress as a Republican by over 6,000 majority, but his record during the past session changed almost that number of votes.

Mr. Linton's chief distinction during the last session was his constant advocacy of A. P. A. principles, and his opposition to the placing in Statuary Hall of the statue of Father Marquette, presented to the United States by the State of Wisconsin, as one of its most honored pioneers. His speeches advocating proscription of Catholics were given large circulation in the recent campaign by the A. P. A. leaders, but popular passion and prejudice seem to have aroused in the opposite direction from what was desired, if at all.

Prominent Republicans, when asked about the possibility of Mr. Linton getting a Cabinet place, or a foreign ambassadorship, were unanimous in the opinion that Mr. McKinley was too wise a statesman to stir up any such sectarian strife.

SUICIDE OF A KNIGHT TEMPLAR MINISTER.

Some weeks ago we reported the suicide of a prominent Knight Templar minister, Rev. James B. Morrison, of Laconia, N. H. He died at the Revere House, Boston, on the night of Sept. 21, by suffocating himself with gas. At his own request his body was cremated after receiving a Knight Templar burial service.

At Decatur, Ill., on the night of Nov. 24th, another prominent Knight Templar minister, Rev. James Miller, shot himself through the brain in an alley near one of the main streets of that city. His body lay in state in the First Methodist church in Decatur of which he had been pastor. It was attended by a Commandery of Knight Templars, and was buried on Friday afternoon by imposing Knight Templar ceremonies, the De Molay Commandery of Bloomington, Ill., Knight Templars, where he had been pastor till his death, attending in a body.

The Chicago Times Herald of Nov. 26 has this to say of the cause of his suicide:

> Now that the fact that Rev. James Miller died by his own hand is established, the question is the motive that caused him to end his life. To his closer friends, those to whom he unbosomed himself and laid bare the secrets of his life, the impression is that he was a man bitterly disappointed, one who felt that in spite of his struggle for recognition, that he had lost the fight. Not that the public failed to appreciate his gifts, but that he was held back by the men who controlled the church politics—the conference. This seems to be the most acceptable theory, and is given by men who knew him intimately. They now think that Rev. Mr. Miller felt that he had been hopelessly beaten and that he had reached the age of life when, having accumulated little of this world's goods, his aim in his chosen profession having failed, his sensitive nature gave away and he ended all.

The cause of Rev. James B. Morrison's suicide was reported by the press to be that several young men made charges against him of grave immoral conduct. But both of these ministers had sworn that horrible Knight Templar oath which is taken in the most solemn manner; the candidate kneeling at an altar with a cordon of glittering swords drawn and aimed at his unprotected breast, indicating as he is told that they are ever ready to avenge any violation of the oaths he has taken.

The Eminent Commander shows him a human skull. It must be no imitation skull. Into this skull the Commander pours some wine, saying: "To show you that we practice no imposition, I now give you this pledge." He then drinks the wine, and after drinking turns the skull bottom up to show it is empty, when he pours in more wine and hands the skull to the candidate, requiring him to repeat after him the following obligation:

> This pure wine I now take in testimony of my belief in the mortality of the body and the immortality of the soul; and as the sins of the whole world were once visited upon the head of our Saviour, so may all the sins of the person whose skull this once was, in addition to my own, be heaped upon my head, and may this libation appear in judgment against me, both here and hereafter, should I knowingly or willfully violate this my most solemn vow of a Knight Templar; so help me God and keep me steadfast. You will partake of the wine.

The candidate then must drink the wine from the ghastly cup. The horrible and damning nature of such oaths and penalties cannot be described or imagined. Their effect upon the conscience and moral nature must be fearful. The minister who has taken them is forsaken by the Holy Spirit, and must struggle on in an awful night of spiritual darkness and gloom. Can we not find in these horrible oaths and penalties that this prominent minister once took and regarded as binding, that which will explain how, after being pastor of several large congregations and preaching the Gospel for many years, he could be so far forsaken by the Holy Spirit as to deliberately plan to destroy his own life, And what made his crime the most aggravating he so planned his death that his life insurance could be secured and the guilt of his crime fastened upon others. When will men learn that an awful doom awaits those whose consciences are debauched by such oaths?

BEACON LIGHT ANNUAL MEETING.

Next Saturday at 7:30 P M. in the rooms of the Beacon Light at No. 1231 Dauphin St., Philadelphia, Brother and Sister Daniel Powers will hold the second annual meeting in the interests of their anti-secret reform work. The welcome will be given by Daniel Powers after prayer by Prof. J D. Bowman. There will then be a response by Rev. J. T. Wilhide and the singing of the hymn "Christ is all in all."

A report of the work will be given by Mrs. Daniel Powers, which will be followed by an original dialogue in three parts: "A Mason lamenting, " "A Mason repenting" and "A Mason rejoicing." A cordial welcome to this meeting is extended to all. The meeting was designed as the celebration of the seventy-fifth milestone or birthday of Bro. Daniel Powers. A song, entitled "Our Home," will be sung by Miss Cassell, after which Mrs. Powers would pay a tribute to his happy, contented life.

The weekly meetings at these headquarters are every Thursday at 2:30 P. M., and every Saturday at 7:30 P. M The above meeting will be closed by testimonies and the singing by Prof. Bowman of the following original missionary hymn, written by Mrs. Daniel Powers, and sung to the air, "From Greenland's Icy Mountains:"

Have courage, Christian soldiers, the battle is the Lord's;
Your years of patient service doth merit rich rewards;
His hosts around you rally to spread your work abroad,
And reap a golden harvest for the glory of our God.

Speed on, ye loyal leaders—with burning truth go forth,
Invade the works of darkness, from South to farthest North,
Till o'er our blessed nation the lamp of light shall shine,
To lighten every Mason and illume each pagan shrine.

Down with Masonic altars and every secret clan,
With all their idol worship to curse their fellow-man:
No secret gag law bondage will honest men endure
When once they've been deceived within the tyler's door.

Press on, ye faithful leaders of our anti-secret cause;
Long you have faced the danger of mad Masonic laws;
For the sake of truth and freedom, for right against the wrong,
For homes, for wives and children, for church and state, be strong!

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. H. T. Jackson, of Mt. Ayr, Ia., accompanied by members of his congregation, has been conducting services in the county jail, Sabbath afternoons, for the benefit of the prisoners.

—The Morning Sun (Iowa,) News of Nov. 26, says: "Rev. S. H. Swartz's lecture last Thursday evening in opposition to secret societies was attended by a large audience. Rev. Swartz is an able speaker and we hear his lecture highly spoken of. He is not abusive, but tells how he looks at the matter from his standpoint. The ladies' mandolin and guitar club furnished some nice music."

—Onions are almost the best nervine known. No medicine is so useful in cases of nervous prostration, and there is nothing else that will so quickly relieve and tone up a worn-out system. Onions are useful in all cases of coughs, colds and influenza; in consumption, insomnia, hydrophobia, scurvy, gravel, kidney and liver complaints. Eaten every other day. they soon have a clearing and whitening effect upon the complexion. We can testify to this from experience.

—The New York Mail and Express says: "The death of Edward W. Curry as the alleged result of his initiation into the Order of Elks at Des Moines is a tragic occurrence that is likely to create considerable public discussion. Doubtless it will be used by the enemies of all secret societies to the disadvantage of those bodies. While this is manifestly unjust, Mr. Curry's death having been purely accidental, the case must still give rise to consideration as to the advisability of abandoning or reforming certain features of initiation."

—The Pittsburgh Post says that the partial electrocution of Edward W. Curry at Des Moines, "has uncovered a piece of secret society news which reminds one of the days of Morgan's alleged exposure of the Masons."

—Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, of Esther, Pa., writes: "I have resumed my usual work since my return from Europe. Rev. Jos. Hay, Crawford and Brownell each kindly occupied my pulpit a day during my absence. I expect to preach in the six outposts formerly occupied as usual. Our communion on last Sabbath was well attended and I hope will prove profitable. Political matters are too exciting and absorbing for a very full enjoyment of profit from spiritual privileges. Oh, for the day when we shall have hosannahs in the highest to him that cometh in the name of the Lord!'

—A dispatch, dated Indianapolis, Nov. 19th, says: "The attorney general filed an exhaustive brief in the supreme court to-day opposing the motion for a new trial in the case of Rev. William E Hinshaw, convicted of wife murder and sentenced for life. The attorney general appears for the State; but he entered upon an examination partially convinced that Mr. Hinshaw had been wrongfully convicted. He is now forced to the conclusion that Mrs. Hinshaw was murdered by her husband, and he believes the motive to lie in the infatuation of the minister for the woman in the case."

—Victor J. Gladwin, son of Rev. Wallace J. Gladwin, passed to his heavenly home on the afternoon of October 16, from the home of the mission workers of the India Watchman, Bombay, India. Victor was born of missionary parents in India. He and his brother were brought to this country after the death of their mother, and educated. Two years ago the brothers returned to Bombay. The privilege of having such a son as Victor is a great blessing. Nothing can comfort his father's heart now like this answer to his call for 120 workers. "We are coming one hundred and twenty strong." This appeals to Cynosure readers especially, and we hope that not only will those 120 go whom God shall send, but that every other one who can will send an international postoffice order for $1 for the India Watchman, Bombay India. It is the Cynosure of India.

—Dr. W. T. Campbell, vice-president of the National Christian Association and pastor of the Second church, Monmouth, Ills., on Sabbath, Nov. 7, preached an after-election sermon. In it he vigorously denounced the shortcomings of the political parties in the moral issues of the day, and suggests the following as the platform on which all Christian citizens should unite: "Let us come together as members of the household of faith, and decide upon some united and uncompromising course of action, by which we will maintain the dignity of God's law, check the tide of intemperance, put a stop to the destructive influences of evil which are at work, vindicate the importance of our own educational system by demanding that foreigners shall not be enrolled as citizens sooner than those born in our own houses, and then let it be known that the moral power of this nation is to be held obedient to the command of Christ."

—The Kansas City Journal says: "The remorse which Mr. Curry's death must cause to the members of the lodge in question will doubtless be sufficient punishment. But the effect should be more widespread. It should lead to general abandonment to all ceremonies which involve the possibility of physical injury. The moral sought to be inculcated may be suitably impressed on the candidate by less violent means. The moral actually conveyed by such lamentable accidents as this, to the public mind, is that initiation into certain secret orders is altogether too much along the line of college hazing, which is now almost universally condemned and is gradually dying a merited death. It is true that hazing, which has several times resulted in death and more often in serious injury, is a cowardly indulgence in brutality, while the initiatory program has generally an elevated purpose. Yet the uninitiated can scarcely be blamed for coupling them, in the light of serious disaster in each. It is to. be hoped that Chairman Curry's death, if proved to be directly traceable to his lodge experiences, will be followed by some radical reform."

—Mrs. Agnes Smith Lewis has written for the Christmas number of The Century a paper entitled "What Language did Christ Speak?" She brings many arguments to prove that Christ spoke the Aramaic tongue, which was not, as once popularly supposed, a corrupt form of Hebrew, but a language as regularly formed, and with a grammar as distinct, as either Hebrew or Arabic. Mrs. Lewis bases some of her conclusions on the priceless manuscripts in the convent of St. Katherine on Mount Sinai, with which she is probably more familiar than is any other European scholar. It was in this convent that Mrs. Lewis made one of the greatest Bibical discoveries of the century. Under a late and worthless monkish biography she found the faded letters of an ancient Syric text of the four gospels. She took four hundred photographs of the manuscript, which proved to be a peculiar and very old version of the gospels of extraordinary interest.

—The St. Louis Globe Democrat gives the worst version of the sad death of E. W. Curry at Des-Moines, Nov. 18, as follows: "The expectation was that the candidate would jump out of the chair when the heat became unbearable. But he didn't jump. With some friends he had been out in the afternoon and had been drinking, and it is said that when he went into the hall he was very much under the influence of liquor. The allegation is that when he was placed in the chair and blindfolded his sensibilities were so benumbed that he was severely burned without knowing it, or being able to move. The lookers-on saw him fairly cook for some time, wondering at his nerve, till they discovered smoke rising from the chair. Then he was taken out of it, and found to be badly burned. His trousers were burned away and his flesh was almost crisp. He was taken to his hotel and cared for by the best physicians. At his own request it was given out that he was suffering from another trouble, and the true story did not leak out till to-day. Even yet there is much mystery about it. The story of how his injuries were contracted was given out to-night by members of the Elks' lodge, after a more sensational story had been current. It was that instead of a heated chair he was placed on an electrical chair and a light current turned on in the expectation of making him squirm. He manifested no discomfort, and the current was increased several times, without producing any apparent effect. Then the smoke was seen and he was taken out half electrocuted."

none. In this city there are many organizations doing a grand work, and the Anti-Saloon League was created to utilize the united action of all these. The saloon must go. We mean by that, all licensed places, and to attain that end the eighty organizations and churches in the league will make a united effort." This definition applies also to the American Anti-Saloon League, which is merely an enlargement of the local organization for the purpose of increasing its strength and influence, and its members hope that the time is not distant when no village will be without an Anti-Saloon League, unless it be so fortunate as to have no saloon.

Washington temperance people will be very glad if President-elect McKinley shall banish wine from the White House during his term, as Miss Francis Willard told the recent W. C. T. U. Convention that she had been reliably informed he would; but some of them fear that Miss Willard was misinformed, as Mr. McKinley when a member of Congress, although known as a temperate man, was not, according to those who claim to know, a total abstainer. Of course he may have since become such. Let us hope so, anyway.

Miss Clara Barton's report of her work among the Armenians is complete and a synopsis of it has already been published. The report goes into details intended more for the members of the Red Cross Society and those who contributed the money to send the relief than for the general public, but it is all highly interesting to humanitarians.

Working In the Vineyard.

In the vineyard of our Father
Daily work we find to do.
Scattered gleanings we may gather,
Though we are but young and few.
Little clusters
Help to fill the garners too.

Toiling early in the morning,
Catching moments through the day,
Nothing small or lowly scorning,
While we work and watch and pray,
Gathering gladly
Free will offerings by the way—

Not for selfish praise or glory,
Not for objects nothing worth,
But to send the blessed story
Of the gospel o'er the earth,
Telling mortals
Of our Lord and Saviour's birth.

Up and ever at our calling
Till in death our lips are dumb
Or till, sin's dominion falling,
Christ shall in his kingdom come
And his children
Reach their everlasting home.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 6. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

Topic.—How to strengthen our faith in Christianity.—Mark ix, 14-29.

Christianity deals not only with the seen, but the unseen. It concerns itself both with the present and the future life, with natural powers and with supernatural as well. It is pre-eminently a faith religion, and where faith in the unseen and the supernatural is demanded there is a probability of doubt and skepticism at some time and under some circumstances. The three disciples who had been with Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration are questioning in the context of our lesson the future life. In the lesson itself the other disciples, the multitude and the father of the demoniac boy are questioning supernatural power—a picture of universal doubt.

Doubt being possible and probable, from the very character of Christianity, faith often needs a tonic, something to brace it up and make it substantial and effective. What will do this?

1. Knowledge strengthens faith. Increased knowledge gives increased faith. The more we know about a truly worthy man or cause the more we believe in them. This is particularly true of Christ and Christianity. Ignorance breeds doubt; unbelief, skepticism. Knowledge strengthens faith. When John the Baptist, in doubt and despondency, while in prison, sent his disciples to Christ with the question, "Art Thou the Messiah?" Christ told them to tell John what they heard and saw. He told them to give John knowledge, knowing knowledge would increase his faith. If our faith wavers, let us study the Bible, study history, and our faith will be strengthened thereby.

2. Obedience strengthens faith. In John vii, 17, Jesus says, "If any man will do His will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." The original means "he shall come to know" of the teaching whether it be of God. The teaching referred to is that of Christ, of Christianity. Christ means this: If a man doubts the divinity of his teachings, let him obey in spite of his doubt and by his obedience he will come to know and thus have his doubt removed. These words rescued a noble English lady from worldliness and saved her to Christ and the church. She doubted. These words came to her mind. She obeyed and found by obedience that doubt was transformed into substantial faith. Obedience is a splendid tonic for weak faith.

3. Prayer strengthens faith. Faith comes from God. Paul says, "It (faith) is the gift of God." God gives His gifts in answer to prayer. The father of the demoniac boy prayed, "Lord I believe; help thou mine unbelief," my lack of belief. This is a good prayer for all who want and need to have their faith strengthened.

Bible Readings.—Math. xi, 1-5; Mark xi, 21-26; John vii, 17; xvii, 20; Acts viii, 12; Rom. xii, 3; x, 14-19; I Cor. ii, 4, 5; xii, 9; Eph. ii, 8; Col. i, 21-23; I Thess. i, 2, 3; Heb. xi, 1-6; xii, 1, 2; II Tim. iii, 14, 15; iv, 7-10; I John iii, 23-24; v, 4, 5; Jas. ii, 18-26.

Seed Corn.

Regarding the money spent in attending great Christian gatherings like that of the Christian Endeavor society the editor of The Watchman wisely says that it "is not necessarily diverted from Christian benevolence. On the contrary, it is seed corn and stimulates interest and generosity in supporting all Christian enterprises. Let the people who spend so many thousands or hundreds of thousands in going to the great religious conventions stay at home and see if the missionary societies receive as much as they do now plus the car fare and board bills that have been saved by staying at home."

"I Am Reckoning on Thee."

Oftentimes I have gone to God in dire need, aggravated by nervous depression and heartsickness, and said: "My faith is flickering out. Its hand seems paralyzed, its eye blinded, its old glad song silenced forever. But Thou art faithful, and I am reckoning on Thee!" The soul loves to go behind the promises of God to Himself who made them, as the wife needs not quote the pledges made by her husband in the marriage service when she is sure of him and feels the pressure of his hand.—F. B. Meyer.

Raise the Fallen.

Oh, for more loving, earnest, Christ inspired hearts to raise the fallen, to point the straying ones into the straight path and to save the degraded ones from their misery! In so many cases the root of all trouble is sin and drunkenness, and if the heart was changed and God's power came into the life a new ambition would help into a newer, better, happier life.—Mrs. Ballington Booth in Universalist.

The Highest of All.

In real friendship there is always the knitting of soul to soul, the exchange of heart for heart. The highest of all examples of friendship is to be found in Jesus, and His behavior is the mirror in which all true friendship must see and measure itself.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

The San Francisco convention fund has all been subscribed.

Get for your president this year one who will preside—a leader, not a follower.

Do not some of your older members need to swarm off into a Senior society, or some of your Juniors into an Intermediate society?

Indiana is planning to lay particular stress upon good literature work during this year. Reading circles, denominational when possible, are to be urged upon every society. A wise plan is that.

Said a floating Endeavorer, returning to his Boston society: "I have been away at sea two years. I am glad to hear my name read at the roll call and to know that it has been called every month during my absence."

The Impulsive Woman.

If a thoughtful woman were asked, What is the greatest curse of your sex? she might well answer "Impulse." It is responsible for almost all the mistakes made by the good hearted among us. May it not be safely said that a few minutes' thought before speech or action would prevent most fatal blunders? Many of us are in positive bondage to our birdlike quickness to feel, to show our feeling, to retort or to respond. If we are hurt, we must immediately "give ourselves away," as the phrase runs, if not by bitter speech, at least by look and manner. Yet reflection frequently brings the keenest regret for the lost dignity, the betrayed secret. Many a one has wrecked her own happiness for the want of the patient stoicism which would have led her to stand aside for awhile watching events until they brought with them her opportunity.

Even when we are happy, it is not always well to let the bright stream bear us away rudderless. The impulsive manifestation of affection, the hasty proposal of marriage, the hastier acceptance, have they never proved the beginnings of misery, or has a rash word never sundered true lovers, true friends? If these things are true, it is likewise true that the fault in the commencement has been that of feminine impulsiveness. The defect is a generous one, and therefore commoner with us than it is with men, so that it handicaps us unfairly in the struggle of life. And truly it is a weary task to be always "with a host of petty maxims preaching down" one's heart. But we must do it. Either we must rule feeling or feeling will rule us. It is a good servant, but a bad master. Our loving women's hearts are like the fire of the domestic hearth—the light of the home when duly controlled, warming the whole house. But if the fire be not kept in its subordinate place, what a conflagration ensues!—Philadelphia Times.

Woman In Pagan Times.

I had heard so many times, both in and out of the pulpit, says a Forum writer, that woman owed to Christianity her social elevation and the amelioration of her lot that I had come to accept it as a truism. At all events, it had never occurred to me to question the postulate until one day I read in "The Germania" of Tacitus that among the ancient Teutons a kind of sanctity seemed to pertain to women. Truly remarkable, considering the time when it was written, is the statement that the German women were not permitted to regard themselves as standing outside the world belonging to the men, nor were they unconcerned in their warlike pursuits. If the above statement of Tacitus is to be trusted, I am inclined to believe that the Germans, amid all the rudeness of a pastoral and militant life, possessed elements of a higher civilization than the fastidious and overrefined Romans. The chief evidence of this superiority is, I think, to be found in their attitude toward women. Among the ancient Germans apparently men conceded all that women demanded. There is to me something very noble in the comradeship of husband and wife which appears to have existed among these rude and hardy warriors—a comradeship half resembling that of boys and girl before the consciousness of sex has markedly differentiated them. Not even from the tribal council were women excluded. Tacitus expressly states that they were attentively listened to and that their advice was never left unheeded.

Taking Off Weight.

Spasmodic efforts to reduce one's weight are of little use. You must take a brisk walk—not a saunter, mind—every day, increasing the distance gradually if you are easily tired at first.

Sleep on a mattress and take care that your bedroom is well ventilated. Get up early enough to take a turn in the fresh air before breakfast if you have no active household duty to perform. Before sitting down to breakfast drink half a glass of hot water with lemon juice in it.

Take a bath every morning, hot or cold, whichever suits you best, and then rub the body vigorously with fairly rough towels until the skin is in a healthy glow. It is of the utmost importance to keep the skin in good condition; otherwise the pores become clogged, and the more or less perceptible perspiration which is always going on is impeded.

Turkish baths, if you can get them, are the greatest possible help, but remember not to expose yourself to cold immediately afterward without sufficient protective clothing.

Then about corsets. Whatever you do, don't attempt to reduce your apparent size by tight lacing. Let your corsets be a support to the figure; no more. An unduly small waist in proportion to the rest of the body is a deformity and only makes the corpulence which it is meant to disguise more noticeable.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Handsome Table Mats.

Some handsome new mats to place under the jardinieres kept on polished tables are squares of white china silk with a border of plush about a finger wide. These mats are made over a stiff foundation of crinoline or canvas, covered with a layer of cotton and lined at the back with silk of a contrasting color. For instance, one of those seen, which is in a room where there is much green of various shades, has a border of olive plush and is covered at the back with olive china silk. The center of white china silk is covered with an all over pattern of flowers of about the size of a 25 cent piece. These flowers are outlined in coarse green embroidery silk. On the mat was a green jardiniere, holding a palm. The plant was placed on a Turkish coffee table of mahogany. These low tables are much used in all kinds of wood for holding a single plant. In a room with a different coloring the mat could be made of white and dark or old blue or of raspberry color and white. A spread made for a large mahogany dining table is a larger square of this kind, so that when laid on the table it leaves the corners bare. It has a border of apple green satin.—New York Post.

Religion In Boys' Schools.

There is a boys' school in Pennsylvania with 800 inmates, and the only religious services held in connection therewith are the Christian Endeavor meetings. This society was formed by the boys themselves. It exerts a great influence in the school.

Useful and Elegant.

An apron which can be made longer should come quite to the edge of the skirt and will be found suitable for cooking, dusting or painting. It may be cut out of cotton or holland and will take from four to five yards of zephyr. There is a swiss waistband, with the fullness gathered on to it. The bib has small turned down revers and braces over the shoulders, all trimmed with narrow white braid. This braid may, however, be omitted, as it takes ten yards. The skirt must be made ample, so as to well cover the dress beneath.

A useful addition to this apron is a pair of full bishop sleeves. These are made separately, gathered at the top on to elastic, and so keep the dress sleeves nice. There are small close cuffs that button at the wrist. With such an apron, the freshest costume may be kept unspotted during the performance of household tasks.

Jean Ingelow.

Miss Jean Ingelow may now be said to be the most popular of the English poets in the world. She is a quiet, shy looking lady of 63 years of age and inhabits a pretty house in London, where those who take the trouble to seek her out receive always a kind and cordial reception. Like most true poets, she has a very accurate mind and has a horror of untidy or slipshod ways. She still works hard and finds her greatest relaxation in the study of botany. Her kindness of heart has become proverbial, for three times a week she gives what she calls a copyright dinner to 12 poor persons just discharged from the hospitals. Although not a frequent visitor to fashionable drawing rooms, Miss Ingelow has an immense circle of friends, both known and unknown.—Pearson's Weekly.

Gilding the Chains.

A new type of new woman has appeared in London. When a man offered her a seat in a car the other day, she refused it, saying: "Indeed, no. This so called politeness on the part of mankind is only the gilding of our chains. Men are polite because they think women inferior to them. If they looked upon us as their equals, these stupid gallantries would cease."

Gold Teas.

Gold teas and gold dinners are the fashion of the hour. The china is white and gold, the flowers are yellow chrysanthemums or some other yellow blossom, the ices and icings to cakes are yellow, and, if a dinner, the name cards are large (pasteboard) goldpieces, representing our various coins in that metal.

An excellent substitute for potatoes at a dinner is rice cooked in milk and well salted, put into a dish and browned in the oven. Make a hot lemon sauce and pour it over the rice when it is taken from the oven and just before the dish is sent to the table.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

UNCLE PHIL'S STORY.

He Related It to the Boys For the Lesson It Taught.

"Tell us a story, Uncle Phil," said Rob and Archie, running to him.

"What about?" said Uncle Phil, as Rob climbed on his right knee and Archie on his left.

"Oh, about something that happened to you," said Rob.

"Something when you were a little boy," said Archie.

"Once when I was a little boy," said Uncle Phil, "I asked my mother to let Roy and myself go out and play by the river."

"Was Roy your brother?" asked Rob.

"No, but he was very fond of playing with me. My mother said yes, so we went and had a great deal of sport. After awhile I took a shingle for a boat and sailed it along the bank. At last it began to get into deep water, where I couldn't reach it with a stick. Then I told Roy to go and bring it to me. He almost always did what I told him, but this time he did not. I began scolding him, and he ran toward home.

"Then I was angry. I picked up a stone and threw it at him as hard as I could."

"Oh, Uncle Phil!" cried Archie.

"Just then Roy turned his head and it struck him."

"Oh, Uncle Phil," cried Rob.

"Yes, he gave a little cry and lay down on the ground.

"But I was still angry with him. I did not go to him, but waded into the water for my boat.

"But it was deeper than I thought. Before I knew it I was in a strong current. I screamed as it carried me down the stream, but no men were at hand to help me.

"But as I went down under the deep waters something took hold of me and dragged me toward shore. It was Roy. He saved my life."

"Good fellow. Was he your cousin?" asked Rob.

"No," replied Uncle Phil.

"What did you say to him?" asked Archie.

"I put my arms around the dear fellow's neck and cried and asked him to forgive me."

"What did he say?" asked Rob.

"He said, 'Bow, wow, wow!'"

"Why, who was Roy anyway?" asked Archie in great astonishment.

"He was my dog," said Uncle Phil, "the best dog I ever saw. I have never been unkind to a dog or to any other animal since, and I hope you will never be."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Queer Race.

I saw the queerest race today
Out at the county fair.
The riders all were tiny tots,
The racers all were rare.

I saw a little winsome maid
With flying yellow hair
Hold fast and ride around a ring
Upon a big brown bear.

Another one laughed loud in glee
And raced around the track,
And she was seated fearlessly
Upon a lion's back.

And one rode on a tiger fierce,
Another on a deer,
While others rode on prancing steeds
Without a sign of fear.

And round and round the track they rode,
All at a rapid pace,
And no one beat, though all tried hard
To win the funny race.

At last the racers came to rest,
The music ceased to sound,
And all the little tots went home
And left the merry go round.

Dolls From Every Land.

All the boys and girls of Tennessee are much interested just now in the handsome building which they are erecting for the centennial exposition to be held next spring at Nashville. All exhibits will be for children and by children, showing children's work. Children's organizations of the whole country are invited to contribute their ideas and valuable specimens of any sort. Little Miss Lizzie Pearcy, 13 years old, daughter of the United States consul at Colon, suggested a very unique idea, which is being carried out. She proposed writing to every United States consul at foreign ports of the world, over 300 in number, and asking them for some typical toy or doll belonging to that country. Responses have come by scores, and the collection of dolls promises to be a most surprising one and of great value. Some very valuable toys have already been received.

FACTS ABOUT ALCOHOL.

Taken Into a Healthy Body It Is Little Short of Poison.

Externally applied alcohol is an antiseptic and a disinfectant, though it is principally used as a local irritant, and by allowing it to evaporate as a cooling lotion to the skin. If the vapor is confined and penetrates to the flesh underneath, or if the alcohol is diligently rubbed into the flesh, it hardens it. In this way it is of use in preventing bedsores and the like.

Spirituous liniments which contain essential oils and other stimulants are sometimes applied with friction to increase nutrition at the place which is the seat of long standing inflammation, pain and stiffness, such as is present in chronic rheumatism, stiff joints and paralysis.

Internally the action of alcohol is both local and general. If allowed to come directly into contact with the walls of the stomach, it irritates them, causing them to assume an inflamed appearance. If the quantity of alcohol is large or more or less continuously applied, actual inflammation of the lining of the surface follows.

When alcohol is taken with food and mixes with the contents of the stomach, it is partly decomposed into substances which in turn decompose the gastric juices, rendering them inert, and thus depressing digestion. Whatever may sometimes be said in favor of the use of stimulants with meals, it is very doubtful if the slight temporary stimulating effect of such drinks is at all compensatory for their interference with the action of the gastric fluids.

Alcohol enters the blood unchanged and is distributed by it to the various organs and parts of the body, where it is rapidly absorbed and where its action is nearly the same as in the stomach.

It first stimulates the organ to increased activity, but at the same time causes the chemical change in the substance of the organ by which the organ itself is weakened, so that eventually depression ensues.

It is this peculiar double action of alcohol which is misleading. So long as the organs of the body are in a healthy condition alcohol is little short of a poison. The organ, in order to do its work properly, needs food, and unless there is interference the food will be absorbed and changed into proper forms of nourishment. Alcohol robs the organ of the power of doing this.

In these days of prepared foods and general advance in science there are many ways of securing the only beneficial result which alcohol gives—that is to say, stimulation—without resorting to its use.—Youth's Companion.

TWO BILLIONS FOR RUM.

That Is the Sum the Anglo-Saxon Race Pays Annually For Drink.

The figures which the British government gives of the drink bill of the United Kingdom is, it must be admitted, a "staggerer." There was spent there last year for liquors $712,070,000, or three times the value of the cotton crop of this country. Of this $203,500,000 went for spirits, $435,000,000 for malt liquors and $65,000,000 for wine. The average per inhabitant in England, that is, to every man, woman and child, was $19.40, making the family bill for liquor a cool $100. The Scotch average was only $14.70 per capita, and that of Ireland only $13.12.

This looks like a really bad showing, and it is somewhat of a surprise to learn that the English people are actually improving and drinking less liquor than of old. The consumption of spirits has decreased during the last decade from 1.190 gallons per capita to 0.988, that of wine from 0.542 gallons to 0.388, and that of beer from 31.55 gallons to 27.77. It is explained that this is due not so much to the growth of temperance sentiment as the hard times, the scarcity of work and low wages. The average Briton spends less money on drink only because he has less money to spend.

The American drink statistics are very similar to those of the United Kingdom. We are drinking less liquor than formerly, and for the same reasons as the English. Our tastes, however, are different, for we drink only half as much beer and 50 per cent more whisky. But, however it is considered, it is a rather big figure, something like $2,000,000,000 a year the Anglo-Saxon race is paying for alcohol.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Try Him Once More.

Poisoned by alcohol, blear eyed and illy clad,
Cursing his fate as he shuffles along,
Crushed and bereft of the once earnest will he had,
Penniless, homeless and jeered by the throng.
Friends have assisted him, pastors have prayed with him,
He has been rescued and lost o'er and o'er.
But do not give him up—pull from his lips the cup—
Speak to him kindly and try him once more.

Though 'tis disheartening never to thrive with him,
Sad his relapses from virtue and shame,
Give him not hopelessly up. If you strive with him,
Some spark of good may be fanned to a flame.
Some potent memory—haply a mother's voice,
Teaching him virtue and wisdom of yore—
May be recalled to his ear by another's voice.
Speak to him kindly and try him once more.

Christ in his charity taught those who came to him;
Ill deeds should be pardoned till seventy times seven;
Succor the least here, and you do the same to him—
These are his precepts on earth and in heaven.
Oh, then, when laboring hard for humanity,
Never believe that you labor in vain!
Kindness will conquer the drunkard's insanity.
Speak to him gently and try him again.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON XI, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 13.

Text of the Lesson, Prov. xxiii, 15-25. Memory Verses, 19-21 — Golden Text, Prov. xxiii, 21—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

15. "My son, if thine heart be wise, my heart shall rejoice—even mine." In listening to this father entreating his son we must think of our Heavenly Father entreating His children, for all the love of parents to children is but the faintest shadow of the love of our Father in heaven. As physically, so spiritually, the heart is everything, and without a healthy heart the body cannot have perfect health, so without a new heart we cannot have spiritual health. Out of the heart are the issues of life (Prov. iv, 23). Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh (Math. xii, 34). Out of the heart proceed evil thoughts and all uncleanness, for it is desperately wicked (Math. xv, 19; Jer. xvii, 10).

16. "Yea, my veins shall rejoice, when thy lips speak right things." The substance of our conversation indicates the condition of our heart, and if we thought of this we might be more careful of our words. The Lord looks upon the heart, and not only so, but upon the imagination of the thoughts of the heart (I Sam. xvi, 7; I Chron. xxviii, 9), and perhaps this may help us to understand "the veins." Parents may well rejoice in their inmost being when their children speak right things.

17. "Let not thine heart envy sinners, but be thou in the fear of the Lord all the day long." A new heart is a heart in which God dwells; it is put in us by God Himself that He alone may occupy it. It is a new spring to our actions, words and thoughts, a new motive for everything, even God working in us those things which are pleasing in His sight. Such a heart will not envy sinners, but will rejoice in the Lord alway, and, abiding in His love, satisfied with His goodness, will fear to grieve Him lest it lose this fellowship, which is heaven on earth.

18. "For surely there is an end, or reward, and thine expectation shall not be cut off." See this repeated in chapter xxiv, 14, and add Jer. xxix, 11, "I know the thoughts I think toward you," saith the Lord, "thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you an end and expectation." The expectation of the return of Christ, and the righteousness that shall then be seen, the wrongs that shall be righted, and the glory that shall be revealed, is the most helpful truth which I as a redeemed soul have ever seen. Do not the words "end," "reward," "expectation," all point to it? Well has it been written, "He that hath this hope in Him, purifieth himself even as He is pure" (I John iii, 3).

19. "Hear thou, my son, and be wise, and guide thine heart in the way." Our Lord said, "Be wise as serpents and harmless as doves" (Math. x, 16). And in Jas. iii, 17, we read of the nature of true wisdom, that it is "first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be intreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocricy." Surely this is none other than Christ Himself, and as to the way, there is none but He. He is wisdom, and He is the way, and Christ in us is the hope of glory, the glory which rectifies our life here and purifies from all uncleanness.

20. "Be not among wine bibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh." This sort of thing belongs to the wisdom of earth, which is sensual and devilish (Jas. iii, 15). The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost (Rom. xiv, 17). The word for the believer is "Be not drunk with wine, but be filled with the Spirit" (Eph. v, 18). Any method of reform short of that which looks to a new heart, a new fountain within, will prove unavailing. The old nature is incurably corrupt in the sight of God (Rom. viii, 7), and though it may be made moral and somewhat temperate, it never can enter the kingdom. Only that which is born from above can enter (John iii, 3, margin).

21. "For the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty, and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags." Whatever may become of the drunkard as to this life it is written that drunkards cannot inherit the kingdom (I Cor. vi, 10). As to the glutton he was, according to law, to be stoned with stones (Deut. xxi, 20, 21).

22. "Hearken unto thy father that begat thee and despise not thy mother when she is old." One would think such commands wholly unnecessary if we did not know the wickedness of the human heart, but God, who knows the heart, has written it. Let each one ask himself, "Am I clean before God in this matter?" Then how much more should we hearken to Him who has of His own will begotten us with the word of truth (Jas. i, 18), who pitieth like a father and comforts as a mother (Ps. ciii, 13; Isa. lxvi, 13), who says, "Incline your ear and come unto me, hear and your soul shall live" (Isa. lv, 3).

23. "Buy the truth and sell it not; also wisdom, instruction and understanding." Omitting the word "also," which is in italics, we learn that the truth is these three things, or that Jesus Christ, who is the truth, is the sum of all wisdom and understanding. Isa. lv, 1, says we can buy without money and without price. We certainly cannot in any sense give an equivalent for what we get as we do in ordinary buying and selling, but there is a giving up or laying down of our own thoughts and opinions that He may be our wisdom and our righteousness. "Lay thou thy treasure in the dust and the Almighty shall be thy treasure" (Job xxii, 24, 25, R. V.).

24. "The father of the righteous shall greatly rejoice, and he that begetteth a wise child shall have joy of him." Just as with earthly parents some children are a great joy and some are a great sorrow, so among the children of God some are a joy to Him and others a grief. We read of some who "rebelled and vexed His Holy Spirit" (Isa. lxiii, 10), and of some who must have the flesh destroyed by satan that the spirit may be saved, and of some whose works will be burned up and they saved as by fire (I Cor. v, 5; iii, 15).

25. "Thy father and thy mother shall be glad, and she that bare thee shall rejoice." Thus our lesson begins and ends with the joy of parents in wise children. We turn to Him of whom the Father said, "This is My Beloved Son in whom I am well pleased," and who could truthfully say Himself, "I do always those things that please Him," and of whom it is written that He never pleased Himself (Math. iii, 17; xvii, 5; John viii, 29; Rom. xv, 3), and we say, "Lord, make me as far as possible such a child to the Father as thou wast." If He sees that we mean it, He will take us in hand to subdue the self life and make manifest in us His own life, for He is able to subdue all things unto Himself (II Cor. iv, 11; Phil. iii, 21). We must be willing, and He will surely do it.

For wise men the joys of reading are life's crowning pleasures. Books are our universities, where souls are the professors. Books are the looms that weave rapidly man's inner garments. Books are the levelers—not by lowering the great, but by lifting up the small.

"The center of this author's philosophy is Jesus Christ. In whatever field of thought we find him, the tie of that gravitation is constantly perceptible, and he never fails to return from his excursions to the feet of his Master; he never fails to come back to that threshold bringing his sheaves with him; he does not fail to 'cast his trophies at his feet, and crown him Lord of all.' * * * * The volume itself is a storehouse of teaching for practical and spiritual life, set in unrivaled splendor of illustration and rhetoric, and always wrought into solid arches of logical reasoning."—The Interior.

Heather from the Brae.

ELECTRIC FARMS.

How the Current Can Be Supplied—Phases of Electric Farming.

The attention of inventors is being turned to the adaptation of electricity to farming. The procuring of power is the main obstacle. There are several methods of obtaining this power within the reach of any agriculturist. As currents have already been sent many miles, the spectacle is anticipated in the near future of an immense power plant in the center of a farming community supplying the current for every possible farm use. According to a writer in the Boston Globe, an artesian well may be made to produce enough electric power to operate every piece of machinery run on a farm. There are 1,000,000 windmills in operation in this country. Every one of these mills can be adapted to the generation of electric power for farm purposes. The practice is to operate a dynamo the armature of which is turned by the mill. Storage batteries collect the current and hold it in reserve during the days when there is little or no wind. It takes but little wind to generate a practicable electric current. It has often been suggested that the currents of rivers might be utilized for power purposes. This is already being done near Chicago. But, having secured his electric current by one method or another, the farmer will want to know what to do with it. In the west electricity is operating a 15 blade gangplow which will cut a furrow 6 feet wide. The blades revolve, and the plow is pulled across the field by means of a cable which passes around the drum of an electric motor on the plow. In New York state there is a trolley plow in operation. Wires are stretched along the edge of the field and carry current to a cross wire, which, as in the case of the plow mentioned above, passes around the drum of a motor. But in this case the motor is attached to the axle of the plow wheels and turns the latter with its own power. Current in this case is transmitted overland for some distance from the power house.

An electric plow has recently been tested near Chicago which will run in any direction and at any speed, irrespective of its surroundings. The current was obtained from a nearby trolley line. It can also be used in place of a traction engine for hauling machinery around the farm and with a driving pulley attached to the axle it will drive a thrashing machine. This same principle has also been applied to harrows, to seeders and to harvesting machines. An electric reaper has been operated on western wheatfields. Corn shellers also have been operated and propelled by the electric current.

So we may run down the list of electric churns, electric spading machines, electric hay lifts, electric tree fellers, electric fencemakers, electric forcing frames, electric irrigators, stock food boilers, sheep shearers, etc. There is a plan under way in one large abattoir to electrocute steers instead of killing them in the old fashioned way. There is a process for treating manure by electricity so as to increase its fertilizing properties. The remaining phase of electric farming, says the authority quoted, is that which covers the theory of the stimulation of plant growth by the use of electric light or by the direct application of the current.

Late Seeding With Timothy.

Wherever it is desired to permanently seed land for meadow or pasture timothy—and, in fact, all the grasses will succeed better if sown in fall, even though late, rather than in spring—we have sown timothy seed up to the time the ground freezes up and have had a better catch than could be got by spring seeding. There is some growth of timothy whenever an open spell of warm weather comes during the winter. If the ground is covered with deep snow, the timothy roots will make some growth under it.—American Cultivator.

For Grain Insects.

For insects in grain the remedy is bisulphide of carbon. It may be put in a deep dish inside the bin on top of the grain. Then close the bin and make it as nearly airtight as possible. The bisulphide of carbon will evaporate. The fumes are heavier than air and will sink all through the grain and kill the insects. In order to have these fumes effective the bin must be tight, so that no pure air can work in. Do not breathe the fumes and do not bring a flame of any sort near them.

At the Nevada Station.

At the Nevada station plats of wheat which received five applications of water gave as good yields as those which received eight, but on Irish potatoes those receiving six did much better than the ones receiving but five, and the corn plats receiving eight irrigations made double the yield of those which received but five.

MASONIC CHART.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;
3. The Egyptian Rite of 96 degrees.
4. The Mystic Shrine of one degree.
5. The Eastern Star of 5 degrees for Master Masons and for women. These are side degrees, and not genuine masonry.

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. In the Master Mason's degree is recognized the murder, burial and resurrection scene so full of religious significance to Freemasons.

HAS PLENTY OF WORK

CONGRESS WILL HAVE NEARLY 1.600 BILLS TO DISPOSE OF.

About a Thousand of Which, However, Are Private Affairs—Some Measures That Will Challenge and Obtain Attention—Pacific Railway Measure Is Urgent.

Washington, Nov. 30.—It is not probable that the house at the coming session of congress, which begins a week from today, can dispose of much of the proposed legislation which encumbers its calendars. Little is usually accomplished at the short session beyond the passage of the regular supply bills. The question of legislation for additional revenues for the government will depend on the senate, to which body the house sent the Dingley bill almost a year ago. Should it be impossible, or be deemed inexpedient, to press that measure through the senate there is of course a possibility that the proposal to increase the revenues by an additional tax on beer or the imposition of a duty on tea, coffee, etc., may take tangible form, and if so such legislation must originate in the lower branch of congress.

Nearly 1,500 Bills on the Calendar.

There are on the several calendars of the house 1,465 bills reported from the various committees, and the proportion which will pass at the coming session must be necessarily almost infinitesimal. Most of them are private bills (of which there are 1,100), but three are also 256 bills on the calendar on the state of the union and ninety-nine public bills on the regular house calendar. Some of these are of very great public importance, and those interested will no doubt do all in their power to secure action upon them. The powers lodged in the hands of the committee on rules, which give the members of that committee control of the house programme, will make that committee the practical arbiter of what shall be submitted to the house for its action.

Important Bills on the List.

The bill which in many respects is fraught at this time with most interest and which will press hardest for consideration is the Pacific railroad funding bill. The bonds guaranteed by the government are payable early in the coming year, and either an extension or foreclosure stares the roads in the face. For eight years funding bills have occupied a good share of the attention of congress. The war claims committee promises to renew its aggressiveness for the passage of the claims awarded under the Bowman act and the French spoliation claims. These claims, the former amounting to $562,459 and the latter to $2,708,196, were put on the sundrycivil bill at the last session as a rider of the senate, but the bill was vetoed by the president and they were then dropped.

Of Interest to the Newspapers.

The bill to cure the abuses of the law relating to second-class matter, by which newspaper matter is transmitted at one cent per pound and which has been the subject of much cirticism of the post-office department because of the advantage taken of the law in various ways for the transmission of books and pamphlets, will also be pressed. Among theother bills are the Wadsworth bill for the creation of a bureau of animal industry for the inspection of meat and the regulation of the transportation of live stock, the immigration bill, the Chickering bill for ascertaining the feasibility and cost of a ship canal from the great lakes to the Hudson, and several important public land bills.

REPORT OF TREASURER MORGAN.

Foots Up a Deficit of More Than Twenty-Five Million Dollars.

Washington, Nov. 30.—The annual report of Daniel N. Morgan, treasurer of the United States, shows the net ordinary revenues of the government during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1896, to have been $326,976,200 and the expenditures $352,179,446, leaving a deficiency for the year of $25,203,246, or $17,601,977 less than during the preceding fiscal year. The report shows that during the last fiscal year there was an increase of $7,863,134 in the receipts from customs, $3,341,,192 from internal revenue sources and $2,479,622 from miscellaneous sources, and a loss of $97,823 from the sale of public lands, making the net increase in the receipts $13,586,125. The decrease in the expeditures amounted to $4,015,852.

After giving in detail theamounts realized from the different sales of bonds, the total amount of bonds being $262,315,400 and the total receipts $294,164,295, he proceeds: "While the cash balance in the treasury has afforded a comfortable working fund, and would have done so without augmentation from loans, the gold reserve has been the cause of much concern, and has been maintained only at the cost of a fresh issue of bonds and by the voluntary contributions of banks and financial institutions. With the excention of a brief period in the autumn of 1895 and another in the spring of 1896 the ruling rates of foreign exchange were such throughout the year as to permit, if not require, the export of gold. The movement began in volume the first week in August and continued with a short interruption till toward the end of January.

"At first the demands upon the treasury for gold were limited to the wants of exporters, but in December considerable withdrawals began to be made by others, the amount increasing during January and rising in February, when heavy payments were made into the treasury for bonds, to nearly $20,000,000 for the month. Under this drain the reserve gradually sank until Feb. 10, 1896, when it stood at $44,563,493. It was then rapidly built up from the proceeds of the sale of bonds and rose to $128,713,709 by March 31. After inconsiderable variations in the reserve during April the export of gold was resumed on May 1, and this movement, together with the continued withdrawals not for export, again put in operation the process of depletion. There was an almost daily decline until July 23, when the official figures for the reserve were $89,669,975.

"At this point the bankers of the principal cities joined together in a movement of relief, the result being that the banks and financial institutions deposited gold in exchange for paper currency and restored the reserve to $110,782,403 by Aug. 4. After the discontinuance of these operations the free gold again declined gradually to $100,157,561, where it stood on Sept. 1. In the latter half of August there occurred a favorable turn in foreign exchange, which had the effect, first, of checking the outflow of gold, and later, of setting in motion a rapid current in the opposite direction.

"As some of the imported material was brought for the purpose of supplying the inland demand ofr currency, and as the preference which was manifested in the interior for gold had not yet become a factor in the situation, a great part of the early inflow found its way into the treasury in exchange for paper. * * * In the fifteen months ended with September last the withdrawals of gold from the treasury in redemption United States notes and treasury notes amounted to the immense sum of $192,972,205, while the net gains of gold from all sources attained a total of $98,138,902."

The public debt outstanding June 30, 1896, is shown to have been $1,769,840,323, and on June 30, 1895, $1,676,120,983. According to the revised estimates of the department the total monetary stock on June 30, 1896, was $2,348,338,571, as compared with $2,348,338,571 on June 30, 1895. Since the close of the fiscal year this loss has been fully recovered, chiefly by the importation of gold.

The natural and sure antidote of darkness is light; of error, truth.

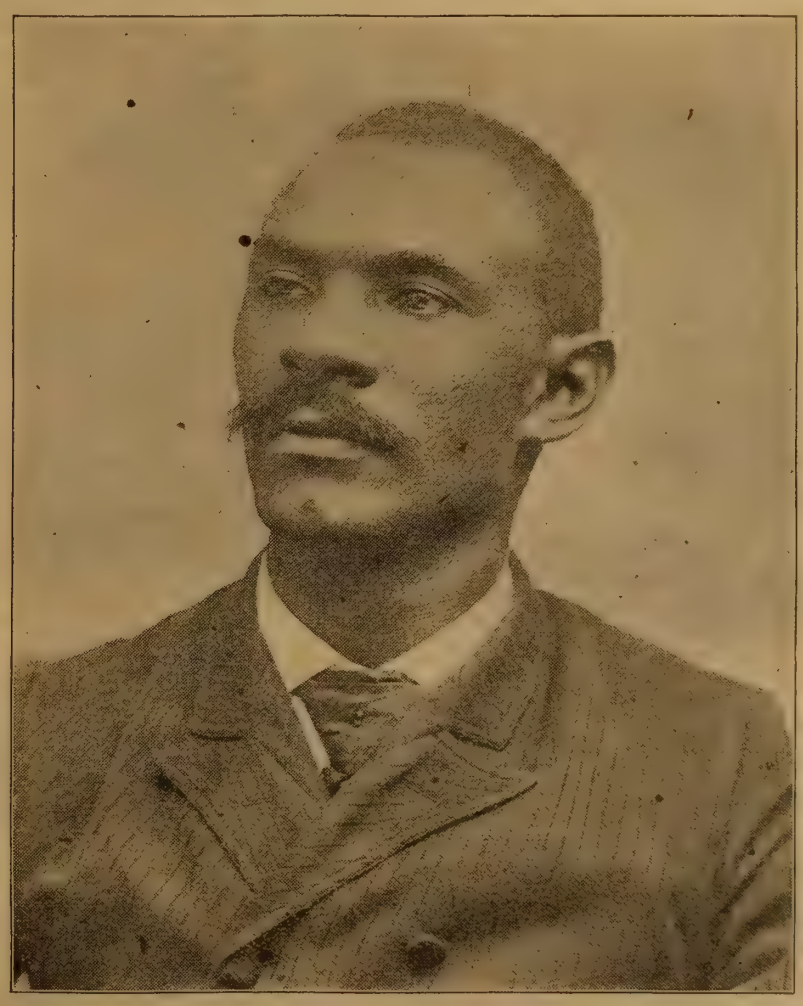
Poisoned arrows may fail to kill enemies, and they surely will not win allies.

If your aim is to bring a member of a lodge to think about its principles with candor, be sure yourself to candidly deal with facts, rather than turn aside to asperse motives.

If proof were needed that Jesus' name cannot lawfully be spoken in the lodge, it could be found in the resignation of an Odd-fellow Chaplain, who, when the matter took the form of a Grand Lodge decision handed down to subordinate lodges, resigned, giving this and no other reason for his resignation, which under this understanding was accepted.

It is not brotherly love, nor is it charity to conduct a life insurance or health insurance business. Giving lodge dues in the hope of receiving as much again, is possible even to the publicans. Every life or fire insurance company manages similar charity, if it can be called by such a name. This is different from Christian giving, and falls far short of the example of the Good Samaritan.

The Cuban rebellion grows more formidable and sanguinary. Spain has since it began sent 226,000 soldiers to Cuba to hold it as one of their provinces. In battle and by sickness they have lost many times more than the rebels, and cannot now muster more than 150,000. The Insurgents or rebels comprise ex-slaves, Creoles and a sprinkling of Americans, who are acting as leaders. They have not mustered more than 35,000, and yet intrenched in the mountain fastnesses they shout defiance at their enemies. The cause of the rebellion was oppressive taxation without representation. The newspapers have stated that Spain's share of the cost of poor Maximillian's expedition to found a Catholic empire in Mexico was saddled upon Cuba. Doubtless a heavy pressure will be brought to bear upon Mr. McKinley to reorganize the Insurgents, and the justness of their cause.



REV. FRANCIS JAMES DAVIDSON.

The above portrait is of the pastor of St. Matthew's Baptist church, the only anti-secret anti-rum colored church in New Orleans. He was born Oct. 31, 1858, and received his early education at Greenwood, Miss. He attended night school at Straight University and theological lectures at Leland University. He is thoroughly devoted to the anti-secret reform and spent several years in N. C. A. work in the South, doing effective work for the cause. He is now editor of the Tribune, the official organ of 125,000 Louisiana Baptists.

Bro. F. J. Davidson, as might be expected in the lodge-cursed city of New Orleans, has had to encounter very bitter and powerful opposition in his church and reform work. The cut on our thirteenth page is an exact likeness of his new brick church, and from the subjoined sketch our readers can see its phenominal success in the face of great difficulties. Starting with a membership of thirteen and without a dollar in 1889, they, through the liberality of a philanthropic friend in Illinois, purchased lots and built their first church. It was reduced to ashes by an incendiary soon after its completion; and last July Bro Davidson's home was burned also by an incendiary. The congregation has grown to 100 members. Their persecution and loss has doubtless been because of their loyalty to Christ, and this should induce the friends of reform everywhere to respond to their appeal for aid.

In the settlement of our vast domain, thousands of communities have sprung up, into which people have gathered of all races and from all lands. What were at first mere aggregations of human beings most heterogeneous in character, are being transformed into social organisms, each having a life which may live on for many centuries, with boundless possibilities of good and evil to generations yet unborn. This process of transformation involves the creation of new moral obligations, which need to be defined and enforced by the churches.

The New York Recorder says an old man behind the bar of the Metropole hotel in that city, named Sharp, is an expert in mixing drinks. In the days of 1865, he was brewing drinks at the bar of the Metropolitan hotel in Washington. Its bar-room was then the resort of John Wilkes Booth and other actors of Washington. Sharp says that on the night of Friday, April 14, 1865, Booth came in about half tight, ordered a cocktail, and drank it off. Another actor named Thomas was soliciting him to buy a play that he had written. Booth said impatiently, "Oh, don't bother me; I've got something more important to think of." Forty-five minutes afterward Washington was startled by the news of the assassination of Lincoln. Thus it is now proved that this crime which plunged the nation into mourning was inspired by liquor.

The Hon. W. J. Bryan, the daily press said, came home from his hunting expedition in Missouri, some weeks ago, on a Sunday train. It should be a matter of grief when such public men thus throw their influence against God's moral law. Every Christian citizen should refuse to cast a ballot for any candidate who violates God's law of the Sabbath.

The Christian Statesman rightly protests against the Presbyterian Ministers' Association of Pittsburgh, who tabled a resolution condemning the practice of church people attending football games on Thanksgiving day. It appears that in a Pennsylvania college town a union Thanksgiving service was held at an early hour to permit the church members to attend the football game. This reminds us of a New England town whose pastors held their preaching service at an early hour to enable the bicyclists to take their Sunday rides.

MOURN FOR THE THOUSANDS SLAIN.

BY REV. S. G. BRACE.

Mourn for the thousands slain,
The youthful and the strong;
Mourn for the wine-cup's fearful reign,
And the deluded throng.

Mourn for the tarnished gem—
For reason's light divine,
Quenched from the soul's bright diadem,
Where God had bid it shine.

Mourn for the ruined soul—
Eternal life and light
Lost by the fiery, maddening bowl,
And turned to hopeless night.

Mourn for the lost—but call,
Call to the strong, the free;
Rouse them to shun that dreadful fall,
And to the refuge flee.

Mourn for the lost—but pray,
Pray to our God above,
To break the fell destroyer's sway,
And show His saving love.

"Lift up the fallen from the dust,
Thy brother's sinking soul sustain;
Tell him in whom the wretched trust,
When all the help of man is vain."

RONAYNE'S REPLY TO CRITICISM.

The pastor of the M. E. church at Hanover, Mich., Rev. O. H. Perry, received a letter from a Masonic friend in Pennsylvania, to whom he had sent the Lodge Lamp containing Past Master Ronayne's discussion of Masonic oaths. Bro. Perry sent the letter to Mr. Ronayne with a request that he write a reply. The following is the letter and Mr. Ronayne's reply:

THE LETTER.

I received your two copies of the Lodge Lamp. I have read them both, and must say I am thoroughly disgusted. No doubt your worthy brother Past Master knows all about Masonry. I think very little of him, or any one else who can't find better employment. If he is dissatisfied with it he has a right to quit it, but no legal or moral right before God or man to violate his oath given in good faith and administered to others as well, unless he has better reasons than appear on the surface. Of course I have no right to judge another; but I say to you, I should just as soon fellowship with a snake as with this man. Masonry is not perfect. What is?

Don't you know that Bob Ingersoll makes as good a case against the church as this man does against Masonry? I am not going to get into a quarrel with you about Masonry, but I am going to say that in my judgment Edmond Ronayne is a crank, who is more concerned about doing Masonry an injury than in doing humanity a benefit; and I want to say that his present course will result in neither. The secrets of Masonry may be published broadcast to the world, and it will not destroy the order. It is not necessary to deny or affirm this man's noise. He, like we, is "born of woman and full of trouble"—enough of it, at all events, without borrowing it unnecessarily. If his highest ambition is to do good, he can find better channels and wider to work in, I imagine, than the one he seems in at present. All he wants is somebody to "argify" with. If everyone would pay no more attention to him than he is justly entitled to, I don't imagine he will set Lake Michigan on fire, do you?

REPLY.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am in receipt of the above letter; and, as it is the desire that it should appear in the Cynosure, I herewith send it to you with my reply:

The gentleman who sent me this letter informs me that the writer thereof is a Christian; and if so I am deeply sorry; not sorry of course that he is a Christian, but sorry that he don't manifest a little more of that spirit of Christ which surely every Christian ought to possess. He is evidently very bitter against me because he claims I violated my Masonic oath "given in good faith and administered to others as well," but to this accusation I must at once enter my firm and absolute denial. I have never to my knowledge violated any oath of Freemasonry, much less the oath of an Entered Apprentice, or that which really makes a man a Mason.

True, I took the Masonic oath voluntarily both first and last, but not before the Worshipful Master made a solemn oath to me that the oath I was about to take contained nothing, and required nothing which could in any way "conflict with my duty to God, my country, my neighbor, my family or myself." But what is the fact? That solemn oath given by the Master is false and untrue from start to finish, and when giving it he knows it to be untrue. The Master Mason is sworn "to conform to and abide by all the laws, rules and regulations of the Master Mason's degree," but one of those laws, and the principal one, is that the name of Christ must be "carefully excluded" from every part of the Masonic ritual. He must on no account be recognized in "Ancient Masonry." Is that in accordance with one's duty to God? John 5: 23.

Again, the Master Mason is sworn to immediately fly to the relief of a brother giving the grand hailing sign of distress, and to keep his secrets inviolable; but how can he conform to this part of his Masonic oath and honestly and truly perform his duty as a witness in a court when a Mason is on trial, or render a true and honest verdict as a juryman? When Masonry keeps its solemn and sacred pledge to the candidate, then it will be time enough to condemn the candidate for not keeping his pledge to Masonry. If the party of the first part violates his part of the covenant, surely according to every rule of law and justice the party of the second part is fully absolved from the performance of his.

But again: By what legal right does the Master of a Masonic lodge administer an oath? Who authorizes him to do so? or has he any more legal authority than any man would have if connected with a gang for any purpose whatever? Take for instance a gang of train wreckers; they are bound together by an oath; but has the Master of a Masonic lodge any more authority to administer an oath than has the leader of that gang? Surely not. And is a Masonic oath any more valid or any more binding than a mock marriage performed by a bogus justice of the peace or a pretended minister? Is the woman lured into a mock marriage bound to stand by her solemn pledge given under the supposition that everything is square?

But now once more, let it be remembered that joining a Masonic lodge is a mere matter of business—a matter of bargain and sale. Freemasonry claims to have "secrets and hidden mysteries" for sale, and established lodges in order to sell those "hidden mysteries;" and when a man becomes a Mason he simply buys what he is solemnly assured are "hidden mysteries," paying down his money for them; but what are the facts? The whole transaction is fraudulent. Masonry has no secrets or "hidden mysteries" whatever to dispose of, and it is simply obtaining money under false pretences. I certainly swore, after hearing the Master's solemn declaration above alluded to, that I would "ever conceal and never reveal any part or parts of the hidden mysteries of ancient Freemasonry;" but I never received any secrets or hidden mysteries, and consequently could neither "conceal nor reveal" them, and hence could not and did not, in renouncing Masonry, violate any oath. I received a lot of stuff delivered to me orally which I soon discovered was published in books and magazines and pamphlets, and from any of which I could more easily and far more readily learn the very same thing, and then have it more correctly; but as for "hidden mysteries" in the possession of Freemasons, the bare idea is too absurd and ridiculous.

Richard Carlisle of London, England, a man even who never was initiated as a Mason, published in a magazine, The Independent, in 1825, and afterwards in book form, every word, letter and syllable of those pretended "hidden mysteries" and secrets, and every lodge under the jurisdiction of the United Grand Lodge of England and Ireland, and also in the British colonies, is working according to that book to-day. Here in the United States they have been printed and published time and again during the last seventy-five years or more; and where then, may I ask, are the secrets or "hidden mysteries?" And is it not the very climax of dishonesty for grand lodges, and Masters of lodges, to pretend that they have secrets for sale when they know they have not?

But look at the death penalty attached to this Masonic oath: "binding myself under no less a penalty than that of having my throat cut across and my tongue torn out by its roots." Now if this penalty is inflicted, what is it? Surely it is assassination; and if not inflicted, then what? Then the Masonic oath is a blasphemy; and yet the Master of the lodge declares solemnly that there is nothing in this oath conflicting with duty to God or man. Leave the works of darkness, the Mason says, if you will, but keep silent about them. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove or expose them," says the apostle. Which ought we obey?

E. RONAYNE.

MASONRY IN COURT.

Unwhipped of justice, there walks the streets of our lodge-cursed town a citizen of place, church and "frater" respectability who, were it not for the shield of my caption interposed, would now be decked with the regalia of the Ohio State Prison. Notwithstanding the rush to his aid, of preachers, professors and D. D.s, swearing Masonically in his favor, he stood in the eyes of all a criminal, convicted by his own books, guilty of embezzlement to the amount of about $1,000.

And now comes his Masonic judge, member of a Christian church, to his rescue. I brief his charge to the jury: 'Gentlemen, it is in evidence that the defendant collected, as agent, money belonging to the plaintiff, and deposited the same in bank, subject to defendant's order; and that such money has been withdrawn by defendant's order, retained by himself for his own use, which amount the plaintiff in this case seeks to recover from the defendant. Now, gentlemen, if it appears in evidence that the defendant deposited the plaintiff's funds separate from his own individual deposits, and has drawn and used them for his own benefit, and not paid such collections over to the plaintiff, you will find him guilty, as charged in the indictment. But if you find that the defendant deposited said funds of the plaintiff with his [the defendant's] own money, without distinction, and drew such mixed funds from the bank as his own, and so used them, the act does not constitute the crime of embezzlement."

As the money had been "mixed" the jury, in keeping with the charge, found "not guilty," and the plaintiff lost his $1,000, with the addenda of lawyers' fees and other expenses incident. So now it appears that all an embezzling agent has to do in order to escape from justice is to "mix" in deposit his own with the funds of his principal's, and steal by bank order at his convenience. And now my soul bursts out into song of—

Hail, Masonry divine;
Glory of ages shine;
Long may'st thou reign!
Where'er thy lodges stand,
May they have great command,
And always grace the land.
Thou art divine!

HIRAM ABIFF.

PENNSYLVANIA ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION.

HELD AT OAKS, NOV. 18, 19—INTERESTING REPORT BY THE SECRETARY—STRONG RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED—STIRRING ADDRESSES.

On Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 18th, the convention was opened with devotional exercises led by State President Rev. J. C. McFeeters, who read portions of Scripture and led in prayer. The secretary of the State organization not being present, Rev. A. M. Fretz, of Souderton, was elected secretary pro tem. The convention was then welcomed by a hearty address from the pastor of the church in which it met, Rev. J. T. Meyers, who referred to the evils of secret societies, and the need of the churches awakening to combat them. Though many churches are permeated through and through with this poison, yet, thank God, Christianity, true Christianity, is still untrammeled. Let us, in these two days before us, put ourselves in unmistakable opposition to secret orders.

Pres. McFeeters in replying to the address of welcome said it was just what we naturally expected after being so cordially invited to come to Oaks to hold this convention. The National Christian Association is not always welcome. It is sometimes liks Noah's dove, that had to fly long and far and not find a resting place. But that dove at last found an olive tree; so this Christian Association in this instance found a green tree. Green Tree Brethren church was the name of the church in which we met. He said we have come to enlighten; not you, for you show that you have the light. There are two classes who need enlightenment: First, those in the lodge; second, those about going in. We want to catch the great electric current and throw it upon the lodge system; that light which comes from the Lord. We come peaceably. It is our privilege to disseminate these principles in the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ; yet the truth must be declared, and if it cause strife it will be for the purifying of society.

We come with a good confidence. It is the cause of Him who said, "In secret have I said nothing." We are apparently weak in comparison with the large secret organizations, but we are not weak; it is the cause of God. We are in a world where truth and right shall prevail; hence we are not waging a forlorn battle.

Rev. W. B. Stoddard, agent of the eastern department of N. C. A., then read some twenty odd letters of persons who sympathize in the cause, expressing their convictionss in opposition to the lodge system and their regret at not being able to be at the convention. A number of the communications were accompanied with contributions toward the expenses of the convention.

The Rev. Stephen Merritt not being present to lead in the seceders' testimony service, Mr. Anderson of Camden, N. J., led in the service. The speaker when still a young man was told that only Christians could belong to the Freemasons. In this way he was induced to join the lodge, but found it quite different; with professional Christians he found gamblers, rumsellers, etc. He was unconverted then, but when he became a Christian he saw the deception of the lodge and left it. It seems so strange to him that Gospel ministers can belong to such a system of fraud and devilish deception and false religion. Mr. Anderson had also belonged to the Odd-fellows and found them wearing the same Satanic impress. A few others bore testimony to the same facts. The venerable Rev. J. P. Stoddard made a few impressive remarks.

At the evening session devotional exercises were led by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, who read Hebrews 4, with appropriate comments, and led in prayer. We had an excellent selection of music by local talent. Rev. J. C. McFeeters then gave us a soul-stirring address on "Secret Societies vs. the Republic." This address, as well as the others, are to be published in the Cynosure. Let the readers look for these addresses.

We next had an address of which every sentence had the weight of pure gold by the Rev. James Parker, of Jersey City. Subject: "The Soul Blight of the Lodge." He said in substance: Sin always and everywhere blights the soul. While every form of sin does this, there are some forms which are more destructive than others. The appeal to join the lodge is selfishness. Selfishness is the very basal stone of the lodge system. The initiation in a lodge unmans the man. It makes light of sacred things. The lodge associations are wicked. It brings good men in partnership with evil. The practical workings of the lodge are evil. Its moral teachings are deceptive. Its worship is its most deadly feature. At the conclusion the speaker stated these two questions that he desired to answer. Can a man be a lodge member and a Christian? He said, I suppose he can, but he cannot be a good lodge member and a good Christian. He illustrated by plant life down in a dark, dingy cellar. The second question was, Will we succeed in this contest against the lodge? One Bible quotation will answer this question: "Every plant which my Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." The session closed with prayer.

Thursday morning Rev. James Parker led the opening prayer and conference service, which was followed by a season of prayer. Then we had a number of good testimonies in line with our work. James Parker said: "Lodgism debauches the conscience; many, even ministers, refuse to speak what they know to be the truth." Rev. W. B. Stoddard read an article in this morning's issue of one of the Philadelphia papers of the death of Edward W. Curry, of Iowa, resulting from injuries received during initiation in a lodge. One man who had been an American Mechanic spoke of the deception and wickedness in that order. The mystic chain was referred to where the members played Judas.

A. S. Shelly read the article adopted and placed in its constitution by the General Conference of Mennonites held at Newton, Kan., in October, declaring the position of that church on the secret society question. Rev. W. B. Stoddard read a few more letters. Then followed three addresses, occupying the balance of the forenoon session: "Lodge Oaths," by Rev. A. M. Fretz, of Souderton, Pa. "Why Are There Not More Young Men in our Churches?" by Rev. G. M. Falkenstein, of Germantown, Pa. "Freemasonry and the Bible," by Rev. J. H. Leiper, of Philadelphia, Pa. These addresses will appear in the Cynosure in due time. Rev. W. W. Barr closed the session with prayer.

At the afternoon session devotional services were led by Rev. W. S. Gottshall of Schwenksville, Pa. "Christians and the Minor Secret Societies" was the subject of an address by Rev. W. W. Barr, of Philadelphia. These are almost legion; though perhaps on the face not so heinous as the major societies. They are all alike in general principles and should be shunned. The committees on nominations reported as members of a State committee, Prof. J. M. Coleman of Beaver Falls, Rev. Kidd of Beaver Falls and Rev. J. S. Martin of New Castle. Officers: President, Rev. J. C. McFeeters; Vice-president, J. T. Myers; Secretary, Rev. R. H. Shaw; Treasurer, Edwin P. Sellew. Rev. W. J. Coleman was appointed as second vice-president.

The committee reported the following:

RESOLUTIONS.

1. Resolved, That all organized secrecy is rightly viewed with suspicion. Oath-bound secrecy has in itself a strong presumptive evidence of an evil purpose.

2. That secret societies are contrary to the teachings of our Lord Jesus Christ who said, "What I tell you in darkness, that speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops."

3. That because of their selfish character secret societies are contrary to the spirit of Christ He preached the Gospel to the poor, received the sick and the maimed and made his church a refuge for the oppressed.

4. That the Church of Christ, in bearing a faithful and consistent testimony against all evil, should refuse the privileges of her membership to persons belonging to such societies

5. That all organizations requiring, as a condition of entrance, an oath or promise of obedience to laws and superiors as yet unknown, are subversive of the rights of the individual conscience, contrary to the spirit of civil liberty and inimical to a government of free people.

6 That secret societies by occasioning favoritism in the election and appointment of officers, by aiding the formation of political rings and by obstructing the administration of justice are hostile to the interests of all good citizens and to the welfare of the state.

7. That the State should require her officers to be free from all connection with secret orders; should refuse to permit such societies to lay the corner stones of buildings erected and paid for by the public; should refuse them the privileges of corporate bodies, and should withdraw the charters already given.

8. That the State Secretary be requested to prepare and circulate a petition addressed to our State legislators at Harrisburg to accord with the sentiment of the seventh resolution, and that the State officers be requested as a committee to present the same.

9. That we heartily recommend the Christian Cynosure and the publications of the National Christian Association to the support of all friends of the cause of anti secretism, and to all those who desire information on this important subject.

10. That this convention expresses its appreciation of the labors of Rev. W. B Stoddard, and urges upon all friends of the anti-secret reform in this State the duty of co-operation with him in praying, working and giving for the success of this Christian cause.

11. That we hereby tender to the pastor and members of the Green Tree church our heartfelt thanks for the warm welcome extended to this convention, for the use of their place of worship, for the bountiful entertainment provided and for the hospitality we have enjoyed in their homes.

W. J. COLEMAN,
EDWIN P. SELLEW,
S B. LATSHAW,
AGNES W. SCHOENHUT.

These resolutions were discussed separately and then adopted as a whole by a rising vote.

The open parliament was a very interesting feature of the convention. Several spoke of the bad tendencies of the lodge. One man attempted to defend Freemasonry. He had taken three degrees and knew no more degrees. He thought secret societies were doing much charitable work. His ignorance was soon made manifest when he was informed of the existence of some one hundred and forty odd degrees in Masonry. Their boasted charity was shown to be a wind bubble when their trifle more than 33⅓ per cent lodge charity was met with 96 per cent missionary contributions by the churches. His remarks were made to weigh heavily for the anti-secret cause, and especially when he declared he was no professed Christian. Rev. T. T. Myers closed the session with prayer.

Thursday evening session was the last, but by no means the least, of all the sessions of the convention. As through the preceding sessions, the church was again filled. Rev. J. H. Leiper led the prayer and praise service. A resolution was passed requesting the persons who addressed the convention to send their addresses to the Cynosure for publication. Mr. Davis of the local church sang a solo. Rev. J. T. Meyers made an appeal for the financial support of the association and a collection which was then taken.

Rev. J. P. Stoddard, of Boston, in the absence of Dr. G. W. Enders and Pres. C. A. Blanchard, occupied the time assigned on the program to them. And though we were disappointed in not hearing these noted speakers, yet we were richly repaid in hearing the soul-stirring expositions of Freemasonry, the irreverence and folly of its initiations, its wicked oaths and penalties, and its evil associations and influences. The speaker not only made his remarks impressive by his manner of speech, but doubly so by the use of charts appealing to the eye as well as the ear. He challenged any Freemason present to correct him if he misrepresented the order, but not one spoke. At the conclusion of the address a vote of thanks was tendered to Bro. Stoddard for his interesting lecture. The convention then adjourned with prayer by the president.

Thus closed one of the most interesting and deeply spiritual convention of this nature ever held. The great work of opposition to the secret empire is gaining ground. God's hand is in it, and those who lead go forward in the power of the Spirit. But in conclusion I will not forget the incidental, social and entertaining feature of the convention. The meals for the guests were prepared at the house of one of the worthy pastors of the congregation near the church. The tables were well loaded and repeatedly re-loaded with luxurious provision. The visitors from a distance, who remained over night, were kindly entertained in the families of the congregation. We found the Green Tree Brethren church very brotherly and sisterly. May the Lord richly bless them for their many deeds of kindness. And may we soon have another similar convention in this part of our State.

A SKETCH OF MY LIFE.

BY ELDER S C KIMBALL.

CHAPTER XLVII.

At Farmington, N. H, June 8, 1875, about thirteen Christian men, all, or nearly all, being delegates to the New Hampshire Free Baptist Yearly Meeting, met for consultation, and after remarks by Elders Hosea Quimby, E. Smith, S. C. Kimball and others, it was voted unanimously to request the Moderator of the Yearly Meeting, on the morrow, to give notice asking all who were interested in the inquiry as to the moral and religious influence of oath-bound, secret societies to tarry at the close of the conference. The Moderator declined to give the notice but permitted the writer of this sketch to give it.

This meeting was held at 5 o'clock P M, June 9, 1875. A large number tarried. The meeting was called to order by S. C. Kimball, and Elder O. T. Moulton was chosen Moderator and S. C. Kimball, clerk.

The Freemasons, one after another, spoke in defence of Masonry, although there was no motion before the meeting. The clerk raised a point of order stigmatizing these Freemason preachers as rioters, only using their tongues instead of clubs, and predicted that they would live to be ashamed of their lawless behavior.

The venerable moderator thought best to tolerate them, and as the room was soon to be occupied by another service, the time expired and no business could be done except to listen to these impudent lodge ministers. Elders George M. Park, Thomas Tyrie and Lewis Malvern were the defenders of Freemasonry on this occasion. It is said Mr. Malvern belongs to thirteen secret lodges. Mr. Tyrie soon after joined the Methodists.

These Freemason preachers thought thus to crush out the rising protest against their secret iniquity, but they were mistaken. The meeting was adjourned to the close of evening service which occurred at 9 P. M. No Freemasons appeared, and after consultation a committee of five was chosen to call a State convention to form a New Hampshire Christian Association, auxiliary to the National Christian Association, to expose the evils of secret societies, and to invite all other Christians not represented to cooperate in said convention. This committee consisted of Bro. K. Cole, Elders E. Smith, J. Nason, S. P. Fernald and S. C. Kimball. A meeting of this committee was immediately held, and S. C. Kimball was chosen chairman and instructed to go forward with the work.

At this time, if the leading men in the Free Baptist denomination who were at heart opposed to lodgism had stood boldly for the Lord against the lodge, the denomination might have been saved; but they had not the courage, and the secret empire took peaceable possession.

Newmarket, N. H.

FREEMASONRY IS DEVIL WORSHIP.

A Masonic writer in the Contemporary Review for October last, in an article written before the late International Anti-masonic Congress at Trent was held by the Romish church, undertakes to denounce as frauds the Anti-masonic writers that assert that Freemasonry is devil worship. Denying their statements, he claims that "the shrewd and learned men who surround him (the Pope) know well enough that Freemasonry is not devil worship." He quotes the language of one Anti-masonic writer who has taken one degree of Freemasonry, and, it seems, made a profound study of the horrible blasphemy as follow:

"The Grand Architect of the Universe, in whose honor burns the incense of lodges and chapters, is not Adonai; it is the Angel of Light, the Genius of Labor, the Spirit of Fire. As to the Deity, he is decomposed into two principles at war with one another; the eternal principles of good and evil. The name of each varies according to the countries which render them worship. The evil is Adonai among the Hebrews; Ahriman among the Persians; Typhon among the Egyptians. The good is therefore Lucifer, Ormuzd or Osiris. Which of these two eternal principles will conquer? There is no room for doubt; it is the good. Hence the persecutions of Adonai will one day cease; Adonai will one day be forever vanquished, and this day will be the one when Masonry, having extended over the whole globe, mankind shall have re-conquered Eden."

I suppose that we are to understand that in this question the Anti-masonic writer is giving us what he understands to be the claims of Freemasonry. It is now about five or six years since upon Masonic authority it became clearly established in my own mind that Freemasonry has inverted the Bible by putting the devil in the place of God, and God in the place of the devil. And that while Freemasonry calls the Bible the "Great Light of Freemasonry," it makes use of the Bible for the purpose of dethroning God, and enthroning the Masonic god whom the Bible calls Satan. That Freemasonry does thus treat the Bible and its author, God, it is in vain for this Masonic writer in the Contemporary Review, or any other being in the universe, to deny; for all the distinguished Masonic authors that set forth the exoteric principles of Freemasonry and harmonize those principles with the esoteric work of the lodge-room have already condemned that being who would dare to make such a denial as a liar.

Abundance of evidence is at hand to confirm the statement. We will select two. Sickels says: "Osiris and the Tyrian architect are one and the same.....In Egyptian Freemasonry, Osiris was the type of beauty, goodness, order and truth. So, in the temple-myth, the Tyrian is the symbol of beauty and order, and of that creative art which is ever ready to seize the ideal and incarnate it in material forms." (Sickel's General Ahiman Rezon and Freemason's Guide, page 196)

But the name Osiris is only one of the devil's names, only one of the names by which he was worshiped down in Egypt, a nation represented in the Bible as infamous for its practice of devil worship under the name of Osiris. Therefore it is only a flimsy disguise of Freemasonry that it makes use of one of the devil's aliases to accomplish their imaginary purpose, the dethronement of Almighty God, and the enthronement of him whom the Lord Jesus Christ declares to be both "a liar and a murderer from the beginning," the god of Freemasonry, by clothing the devil with the attributes of "beauty, goodness, order and truth."

It is thus that Freemasons sport themselves with their own deceivings, making for themselves a god of the devil and so identify themselves, as did Aaron at the mount, with the calf worshipers of Egypt and with the worshipers of Baal Peor on the plains of Moab, regardless of the fact that the Almighty slew three thousand of the first and twenty-four thousand of the latter for violating the first commandment—"Thou shalt have no other gods before me." The Freemasons of to-day violate the same first commandment.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE NEW ENGLAND CONVENTION.

BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 4, 1896

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I take a few moments to herald the coming report, by the secretary, of our late convention in this city. The report when given will be gratifying to friends of the cause everywhere. The one point of weakness was in the limited number in attendance at the meetings. This was in a measure compensated for by the intelligence and earnestness of those present. The strong business men who bore testimoney to the deliverance obtained through Christ was a feature of the convention.

Hon. Geo. M. Morse of Putman, Conn., was called to California by the death of his son, and while all regretted the disappointment and the occasion of his absence, the meeting joined with Rev. Bro. D. B. Gunn in an earnest prayer that God would kindly care for and graciously sustain Brother and Sister Morse in their long, sad journey to look once more upon the face of their precious child and bring the loved form back to the old home, there to rest where the hands of father, mother, brothers and sisters may strew the "narrow house" with floral tributes of affection as the years glide by, until each in turn shall hear the call and rest from their labors in the quiet village churchyard.

THE SEATTLE CONVENTION.

THE ARRANGEMENTS PROGRESSING.

PORTLAND, Ore., DEC 1, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE: — The meeting here has taken on considerable of interest. The evangelists have put the Gospel plow deep from the very start. My heart could say amen to it, for we need it. The Christians here have been greatly benefited by enquiring after the higher Christian life. Some claim to have reached the Beulah land of experience. Sinners have felt deep conviction, and quite a number have professed to be converted. The meetings are held on the out and out line of entire consecration upon our part, and entire cleansing on God's part, and with us entire separation from the world in its spirit and practice. This little church is determined that if it exists at all, it will exist as a contrast to the world, and not as a conformity to it. If it is to follow the ways of the world, then God has no use for it in this wicked city; but if it produces the necessary contrast, then God and man has use for it.

Grandma Robb, who lived across the street from us, passed away last week, having lived to the good old age of 85 years. She was a mem- of the United Presbyterian church. Dr. Wallace conducted the funeral at the U. P. church, after which the remains were taken to Oakville, Linn Co., Ore., where she was placed in the grave by loving hands to await the resurrection of the just. She was a Christian in the best sense of that term.

Revs. Gregory and Davis went the past week to Salem to assist Rev. Walter Reynolds in a meeting. The meeting here has been in charge of Sister P. C. Hinman and the pastor, Rev. L F. Clark, who are assisted by Rev. H. Hinman and your correspondent.

I am receiving some encouraging letters from the field; invitations to lecture on the lodge evil have come this week from Hood River, Gaston and North Yamhill, all in Oregon. Rev. W. M. Howie, our president, has written me to fix the time for the convention to be held in Seattle, and I have answered, suggesting near the 20th of January. Let all the friends, especially in Western Washington, take notice and arrange to attend. We can and will, by the grace of God and right loyal assistance of the friends of the cause on Puget Sound, make this one of the very best conventions ever held on this coast. Let every friend give to this a most hearty amen.

Then let us do all in our power to help. Those who can attend should be willing to make some sacrifice to do so. Let all announce the meeting. Please remember that we can talk a meeting up or down. Write any suggestions you may have. Any who find they cannot possibly come send a word of cheer and any help you can spare to make it a success. After the 15th of December address me at Seattle, Wash., General Delivery.

CORRESPONDENCE.

GOOD WORK IN KANSAS CITY.

UNION DEPOT, KANSAS CITY, MO., Nov. 26, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been in and around the city for a week. Six papers in the county have already accepted my articles for publication and I am trying to get into others. I spoke several times. Rev. R. N. Countee, formerly of Memphis, Tenn., but now editor of the Magnet and pastor of a colored Baptist congregation, has a new stone church up ready for the roof without any fairs or festivals, and he is ably holding up a higher religious standard. Any aid given toward the erection of that edifice will be worthily bestowed and spread the Gospel of separation from the world. We attended the Salvation Army meetings, the Men's Employment Mission two nights, and the Crittenton Mission two nights.

I met and conversed with city editor of the Daily Times and managing editor of the World. I feel more than for years an interest in religious work. Just what I will do or can do, time will tell. At times there comes a longing for the lecture field, and a resume of the anti-secrecy crusade to which I so solemnly dedicated my life years ago, but from which my environments and circumstances forced me to retire. Memories come in like a flood, and the wish to meet and greet the old guard, and work for right and good government against the anti-Christian, un-American lodge system, deepens every hour.

Can it be that God still has a work for me in that line. A new consecration and devotion might give me the grace and courage to try again. It seems that I have had more to bear than my share, but perhaps it is all right. I never pose as a martyr and shall not now. Better men a thousand times have fared infinitely worse, and this Thanksgiving night I am glad to be in the best country on earth, and with better health than for years.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

ELEVENTH LETTER.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Nov. 30, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:— With two-thirds of our business houses in ashes, and the loss of thousands by the temperance people, it would seem as if the thirst for revenge of the lodge-saloon ought to have been satisfied. But God tells us in his Word that "Hell and destruction are never full;" that is, never satisfied; and as saloons are the "breathing holes of hell" upon earth they can never be satisfied. Yea, we are told in that fearful description of the saloonkeeper in Hab. 2, that "He enlargeth his desire as hell." In this spirit and with the hope of turning attention away from the fire, our lodge-druggist began pushing his suits in Clarinda, our county seat.

The sheriff, Luther Johnson, got word about these suits and stayed in Missouri. We want to say here in honor of the governors of Iowa and Missouri, that although they may be lodgemen, they were too noble to stoop to such a low, mean act as to issue a requisition for the arrest of our sheriff on the charge of a little informality in the capture of such a notorious criminal, even when urged to do so by our temperance-reform-lodge-lawyer, Senator Clark. All honor to them for this.

But Deputy Sheriff Walkinshaw, with his lack of fear and his unbounded confidence in men as men, drove into Clarinda on a business and pleasure trip, to find himself arrested as a criminal at the behest of the lodgemen who haven't character enough to be even thought of as officers, even in the low state of our politics. Walkinshaw had no trouble finding bail, and business and pleasure was gone through with as if nothing had happened. When his preliminary trial came off, he was accompanied by a number of the temperance people, who witnessed the most outrageous perversion of justice that it was ever my lot to behold.

The justice, before whom he was tried, was a lodgeman who had once tried to be a preacher, but had sunk to the level of a fifth role "squire." On this occasion at least, prejudice constituted his whole stock of law knowledge. It was evident that a tremendous effort was to be made to convict. Three lawyers, with Clark at their head, appeared for the prosecution. The defense had but one, but he was a clean, sharp man.

Every advantage was shown the prosecution by the "squire." They laid out their full strength and skill; but at the end of three hours they had not produced one iota of evidence that there was any guilt in the prisoner, and yet he was bound over to the grand jury, the squire stating his decision in these words: "Although there has been no evidence of guilt produced, yet as there may be evidence produced, I feel it my duty to bind him over."

After the adjourning of the court, I said to the prosecuting lawyers and "squire:" "Does not our law hold a man innocent until he is proved guilty?" They answered, "Yes." "But," said I, "you have decided to hold this man guilty until he is proved innocent." They had not a word to say, but left the room as fast as they could go.

I have heard and read of cases where notorious characters, who had a criminal record behind them, were bound over on very slight evidence in the hopes that sufficient to convict might be found; but even these characters are let go free where there is no evidence. But here is a man whose record as a citizen is perfectly clean; in fact, he has lived above the demands of law, an honor to his community and State.

The crime charged against him was of such a character that the governors of two States refused a requisition against him; and when his accusers were put to the test they could not bring a single point of evidence to prove the charge, and yet he is bound over to court. How was it done? Through the lodge corrupting the justice in our courts. Why was it done? To satiate the vengeance of a lodgeman who had been dealt with in the extreme mercy of a law which is criminally lenient to those who deal out damnation to their fellowmen. Well has it been said, "That we will never be sure of justice in our courts until the lodge is wiped out of existence."

TO THE RESCUE OF FALLEN WOMEN.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 2, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Mr. Charles N. Crittenton, who has spent $65,000 during the last year for the establishment and maintenance of the twenty-one Florence Crittenton Homes, for the rescue of fallen women, arrived in Washington this week on his private missionary car "Good News," and began a series of daily meetings which are to continue two weeks, for the purpose of interesting the public, and especially the church people, in the rescue work to which he devotes all his time and much of his money. He was tendered a public reception at the First Congregational church, Rev. A. D. Bailey, of the Central Union Mission, presiding. Rev. S. M. Newman, pastor of the church, read a letter from Bishop Hurst regretting that a necessary absence from the city prevented his taking part in welcoming Mr. Crittenton, and added, in behalf of all pastors and church people, a sincere and cordial welcome to the evangelist. Rev. Dr. Johnston, pastor of Metropolitan M. E. church, endorsed all that Mr. Newman said, and many declared that although that church had been honored by the attendance of many distinguished men it had never been more honored than it would be by the evangelistic mission services which Mr. Crittenton would conduct in it.

Rev. Dr. McKim, who was Mr. Crittenton's pastor in New York City, when he began his rescue work, delivered the most feeling address made at the reception, in which he said: "When Mr. Crittenton's daughter, Florence, left for heaven, the father began the great work he still pursues. We work side by side in many a tenement house, trying to save a fallen soul." And the large audience was very palpably in full sympathy with the closing words: "The church ought to smite injustice, which condemns the woman and not the man." A capable volunteer choir attends all of Mr. Crittenton's meetings, and he is assisted by Mr. Charles S. Norton, of Chicago; Mr. Joseph Carpenter, of New Jersey, and Mr. H. T. Parry, the singing evangelist, of San Francisco. The meetings are well attended, and the interest keeps up from start to finish. Mr. Crittenton speaks rapidly and with great earnestness. Two meetings, one in the afternoon and one in the evening, are being held, and except Sabbath, when only the afternoon meetings will be held, will be kept up until December 14th. It is a common expression that "corporations have no soul," but to their credit be it recorded that every railroad over which Mr. Crittenton's car has been hauled on its trip to and from the Pacific coast has refused to accept any compensation, and the Southern Pacific railroad refitted the interior of the car gratis. This car is the home of the corps of workers accompanying Mr. Crittenton, and is comfortable but in no sense luxurious.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS

J. H. CLINE, NOV. 12, '96, PRINCETON, PA.—I would like to have the paper. Am in sympathy with the movement.

REV. W. R. GRAY, NOV. 11, '96, COIN, IA.—I am in hearty sympathy with your work, and trust that success will attend your efforts to break up the great lodge system.

REV. JAMES F. REED, NOV. 16, '96, UNION CITY, PA.—I am greatly pleased with your paper, sent me by Rev. Dr. Hunt. I would gladly subscribe for it, but must deny myself as my small income will not allow me to indulge.

S. P. MARSHALL, NOV. 22, ELDORADO, KAN.—I have been a subscriber to the Cynosure for twenty-one years, and a believer in all the reforms it advocates, and trust it may continue to battle for them until the victory is won.

M. HILL, OAKLAND, CAL., NOV. 7.—Kindly send me the Lodge Lamp and I will send the money in a few weeks when I renew my subscription for the Cynosure, with a prayer for success in your work, which, it seems to me, stands without a parallel.

MRS. MARY M. CARNES, NOV. 12, '96, DETROIT, MICH.—It is hard getting subscribers for the Lodge Lamp. Most all say they are taking more papers than they can read now. I tell them I can read it through in fifteen minutes, yet I know a good deal more then than I did before I read it.

REV. E F. W. STELLHORN, NOV. 14, '96, MARION, OHIO.—Our congregation at this place does not accept or retain any one who is a member of any lodge. I was informed this evening that a member would come to me some time next week to defend the "Foresters," on the ground that they are not to be classed with Masons, Odd-fellows, etc.

H. P. MARKS, MADISON, WIS., NOV. 20.—I must confess that the Cynosure and the Lodge Lamp are just the papers that ought to be in every family that pretends to be Christian. For this reason it throws light on the path of righteousness like the Word of life. I have thought that the name of the Lodge Lamp would be better changed; people might be apt to read a little of it before they knew its design and purpose. Why not call it Investigator, Admonitor or Monitor.

MRS. JENNIE L. FULTON, IDANA, KAN., DEC. 2.—We prize your paper very highly and appreciate it very much. Idana has three churches and an Odd-fellows lodge. The churches suffer for lack of means to carry on their work. The most of it goes into the lodge. One lady told me, "It took all they could make to live and pay their lodge fees." How do you enjoy your work? We miss your visits and lectures out west. Our congregation here is scattered and takes up so much of our time. Mr. Fulton's health has been poor all summer, but he is better now.

MRS IDA GRIGGS, NOV. 6, '96 ROSS WASH.—I have a friend that left the Free Methodist church to join the A. O. U. W., and now he says the order is as pure as the church. I am unable to show him very much of their wrong workings without one of their rituals. If I can only succeed in getting one, perhaps I may save others from taking the same step, and prove that it is a Christ-denying work of the devil and all of their objects are selfish. To my mind this is one of the orders that should be exposed as well as many others. Many of the working class that will not unite with said order have it to contend with in trying to get work. If those needing help are Workmen they are under obligations to give their work to their brother Workmen.

REV. L. D. THORNBURGH, NEW CASTLE, IND.—In this world of demons, follies and fearful deceptions I am glad to learn that you are in the front ranks, and like soldiers brave, stand unwavering with loaded gun. I learn of you through our church paper, the Conservator. I am a young man, having been born twelve years ago into the kingdom of free grace, and called to the sacred office of the ministry. I see the great devils of lust, profanity, intemperance, formality, and last but not least, the Baal worship of lodgism—a fearfully deceptive thing—deceiving many who would be good and worship whole-hearted for Christ and his church. I hear you have light on all lodgisms. I am in search of substantial, reliable exposes of these. For zeal without knowledge is so often a failure.

REV. CYRUS SMITH, DEKALB, IA.—As soon as circumstances will permit I will send some subscriptions, with my own, to the Lodge Lamp. The stronger the effort to extinguish its light, the better reason we have to extend its circulation. If it is denied second rates through the mails, its subscription list must be doubled. It would wake up anti-secretists to use that much energy. I invited an anti-secretist, some time ago, to subscribe for the paper and he said: "If I take it, I will read it; and if I read it, I will talk about it; and if I talk about it, it will make trouble, because many of my neighbors are in the lodge." It is, however, the devil that scares people, and in that way prevents them from letting "their light shine." This man, however, was not a Christian, so I thought according to the Word, he should "first seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness." When this is the beginning of a truly Christian life a man will stand by grace, in the face of every opposition, for the righteous principles in the kingdom of God. It used to be that men were burned at the stake rather than falter or compromise with evil. Strong Christian character is the needed grace to cause men to stand against the lodge.

REV. CYRUS SMITH, DEKALB, IA, NOV. 14.—The foundation of all civilized national legislation is the Ten Commandments; consequently all right civil government punishes crime and protects virtue. In God's law is the only legitimate standard of legislation in any government, either of the family, church or state; and these three are the only institutions ever appointed of God. It follows logically that there is no other legitimate authority. As secret lodges have governments of their own, their authority is no part of the legitimate institutions ordained of God. The governments of secret societies are illegitimate, without foundation, just power or moral binding force.

All organizations not in the realm of God's moral government, are under the control of the carnal mind, and are "not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." There are, however, many high in authority, in church and state, who give prestige to those unworthy institutions, but it is well they are much better in character than the lodges to which they belong. Thanks to the over-ruling highest source of wisdom, for the influence of Christianity in the preservation of the family, church and state, in spite of the enmity of the world lying in wickedness.

ADDRESSED TO THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION, AT OAKS, NOV. 18, 19.

A. B. KOLB, EDITOR OF THE Herald of Truth, ELKHART, IND., NOV. 10 —As our church paper is issued on the 1st and 15th of each month, your program comes too late for publication; otherwise I should have been glad to insert it. With warmest wishes for the success of the convention, I am very truly yours.

REV. J. W. SPROULL, D. D., ALLEGHENY, PA., Nov. 8 —Circumstances will prevent my being present at the convention to be held on the 18th and 19th of this month. You have my very best wishes for success in your work. There is no subject about which the people of this country need to be more informed than that which relates to secret, oathbound associations.

REV. A. S. AIKEN, AIRVILLE, PA., NOV. 14 — I am in hearty sympathy with the anti-secrecy movement. It seems clear to my mind that oathbound secret societies are dangerous to our civil liberties, inimical to the best and highest interests of men, and obstructive to the spread of the Gospel and the rebuilding of Christ's kingdom. I hope your convention may result in great good. I enclose one dollar for expense of the convention.

REV. R. G. PINKERTON, MUDDY CREEK, PA., Nov. 12.—I am very much interested in your work, and am enjoying the Cynosure and praying for the success of the anti-secrecy cause. I would like very much to hear the addresses on "Lodge Oaths" by Rev. A. M. Fretz, and "Christians and Minor Secret Societies" by Rev. W. W. Barr. I find my work as pastor is very much hindered by the Junior Order of American Mechanics. They get our young men by the insurance subterfuge. They are more dangerous, in my estimation, than the larger and older societies.

REV. J. S. MARTIN, NEW CASTLE, PA., NOV. 17. —I do not need to assure you of my hearty sympathy and co-operation so far as possible in the work of waging war against the iniquitous system of secrecy in our land. I am unalterably opposed to it because of its rivalry to the church of Jesus Christ, of which I am a devoted lover; and therefore I bid you God-speed in your work at all times and especially in this convention. As to inviting the next convention to our city, I would only be too glad to do so if I felt it could be made a success. Little support, comparatively, even from the Christians of the city, could be secured, and then we have absolutely no suitable place of meeting. Any church that could be secured would not be half large enough, and there are no other buildings in the city available for less than $50 a night and almost as much per day; and, of course, I feel you could not afford to pay that. If so, I heartily invite you.

REV. R. H. SHAW, NEW CASTLE, PA., NOV. 16. —I regret that at present I find myself unable to attend the Oaks' Convention, but pray it may be a grand success in awakening an interest among the people in the subject of the evils of the secret lodge. I trust that it will especially arouse those ministers and church members who may have become entangled in the lodge. I wish you would urge to the utmost of your ability that God through Christ has promised to disannul their covenant with death and hell. As to the next convention coming to New Castle, I think none could hinder it if God goes before. I am in the hands of my Lord Jesus to be used in some way. What will I do? what can I do to bring this world to Christ? I would like the Cynosure continued. I expect the convention to be a success. I believe the work is speeding everywhere, and we will all do our part the best we know how, up to present light and present opportunity, praying for each and all workers in the vineyard of our Lord.

REV. J. R. BAIRD, INDIANA, PA., NOV. 11.— I trust the convention will be a glorious success in opposing the works of darkness. It is my earnest desire that the power of Christ may rest upon everyone who attends. Dear brethren, have faith in God. While I read in the Cynosure of one after another of the brethren passing away, I cannot but thank God and take courage that while they have passed on to their eternal rest, God is perpetuating his power in raising up others to take their place in the work. Be strong in the Lord and the power of his might. The mystery of iniquity doth already work. The rulers of the secret dens are like their master of old, offering high positions and great rewards to them who will fall down from their testimony of truth and righteousness and worship him. But let us never forget that while the seed of the serpent keeps bruising our heel, the true seed of Abraham will not fail to bruise the serpent's head. May the grace of God be with you all, is my sincere prayer.

JOSIAH W. LEEDS, SEAL, PA., NOV. 9.—The recent Waltham affair and that at Huntington, W. Va., six years ago, when Pastor Johnston lost his life while being initiated, and two or three like incidents, suggests the query, whether occurrences such as these do not explain the root trouble of a good deal of the plague of our politics. The element of secrecy, the dealing in the dark, the spirit of the hidden and cunning cabal is a marked feature of our politics. Were we to stand up before us the politicians who have figured so unenviably before the Philadelphia community these latter days, I have no doubt whatever that nine out of ten of them would be found to be members of oath-bound secret orders. They are thoroughly at home in the hidden ways of the close caucus, and know just how to "fix things," or think they do, to accomplish their unscrupulous, partisan and self-seeking purposes. In saying this much, I am free to say also that there are very estimable gentlemen in most of the lodges, yet I am also aware of the fact that an exceedingly large number of the most earnest, thoughtful and self-sacrificing Christians, who at one time have gone a few steps within the lodge, have not been easy to remain, and have either resigned or have quietly withdrawn. I believe that this country is realizing to its great hurt that oathbound secretism constitutes an imperium in imperio.

REV. SAMUEL COLLINS, D. D., No. 60 SHERMAN AVE., ALLEGHENY, PA., NOV. 13.—With Christian salutations to yourself and all the brethren and sisters engaged in the good work, and hearty prayers for the success of your convention. By instinct, by association, by education, by observation and by solemn religious profession I am opposed to all secret oath or "sacred honor" bound organizations in time of peace, and usually in time of war. I feel more and more averse to them as years roll by. Their forms, their claims, their fruits and their pretensions all excite greater disgust and relentless opposition to the systems, my sympathy for the victims and my wish to warn the unwary. Statistics and observation show that locally and generally the increase of vice and irreligion keep pace and close company with the growth of secret associations in any community. Hence, reform along all lines demands the repression and suppression of the lodge. The darkened room must be opened. "The things done of them in secret," with their false promises and pretences, must be exposed. A great work, this, and but comparatively few to do it. The old laborers are passing away. May you and others more than fill our places, and in the faith of God's blessing do the work with more efficiency than we have done it. "Remember them," now few and feeble, who have borne the burden, and "who through faith and patience" now do, or soon will, "inherit the promises." The Lord grant you a good meeting and a full measure of his guiding grace in all your proceedings, that we may have a rich blessing and his name great glory.

A STILL OPPRESSED RACE.

WASHINGTON, D C., Nov. 27, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am aware how busy an editor is, but Sister Powers has gone and I have no one to talk with now about the oppressed colored race, a work dearer to me than my life. Her work was digging up the root, while mine was cutting off the branches, and this led us to talk much together. You may wonder how our work is so nearly connected, and that is just what I want to tell you.

Fourteen years ago last spring my husband and I crossed Mason and Dixon's line. We had means of our own, and we came to live, and if need be die for others. When we came to Washington twelve years ago my work for the colored people began in earnest. I need not tell you how I went into the alleys and into their dwellings, and how after my return I lay down at night and wet my pillow with tears. Neither need I tell you how I was led to look into the condition of this unfortunate class of people in the Southern States, and how surprised I was to find that thousands and I might say tens of thousands were enduring a life of slavery, such as was not known in ante-bellum days, bad and cruel and inhuman as the old-time slavery was.

My hand falls powerless at my side whenever I attempt to give even a faint pen picture of the outrages men, women and children of the dark skinned race have endured and are now enduring this very moment in the chain-gangs of the sunny South. For nine years I have been carefully investigating Southern prisons and convict camps, and I have accumulated enough official evidence showing cruelty toward helpless manacled human beings, the victims of man's avarice, to shock the whole civilized world. One of the darkest pages of American history is yet to be written. It will tell of starved, emaciated men and women driven by the lash to work from sunlight to starlight, and sometimes every day in the week, Sabbaths not excepted; it will tell of women compelled to submit to the lust of brutal guards; of men and women chained together day and night living in abject fear, starvation and filth; it will tell of convict camps, twin sisters of Sodom, where men and boys are schooled in crime, some of the crimes of which, as the chairman of the Georgia penitentiary investigating committee said, "cannot be named or written without a revulsion of feeling amounting to horror."

Many of these not only in Georgia but in other States of the South are guilty of but trifling offences, but the "ring" wants their labor. We shudder when we read about the Armenians, but have we no sympathy for our brothers and sisters who are suffering a living death right here in America? May God help us to "cast the beam out of our own eye" before we go to Siberia or to Turkey. "These things ought ye to have done and not leave the other undone." I know that some of the "penitentiary ring" are leaders in Masonry.

Now that Brother and Sister Powers are gone, who is there to "cry aloud and spare not" against the secret influence of secret societies which is becoming such a power in our churches. God has no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Why is it that good men "whose praise is in all the churches," who once spoke out openly against the lodge and its evil influences, are no longer heard crying out against it? Echo answers why?

Here is a clipping from the Washington Morning Times of Nov. 20:

"Knoxville, Tenn., Nov. 25.—Pat Mitchell, who was taken from the officers near Allentown last night by a mob, has undoubtedly met with a terrible death. The mob started to hang him to the trestle of a railroad, but the idea of burning him was sprung, and when last seen he was crying and begging for mercy, but the mob was taking him on toward the scene of his crime, and it is the general belief that he was burned to death. His victim was a five-year-old white girl.

Don't think that this man outraged a child. Such stories are untrue in most cases. They (colored men) are lynched for the most trifling offences. I dare not withhold the truth, but live in hopes that the time will come when the convict camps in the South will be opened to the gaze of the civilized world. May God speed the time.

MRS. C. O. KEELER.

WATERS NORTHROP.

Another aged friend of the Cynosure has ceased from his earthly labors. Waters Northrop, who has lived in Du Page county, Ill., since 1837, and still owned at the time of his death his beautiful farm of 240 acres, for which he held a government patent, fell asleep on Nov. 9, 1896, as he was nearing his eighty-fifth birthday. What characterized him as one who had received Jesus Christ in truth, was his ability and willingness to see him in the lowly slave, which marked him among his fellows as an Abolitionist. The same blessed Spirit made him an enemy of the saloon and the secret lodge.

HOW OLD THE EARTH IS.

Counted by Millions, Not Thousands, of Years.

The Greek schools, above 2,000 years ago, treated the world as of indefinite antiquity, and they speak of traditions 10,000 or 14,000 years before their time as facts not questionable from their antiquity. Buckland, from geological conclusions, says it is millions of years since the world was created, and the only question is how many million years. Different views have been entertained as to the earth's formation, one view being that it has cooled down from a fluid to a solid mass. Sir William Thompson has investigated the question of the cooling of the earth and looks upon the increase of temperature from the surface downward as proof of the constant loss of heat from the globe, the heat radiating into space without sensibly elevating the temperature of the upper crust through which it passes. The continuance of such a loss of heat involves belief in the occurrence of a period at which the earth was a fluid mass, and Sir William has fixed that period at not less than 200,000,000 nor more than 400,000,000 years ago, the probability being that 100,000,000 of years is the limit of geological history, and that prior to that time the earth's surface was unfit for the maintenance of animal or vegetable life. Our knowledge is not sufficient to fix the period when the earth became habitable or when it shall cease to be so. The organic world does not furnish any guide to the solution of the problem, and therefore it is only a speculative question so far. Hugh Miller says: "As certainly as the sun is the center of our system must our earth have revolved around it for millions of years. * * * The earth is of an antiquity incalculably vast. * * * The 6,000 years of human history form but a portion of the geological day which is passing over us. They do not extend into the yesterday of our globe, far less touch the myriads of ages spread out beyond."

How to Prevent Consumption.

First.—Do not live in a damp locality, in a damp house, nor in a house with damp or foul cellar or surroundings.

Second.—Do not live in a house with defective plumbing or bad drainage.

Third.—Do not frequent crowded or badly ventilated assembly rooms nor sleep in close apartments.

Fourth.—Adopt an out of door occupation, so as to live in the open air.

Fifth.—Avoid as much as possible everything that tends to depress. All excesses should be avoided, and keep free from anxiety and mental and physical overwork.

These causes, by placing the system below par, render the persons less capable of resisting the disease, if exposed to the germs, in such a way as to bring about the development of consumption.

How to Clean Hairbrushes.

Ammonia and water have long been regarded the staple cleansing fluids for hairbrushes. But this treatment, though satisfactory enough as far as cleaning is concerned, is ruinous to the bristles, softening and eventually destroying them. A better method is to rub them in dry Indian meal until the oil and dust are completely removed from the brush.

How to Dust Clothes.

A bit of old crape is the very best thing for dusting one's gowns. The ordinary brush used for the purpose is death and destruction to silk passementerie or any of the soft materials in use nowadays. Slick every particle of dust off with the crape, whose corrugated surface will make the job an easy one, and then, if there is a good deal of beading used in the trimming, lay between sheets of tissue paper, where nothing will rub against it, for passementerie with some of the beads missing or with the gloss gone is the most distressing spectacle imaginable. If a brush must be used, get a soft camel's hair one and use it with a light, quick motion, as sparingly as possible.

How to Make Cream Rise Quickly.

It is impossible for cream to rise through a great depth of milk. If you wish to free the milk almost entirely of cream, place it in a broad, flat dish not more than one inch deep, but if you wish to retain the cream for a time put it in a deep, narrow vessel.

How to Make Croutes of Caviare.

Cut some slices of bread a half inch thick and an inch wide. After taking a little piece from the center, so a hollow is formed, fry the pieces of bread a golden brown, and then fill with caviare seasoned with lemon juice, butter and pepper. These must be browned in the oven, when they are ready to serve.

How to Avoid Draggled Dresses.

Never sit in a damp dress if it can be avoided, for nothing so successfully creases it. It should at once be taken off and hung in a good position to dry. Careful attention should always be paid to dress braids and facings. If a braid is replaced as soon as it commences to wear, the facing will, in many instances, be saved.

A dress braid should always be put on by hand and in most instances "rolled on." If sewed on by machine, more time is consumed in ripping it off when it requires replacing than in both sewing on and ripping off a braid sewed on by hand.

How to Polish Brass.

If you want your brass teakettle or brass andirons to shine with dazzling luster, clean them with lemon peel. Then dip them in common salt and scour with dry brick dust.

ANOTHER INITIATION MURDER.

Another murder in a secret lodge initiation is chronicled in the daily Inter Ocean of Dec. 4th. The whole murderous work is condensed into an eight line item as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 3—Charles Wetter, of Winthrop, Minn., while undergoing the ceremony of initiation into the Mystic Shrine at Masonic Temple fell dead. The services were abruptly terminated and four physicians, including the coroner, were summoned; they decided that death was due to valvular disease of the heart. He was 40 years of age and proprietor of a hotel at Winthrop.

This is one of many instances on record of deaths from heart disease during the fright of a lodge initiation. Those subject to heart disease have been repeatedly warned not to submit to such ordeals. If any other organization than a secret order would thus jeopardize men's lives how long would it be tolerated in an enlightened community? Is it not time, as one of our exchanges says, to secure legislation to protect human life by prohibiting such barbarous practies?

HOW TO ESTIMATE FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry is too ignorant to receive anything but ridicule; too superstitious to merit anything save righteous condemnation; too savage for any consignment save to outer darkness, the place of its abode, where it belongs because its deeds are evil, and evil only. To daub such with untempered mortar is to commit a great sin. To use soft words only provokes the derision of the ignorant and vicious who belong to the lodge for the protection offered for their concealment of crime, "murder and treason not excepted."

To attempt to use moral suasion is to cast your pearls before swine to give them a chance to turn and rend you. Let the lightning of the truth smite it to the death. Let the thunder of denunciation roll over it like a flood-tide. Let it be smitten to the very depths of its infamy. Let it be consigned to the abode of rottenness that it may riot in its own debauchery and shame. Let every lover of God and man enlist to drive it from the face of the earth, to hide in the den of the smoke of its own torment where the wrath of God is to burn to the lowest hell.

THE DEVIL'S LATEST TACTICS.

Satan has now had nearly 6,000 years experience in ruining souls. Surely the fallen archangel whose greatest ambition is the destruction of souls has learned many lessons during this time. He has learned that bloody persecution will not destroy the church, for about the middle of the sixteenth century he ceased that form of opposition, and except the Armenian massacres of late years, there has been no open persecution.

Satan has learned, too, that it is vain for him to attempt to stop the powerful Christian activities of our day. He cannot prevent the churches, prayers and contributions and efforts for the salvation of souls at home and abroad. Behind all these is the power and inspiration of the Holy Spirit. But if Satan cannot prevent the flow of these mighty energies, can he not and does he not divert them into channels in which they will do the least harm to his kingdom? Is not Satan's policy nowdays to silence the testimony of the church against the secret lodge and the saloon, so that he can use these powerful agencies for the destruction of souls? And is he not every year through their instrumentality destroying more souls than all the churches are saving?

SECRET INSURANCE SOCIETIES.

A movement is on foot in several quarters to save men from being swindled by secret insurance societies. The unscrupulous promises and assessments of these organizations is already threatening to plunge the country into a financial panic. It is proposed to secure the following egal safe-guards:

1. That all companies chartered as assessment companies be compelled to use the word "assessment" as a part of their title, as mutual fire insurance companies are required to employ the work "mutual." Such a provision obviously would prevent the often-repeated misrepresentation, the root of nearly all the trouble, that an assessment company is not an assessment company.

2. That any assessment company doing business in Pennsylvania, whether chartered in this State or in another State or country, be compelled to state in plain language in its application and in its policies or certificates of membership that it is an assessment company, and does business only on the assessment plan. Under existing laws companies admitted from other States are required to file with the insurance commissioner a copy of their policy or certificate of membership, application, and by-laws, which must show that death losses are "in the main provided for by assessment upon surviving members." This is intended, of course, to identify the company as an assessment organization, and the whole intent of the laws on this subject is to do this, but they are so obscure in some of the vital points as to be subject to evasion and defeat. If there be a hole anywhere those who want to impose upon the public are certain to find it and get through.

3. That a company organized on the assessment plan should be prohibited by distinct and unmistakable terms of law from doing anything but an assessment business. This of itself would end one of the most dangerous enterprises which companies of this class have so generally undertaken in the past. Accompanying these wholesome and reasonable restrictions should be some provision for a penalty in the event of their violation.

NEARLY KILLED IN AN INITIATION.

We glean the following facts from the Leader of Alliance, O: Jos. H Blake, H. W. Zeigler and F. Y. Fox, three Canton boys, attending the law department of the Ohio State University, had a very lively experience the other evening. All were candidates for initiation into the Phi Delta Phi law fraternity. Through the influence of Attorney General Monnett, the fraternity secured the punishment department of the Ohio penitentiary for the place of initiation.

The candidates were taken to Goodale park, where they were dragged through the lake by means of ropes. They were then roped together, blindfolded and marched through the street to the penitentiary. Here they were clubbed with a large hickory stick and again ducked in a large tub of water. More dead than alive they were brought back to the city and a physician called.

A dispatch from Columbus says: "Fox became so ill that he was unable to stand all of it, and was sent to his room in charge of some friends. He is still quite sick to day, and there is considerable uneasiness concerning his condition.

BRAZEN MASONIC IMPUDENCE.

The corner-stone of the new court house at Harrisonburg, Va., was laid with Masonic ceremonies Oct. 15th. What brazen inpudence for this dark-lanterned institution which makes a business of perverting justice in our courts in its own interests to presume at the expense of the taxpayers and of the many thousands of followers of Christ who testify against it, to advertise itself by laying the corner-stone of this temple of justice. Here is the way the matter is reported in the local press:

"Thursday, Oct. 15, was an ideal autumn day, and the ceremonies incident to the laying of the corner-stone of the new county court house brought a large crowd to Harrisonburg. The morning train from Staunton brought the Stone wall Brigade Band, prominent Masons from Richmond and other sections of Virginia, and a crowd of citizens from local stations along the road. The same train also brought twenty-five orphan children from the Masonic Home in Richmond. These children wore neat uniforms and attracted much attention.

"An excursion train from down the valley brought visitors from Woodstock and intermediate stations, several Councils of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics from Mt. Jackson, Quicksburg and Broadway, and representatives of several lodges of Knights of Pythias—members of the Masonic fraternity from Woodstock, Edinburg, Mt. Jackson, New Market and Luray were also among the visitors.

"The corner-stone, which was the gift of Contractor Spier to Rockingham Union Lodge, is a massive block of Indiana limestone two feet six inches by eighteen inches, and twenty inches high. The north side has simply a sunk panel, and the east side a similar panel with the figures 1896 raised to the outer surface. The receptacle for articles deposited in the stone was 10x17 inches and five inches deep. In it were placed the following:

1 Historical sketch of the lodge by J. Wilton, and Masonic address by Rev. Dr. S. K Cox, on occasion of the centennial celebration of Oct. 29, 1889.

2 By-laws of the lodge.

3. List of officers and members.

4. List of officers and members of Rockingham Royal Arch Chapter, No. 6

5 Officers and members of Harrisonburg Commandery No. 10, Knights Templar.

6. Official program of the corner-stone ceremony.

THE SCHWENKFELDERS.

The following history of a body of earnest Christians who are heartily with us in our protest against secret orders, we take from The Friend of Philadelphia:

"The one hundred and sixty-second anniversary of the coming of the Schwenkfelders to this county was celebrated at the Schwenkfelder meeting-house, Worcester. Most of the members of the denomination were present, for it is at once a reunion and religious event of interest. The morning session was opened with a historical sketch of the cause which led to the migration.

"Caspar Schwenkfeld was a Silesian nobleman and reformer (1490 1562), who could not see his way clear conscientiously to pledge allegiance to any one of the great religious sects, and thus continued to work for the advancement of Christ's kingdom independently of these bodies, and yet as far as possible, in harmony with them. Believing it inconsistent with the professions of a Christian to take up arms against fellow-believers, he constantly abstained from defending or upbuilding his views by use of worldly power or force. Up to the time of the flight from Silesia to Saxony, in 1720, the faithful followers of Schwenkfeld suffered many miseries and afflictions. Here, under the protection of Count Zinzendorf, who afterwards paid a visit to Eastern Pennsylvania, they found refuge and rest for a time, but at last notice came that even he could protect them no longer.

"They consequently started from Saxony in April, 1734, for Pennsylvania, and finally, after great hardship, landed September 22nd of that year in Philadelphia. The next day they appeared before the proper authorities and pledged their allegiance and fidelity to the king of England and the proprietor of the Province of Pennsylvania. The day following, September 24th, was observed as a day for thanksgiving to God for his fatherly care over them, for delivering them from the hands of their enemies, in giving them friends in their day of dire distress, for the land of the free and the home of the oppressed, founded by William Penn, where they had at last found a place of refuge. This day has been sacredly observed ever since by these people.

"Among those who spoke in the afternoon was Prof. Oscar S. Kriebel and Rev. Wm. Anders. It is learned that Prof. Chester Hartranft, of Hartford, Conn, a descendant of the Schwenkfelders, has for a number of years had representatives at work in Europe tracing out and arranging the numerous old records relating to the denomination. These are to be published in book form. To-day's attendance was the largest for years, nearly every member being present.

"To-day the denomination in America numbers between six hundred and eight hundred members, all of whom live in the territory embraced within the three counties already mentioned. They have a number of meeting houses. Up to a few years ago the Schwenkfelders always selected their ministers from among the members, without paying attention to special ministerial training. In the lower section this method is still in vogue, but the upper portion of the church, which includes those of Berks, has a paid minister, educated both in an American university and abroad.

He is Prof. O. S. Kriebel, principal of Perkiomon Seminary, who belongs to one of the old Schwenkfelder families."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Dr. H. H. George preached twice at Waterman last Sabbath.

—Dr. H. H. George, of Beaver Falls, who is arranging for the National Reform Convention in Willard Hall next week, has visited the Cynosure office several times lately.

—Rev. E. B. Wylie, of Summerdale Congregational church, preached three excellent sermons in the College Church at Wheaton last Sabbath. He changed pulpits with pastor W. H. Chandler.

—We enjoyed a happy Thanksgiving under the old home roof near Kossuth, Ia., with parents and brothers, T. H. Gault and wife; Rev. R J. Gault and wife and J. B. Gault and family. Abundant reason for thanksgiving and praise.

—The United Brethren Mutual Aid Association of Lebanon, Pa., went up Feb. 18, 1896, by going into the hands of a receiver. It had a membership of over 4 000 and insurance of about $5,000,000. It was organized in 1870, and was one of the oldest and most honestly run assessment companies in the country.

—The Leader of Alliance, Ohio, says in its issue of Dec. 1: "Word has been received from Wooster, stating that William T. Henry, formerly of this city, died of nervous prostration in that city Thursday noon. He had received a whitecap letter of warning. Before death he imagined that the whitecaps were after him."

—Are there not many who "stumble or are made weak" by the attitude of Christian men toward the lodge, and by the unequal yoking with unbelievers of representative Christians? Are these brethren sure that they "walk charitably" when they "eat" the "meat" of lodge banquets, with their essential irreligion and their suggestion of principles anti-Christian?

—Rev. F. M. Foster, of New York, writes: "You are doing the Lord's work and may he bless you in it. It is a hard, unpopular, thankless battle. But so was slavery until within a few months of its overthrow. Then there was a wonderful revolution of public sentiment. So just wield that big broadsword of yours for God and country and the church of Christ, knowing that deliverence must come. Your companion in tribulation."

—The Supreme Lodge of the order of Columbian Knights, having its headquarters in the Masonic Temple in this city, writes us a proposition offering us membership in their order in exchange for honorable mention in the Cynosure. "Not advertising space, but news items, editorial comments and allusions to the order of a complementary character would be desirable." What do they take us for? Are they not reduced to desperate straits for members?

—None of the biographies of Robert Fulton mentions the fact that a number of ladies were among the passengers of his steamboat, "The Clermont," on its first trip up the Hudson. Miss Helen Evertson Smith, in a paper on "A Group of American Girls Early in the Century," contributed to the Christmas number of The Century, shows that several of Chancellor Livingston's cousins, who were celebrated for their beauty, were on the boat. The engagement of one of them to Fulton was announced and appropriately celebrated at the conclusion of the trip.

—Rev. R. J. Gault and wife, of New Alexandria, Pa., spent several days last week with his brothers, T. H. Gault, of this city, and Editor M. A. Gault, of Wheaton. Last Thursday evening a reception was given at the residence of T. H. Gault. The guests comprised about forty of their neighbors and friends, including Rev. T. M. Chalmers and wife; Rev. Wm. Morrow and wife; Rev. Mr. McKinney; Rev. R. J. Gault and wife; Dr. H. H. George, of Beaver Falls; Editor M. A. Gault and wife and Dr. R W. French and wife. It was a highly enjoyable social gathering.

—The Western Catholic News of this city quotes with approval what the Cynosure said about the need of more doctrinal preaching. It says: "Our exchange is severely correct when it says of the preachers that they turn out too many pulpy, gelatin, velvety sort of Christians, who make a great fuss "getting religion" in the winter, only to lose it all backsliding in the summer. This getting and losing backsliding process is not confined to the Protestant sect alone, we are sorry to say. We have some of the velvety Christians also."

—James H. Clark, receiver for the defunct Masonic Benevolent Association of Central Illinois, compelled the members to pay their assessments twenty days after the second notice of such was sent out by order of the court. He explained that the assessment was not made for the defunct society, but for the widows and orphans who had plighted their faith in its ability to meet its obligations, which ability rested with the surviving members, and they would have to sustain the obligation, a position which the court upheld."

—Class "E" of the Equitable Aid Union went into the hands of a receiver on Sept. 19, 1896. The union had a membership of about 30 000 and was organized at Columbus, Warren county, Pa., in 1879. It had insurance in force of over $43,000 000. The receiver has assessed the surviving members to pay the debts of the company at the time it failed; the assessments running from $9.75 to $78 each in this State. The assessments in New York State, where the liabilities are larger, will run from $12.25 to $98 per member, and must be paid, by order of court, by the surviving members.

—Our Washington correspondent condemns certain bad practices as needing reform in the business world, and says: "Among these bad practices are the encouragement of the gambling instinct by a prize lottery competition and the pretended ability to sell at a high price any sort of a patent upon which the inventor can be induced to pay the solicitor's fees and charges, some of the last being decided impositions. Just what action should be taken by the honorable patent lawyers to stop these practices which are degrading their profession and demoralizing the inventors of the country has not been determined upon, but there seems to be a general opinion that the cases could best be reached by the formation of a Patent Bar, which would formulate stringent rules of practice that would shut out those who resort to disreputable methods of obtaining clients, as well as those who obtain fees under false pretenses, even though they be implied and not explicitly made.

—The law does not authorize the kind of life insurance business ingaged in by so many secret fraternities. Nor does the law prohibit it with any degree of explicitness that would enable the courts to employ sufficient means to protect the people from their dangerous subterfuges. It was the clear intention that assessment companies should be known as such, so that people who have to deal with them can fully understand what they may expect. All the existing statutes require of these companies organized in Pennsylvania to distinguish them is that all policies or certificates issued by them shall state that the company issuing the same is not required by law to maintain the reserve which other life insurance companies are required to have. This is significant only to the few who may have more than an ordinary knowledge of the forms and details of life insurance. It conveys nothing to the minds of the great majority, and may easily escape notice altogether.

—For the benefit of all those who have been duped into life insurance in secret societies we remind them that all such organizations are unlimited partnerships, and their members have a personal liability which they cannot legally disclaim. A number of court decisions we might quote in which this principle is sustained. Cases in point are as follows: A member of the United States Mutual Accident Association of New York, which went out of business some time ago, and is in the hands of a receiver, has been ordered by the Supreme Court of that State to pay an assessment of $46.65, though he is no longer insured, and can never get any benefit from that amount, or what he had before paid in. This association had on Dec. 31, 1894, 54 621 members, insured for $274,198,700. Receiver Chauncy P. Rogers of the Equitable Aid Union, Columbus, Ohio, has also issued assessment notices which call for thirty-nine times the basis of the rate of assessment, which was made by the supreme trustees of the order last August. This will fall on 2,700 members in Pennsylvania, and the amount they will have to pay ranges from $9 75 to $78 each, according to the face of the policy. There is no getting out of it, as the court has already made a decree.

—The Pittsburgh Post of Dec. 1st contains the following: "Frank A. Preble appeared as complainant in the Middlesex court in a suit against the Waltham Orangemen's lodge and told of the rough treatment which he received while being initiated by the officers. They told him that he must take off his outer clothing, which he did, and he entered the main hall clad in a shirt, white overalls and shoes. He was made to kneel down and repeat something, and while doing so the men took off his shoes. Then his clothing was rolled up to his knees and he was marched about the hall while someone whipped his legs with rattan whips. He testified that a bag of stones weighing forty pounds was then put on his shoulders and that he was pulled to the floor, while someone sat on him and jabbed him with pins or an ice pick. He was then made to go up a stepladder, and from this he fell into a blanket and was 'tossed.' Then two men held him and a red-hot iron was brought up against his breast. He struggled to get away, but the two men held him while he was branded. Then someone said: 'Hold up your hands and see if you can find a serpent,' and the initiation was over. He said that he was severely burned and injured."

CALL FOR A CONVENTION IN THE INTEREST OF NATIONAL RIGHTEOUSNESS AND CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP.

The call begins: "What is most needed in our social and national life to-day is the development of conscience; and to develop the conscience in our nation we must as a nation know and apply the moral law." And it ends with these words: "Believing that now, after the intense excitement of a Presidential campaign, is a most opportune time for Christian citizens, irrespective of party or denomination, to meet and consider such questions in the light of Christ's law, we, the National Reform Association and the National Christian Citizenship League, invite all friends of National Christian Citizenship to meet in Willard's Hall, Chicago, Ill. This is the public hall in the W. C. T. U. Temple, 184 LaSalle St. The convention proper will meet on Wednesday the 16th at 2 P. M. The National Reform Association will have its business meeting in the same hall at 10:30 A M., of the same day. All friends cordially invited. Could any convention in this day be more important? A convention to talk over and pray about, and seriously consider the highest and best interests of our nation?

Is not this too grand a country to allow corruption and wrong-doing and the saloon power to dominate so largely in this government? There are Christians enough to stop this state of things. Will they not do it? Thank the Lord they are waking up to see it, and hundreds, yes, thousands, are willing to join the grand movement towards a higher, cleaner and purer citizenship. Will not hundreds come to this convention and talk about it till our hearts shall burn together within us?

A fine program is arranged, eminent speakers will be present and pertinent resolutions discussed. If 150 delegates come from outside of the city, the railroads will give a reduction on return trips. Can there not be 500 delegates from as many Christian neighborhoods? Let some live man or woman start the movement, and every vicinity in reasonable distance is able, and may be made willing to send a representative, and what untold influence might come out of it.

Brother, sister, weigh well the weighty responsibility that lies on you, personally, in this momentous hour. Rooms at very reasonable rates can be had at European plan hotels. All friends and lovers of pure government are cordially invited to this convention. Remember the date, Dec. 16 and 17. H. H. GEORGE,

Field Secretary of the National Reform Association.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

A WOMAN WHO IS GOING TO JOHANNESBURG TO PRACTICE LAW.

Women Legislators In Colorado—All Shoes Go For Women—Economy In Fuel—The Latest In Fashions—A Woman as an Engineer—Early Victorian Revival.

Mrs. Nettie Coke, attorney at law in Fresno, recently sailed for Johannesburg, South Africa, where she will engage in the practice of the law. Mrs. Coke has become known in Fresno as a woman endowed with unusual pluck and possessing at the same time the happy faculty of being able to make her way in the world with little trouble. Her many friends were astonished somewhat over a year ago when she procured an appointment from Governor Budd as a notary public at Fresno, as she was the only feminine holder of such an office in that portion of the state. When she set up her desk, however, and began to reap a golden harvest by administering oaths and affixing seals, they changed their opinion and admired her pluck. Her subsequent admission to the bar only served to add to her popularity, and she is now a conspicuous and respected member of the legal profession in Fresno.

Although she has met with considerable success in her profession, Mrs. Coke has decided that she could never be content to remain all her life in Fresno or in California, and she has determined to seek broader fields in which to labor. She also wants to see more of the world, and it is this latter desire that has influenced her to go to Africa. She will go first to Honolulu, thence to New Zealand and Australia, in all of which places she will devote some time to sightseeing. Then she will make her way to Cape Town and Johannesburg. Mrs. Coke expects to find ready employment in Johannesburg. Should she fail to succeed in establishing a profitable law practice she will probably return to Fresno, visiting Europe on her way home.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Women Legislators In Colorado.

Mrs. Olive C. Butler, Mrs. Evangeline Heartz and Mrs. M. A. B. Conine of Denver have been elected members of the Colorado house of representatives on the Populist fusion ticket. One of these legislators elect, Mrs. Butler, is a Massachusetts emigrant, a Boston woman, born under the very shadow of Bunker Hill monument and educated in the public and private schools of Massachusetts. She was married, in 1866, to Simpson D. Butler of Lynn, Mass., where they resided until 1880. Then they went to Denver. Mrs. Butler is a prominent worker in the Woman's Relief Corps and is a post department secretary of Colorado and Wyoming. Mrs. Butler has always taken a deep interest in public affairs, says the Denver News, especially since the right of suffrage was granted the women of that state.

Mrs. Heartz is a native of Prince Edward Island. While she is not extensively known in public life, she has many friends in her domestic relations. She has taken an interest in city affairs and is closely allied to the labor element through her husband, Mr. John Heartz, who was for five years president of the Bricklayers' International union, No. 1, of Denver and is now its treasurer.

Mrs. Conine is a "clubwoman." She is serving her second term as president of the North Side Woman's club, an organization of over 200 members, having been unanimously re-elected last spring. She has for about the same length of time been chairman of the legislative committee of the reform department of the Woman's club of Denver, in which capacity she has spent much time and effort in thoroughly informing herself concerning legislation specially needed by the state. Mrs. Conine has been interested in reform movements for several years, especially since the ballot was granted to Colorado women. According to the Denver News, she was nominated and elected without ever having sat in a convention or attached herself to any party, and that she will do herself, her sex and the parties which selected her credit in the legislature goes without saying among all who know her.

Economy In Fuel.

There are very few families in this country where economy is not practiced to some extent at least, or where the bills for fuel are not deemed of sufficient importance to deserve a careful scrutiny. In the majority of households the coal bill becomes little short of a terror, especially during long and severe winters. Any way in which this expenditure can be cut down is hailed with delight by the great army of breadwinners, most of whom find it by no means easy to make both ends meet when pay day, with its attendant bills, comes around.

Careful personal attention will soon convince any housekeeper that there is a good deal of waste in this department, and that it only requires the prudent hand of an interested person to make a decided difference in the sum expended.

A large percentage of heat from coal goes up the chimney because the dampers are not properly adjusted. The fire is started, and the heat becomes intense. Instead of shutting off the draft and checking the fire, which is roaring like a blast furnace, the idea seems to prevail that it must stay in this condition until the house is heated. By that time the first lot of fuel is almost consumed, with little result, except to heat the chimney and a portion of the outside air. If, instead of this manner of managing, the dampers were arranged as soon as the fire was well under way, the hot air would circulate through the pipes instead. A high degree of heat may be kept up by putting on coal a couple of shovelfuls at one time. Packing the heater with coal and allowing it to burn out is not the best way to economize.—New York Ledger.

A Quaker Garb.

A most Quakerish garb was worn the other day by a hostess who was presenting to her friends a young musical celebrity at a morning musicale.

The skirt of the gown was gray silk. The seams were heavily strapped with black. The bodice was a plain round waist with puffed sleeves, skin tight below the elbow. Around the neck, enveloping it like a shawl, was a double ruffle of gray silk. It was bound with black silk in a tiny bias fold and was crossed upon the breast and carried around the waist. At the back it was tied in two long, narrow ends, edged with black silk. It, too, had a trace of black through it. To a woman of any figure, slim or stout, this fichu effect is very becoming, for it plumps out a slender figure and helps a poor one.—Philadelphia Letter.

A Woman as an Engineer.

"One of the pleasures of camping at Mountain Home, Cal.," says the Tulare Register, "is an occasional visit to the lumber mill and a pleasant chat with the engineer, Mrs. Cherbborne of Porterville, wife of the proprietor of the mill." This lady learned her profession many years ago from her father, who was a mill owner. An emergency arising, he wisely concluded that the accident of sex need not deprive him of the assistance of his capable daughter. He therefore instructed her in the mysteries of steam propulsion. She has since added to her practical knowledge the theoretical part taught in books and expects soon to receive a diploma showing her competency to run a locomotive.

Mrs. Cherbborne is found amid the whirling machinery and flying sawdust, arrayed, not in bloomers, but in a neat pink gingham dress, straw hat and strong buckskin gloves.

The work in which Mrs. Cherbborne is engaged has proved a financial benefit to herself and family, as she can employ a woman in the kitchen for much less than would pay an engineer, and she also enjoys her work. She says: "Of course it is easier than housekeeping. It is a man's work, and there is only one thing to attend to, while in housekeeping one must think of a hundred things at once."

The subject of this sketch is a woman of ideas and an enthusiastic equal suffragist, and those who have listened to her public utterances say that she makes an able and convincing argument for woman's advancement.

DRAWING BROWNIES.

The Picture Which Won First Prize In the Chicago Inter Ocean Contest.

The Chicago Inter Ocean recently offered prizes for pictures of brownies drawn by children of 15 years or under. The young artists had to furnish their own ideas, and they were allowed full scope. Palmer Cox, the originator of the brownie pictures, was judge of the contest. Over 1,000 sketches were submitted, many of them being of exceptional merit. First prize was awarded to Daisy Derby, a Chicago miss of 15 years. Her winning picture is herewith reproduced.

Mr. Cox said: "The task of acting as judge in The Inter Ocean's contest has been to me a very pleasant one. I have often been amused as the familiar face of one of my creations peeped at me from an envelope, bearing startling proof in every feature that the young artist had studied the character closely. Many sketches, of course, were copies of my own works, and it was remarkable to find how many boys and girls had chosen the same scene or grouping out of the large variety I have made in the last 14 years. There was a peculiar pleasure to me in this because at the time I drew these identical pictures I felt that they were likely to make an impression.

"Some ambitious young artists allowed their fancies to carry them beyond brownie limits and did not confine themselves to the old Scotch tradition, wherein brownies are good natured little goblins 'who work and sport while weary households sleep and never allow themselves to be seen by mortal eye.'"

Got Around Grannie.

The little daughters of a member of the Duke of Connaught's staff were recently invited to lunch with the daughters of the latter at Government House, Aldershot. After the meal the children adjourned to the grounds.

"Do you know my grandmother?" asked Princess Margaret of one of her guests.

"No," was the reply.

"I am going to stay with her at Windsor tomorrow," continued the princess, "and she is going to have a company from London and some theatricals. I mean to get round grannie to let me sit up and see them. I always have to go to bed."

Evidently Princess Margaret did "get round grannie," for the day after the theatrical performance which she was so anxious to witness her name was among those of the spectators. During the absence of their parents in India she and her sister were so much with the queen that they probably know as well as any of the royal grandchildren how to coax their august grandmother into giving them a wished for treat.—Pearson's Weekly.

Buy Fruit Instead of Candy.

"I wish," said a doctor the other day as he watched a group of school children troop out of a candy store, where they had been spending their pennies, "that I could form a society among little folks in which each member would take a pledge to spend all his pocket money for fruit instead of candy." It seemed a funny way of putting it, didn't it? But the physician was very much in earnest, and at the moment it probably occurred to him that, as children like clubs, an anticandy club would be a very good one for them. He wanted to do two things—to stop their eating the unhealthful sweet and to coax them to eat more fruit. An apple or a banana or an orange can usually, one or the other of them, be bought for the price of a little candy, and the fruit is much better in every way than the sweet.—New York Times.

Whence the Wind?

How many of our boys and girls know how to find the direction of the wind? Of course, if it is blowing a gale, any one could tell. But suppose only a gentle breeze is stirring—hardly enough to make the fickle weathercock decide which way to point—then what would you do?

In such a case an old woodsman or hunter will thrust one finger into his mouth, wetting it well, and then hold it up in the air. The side which feels coldest shows which direction the wind comes from. The reason of this is plain. The more rapid movement of the air from one direction causes the moisture on that side of the finger to evaporate with greater rapidity, thus giving the sensation of coolness. Try it and see.

Guess Which Hat.

This trick will take the breath away from your friends when you try it on them. It is called the wonderful hat. Take three pieces of bread, or any other eatable, and three hats. Place the three pieces of bread on a table and place a hat over each one. Now lift up each hat, and, taking the piece of bread which it covers, eat it before the company, replacing each hat, opening down, as you do so. Then ask those who are watching you under which hat of the three they would like to find the bread. Whichever one is designated, place that hat upon your head and say that you have done as they requested.—Chicago Record.

Edna's Supper.

Edna asked grandma for a scrambled egg for supper. "But," said grandma, "mamma likes to have you eat light suppers." "Oh, no, grandma, she lets me have lots of things darker than eggs."—Youth's Companion.

Batting made from lamb's wool is now used for filling the best comfortables that are made. It is much warmer than cotton and very light. It comes in two and three pound sheets that are 76 by 84 inches.

Champ's Other Name.

Bowwow, little dog! Have you any name?
Yes, sir, two; but they don't mean the same.
One from my master—he calls me Champ—
And one from the neighbors—they call me Scamp.

—St. Nicholas.

Evening Hymn.

The day is past and over.
All thanks, O Lord, to thee!
I pray thee now that sinless
The hours of dark may be.
O Jesus, keep me in thy sight
And save me through the coming night!

The joys of day are over.
I lift my heart to thee
And ask thee that offenseless
The hours of dark may be.
O Jesus, make their darkness light
And save me through the coming night!

The toils of day are over.
I raise the hymn to thee
And ask that free from peril
The hours of dark may be.
O Jesus, keep me in thy sight
And guard me through the coming night!

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 13. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Lessons from Solomon's life and writings.—I Kings iii, 5-15.

Solomon was the youngest son of David, the king of Israel. His name meant "the peaceful one," probably given because David was a man of war and desired quiet and peace for his son. Solomon was born and reared in Jerusalem. His mother was Bathsheba, the widow of Uriah, the Hittite. Until Absalom's death he was the favorite son of David and the destined heir to the throne. At his death Solomon succeeded to the vacant place in his father's heart, and David promised Bathsheba that at his death Solomon should become the king. Solomon was raised under the influences of his father and Nathan, the prophet. He was educated in a manner fitting his position and his future destiny as king. When David was old and feeble, Adonijah, Solomon's older brother, attempted to usurp the throne, but his plot miscarried, and Solomon was anointed king at Gihon. His father soon died, and he then became the sole occupant of the throne. Solomon reigned for 42 years over Israel, and in his reign the kingdom reached its most splendid position among natives. Never before or since has it equaled the splendor of Solomon's time. Royalty from far and near came to behold the magnificence of Israel and catch the words of wisdom that fell from Israel's king. His principal work was the building of the temple. He also built for himself a magnificent royal palace. But his life was marred by his union with heathen wifes and his gross idolatry, which resulted from such marriages.

Solomon was a prolific writer. "He spake 3,000 proverbs, and his songs were a thousand and five" (I Kings iv, 32). We have only a few of his 3,000 proverbs and none of his songs. Much may be learned from the life and writings of Solomon that should be instructive and beneficial. Learn—

1. A lesson on wisdom. Solomon was a wise man—the wisest of men. Where did he get wisdom? From God. Why? Because he desired it above everything else, that he might do his life work properly. How did he use it? For the formation of a splendid nation and the betterment of the human race. We all need wisdom. Let us seek it earnestly of God, that we may do the work of life, and when obtained let us use it for Christ and humanity.

2. A lesson on folly. Solomon was a good preacher, but a poor practicer. It seems paradoxical, and yet the wisest of men was one of the most foolish of men. As a poet he could see the charms and beauties of life, as a philosopher the wisdom of virtue and the folly of vice, but as a man he failed to be benefited by what he saw. Let us be warned by his example and his fate.

Bible Readings.—I Kings i, 50-53; iv, 29-34; vi, 1-14; viii, 1-14, 22-26; ix, 25; xi, 1-13; Proverbs, Songs of Solomon and Ecclesiates.

Gentleness.

Gentleness is love in society. It is love holding intercourse with those around it. It is that cordiality of aspect and that soul of speech which assures that kind and earnest hearts may still be met with here below. It is that quiet influence which, like the scented flame of an alabaster lamp, fills many a home with light and warmth and fragrance altogether. It is the carpet, soft and deep, which, while it diffuses a look of ample comfort, deadens many a creaking sound. It is the curtain which from many a beloved form wards off at once the summer's glow and the winter's wind. It is the pillow on which sickness lays its head and forgets half its misery and to which death comes in a balmier dream. It is considerateness. It is tenderness of feeling. It is warmth of affection. It is promptitude of sympathy. It is love in all its depths and all its delicacy. It is everything included in that matchless grace, the gentleness of Christ.—Parish Visitor.

The Folly of Unbelief.

In view of the prevailing and abiding love of Him in whose hands all power in heaven and on earth is lodged, what a folly seems our unbelief! And what a sin and shame our worry! We have but the duty of the present. The provision for the morrow is our Father's care. And because He cares and wills that we should have the help that never fails His trusting children in their hour of need we can put our whole strength into the moment's work, assured that the morrow's task will never be allowed to pass beyond the morrow's strength. —Congregationalist.

The Difference.

Sectarianism, hard, narrow, bigoted and bitter, is to be avoided and condemned, but denominationalism, broad, liberal, reasonable, charitable, is a good thing and should be cultivated.—Zion's Herald.

Handle It Carefully.

$6,000,000 FOR OUR BEER.

English Brewery Syndicates Collect That Sum In America.

The people of this country pay England $6,000,000 annually, in cold cash, for the privilege of getting drunk. For this vast sum of money we receive not a dollar in benefit, but in addition we throw away millions upon millions more, slaughter our children, debauch our mothers and damn our souls. It was in 1888 that English capitalists perceived their opportunity to harvest a "mulct" tax from American debauchery. Accordingly syndicates were organized in London, the principal ones being the City of London Contract corporation, the Executors' Trustees' corporation and the London Debenture corporation. These corporations, operating in harmony and practically one corporation, sent agents to America to buy breweries and organize a series of American corporations, each of which was placed in charge of several of the purchased breweries. Thus was the "English syndicate" organized. Now it owns 79 American breweries which it has turned over to 24 American corporations organized for the purpose, of which the English capitalists own all the stock. The breweries purchased comprise nearly one-half the brewing capacity of all the breweries in the United States.

The issue of The Brewers' Journal of Sept. 1 gave a complete list of all these purchased institutions as well as of the newly organized corporations, the capital stock, dividends declared and information of vital interest to voters who are studying the issues of this campaign. The figures given as the "amount of dividends" are only approximate. They are computed on all the stock as well as the bonds. Some of the "ordinary" stock, perhaps, paid no dividend, but on the other hand no computations are made on the stock of many breweries which paid no dividends, but which, at the same time, paid interest on their bonds, which amounts do not appear in the figures. It is therefore likely that the total of nearly $6,000,000, paid these English syndicates in dividends will fall considerably short of the amount actually paid. Of course these statistics do not include any amounts that English capitalists have invested in American distilleries or wine production. Neither do they take into consideration the London syndicate organized to buy all the leading saloons of Chicago and which did purchase a large number. This $6,000,000 is simply the tribute we pay England for the privilege of drinking beer.—New York Voice.

AMERICAN INEBRIETY.

American inebriety at large is closely limited to towns and cities. It occurs among the highly strung, nervous, overworked portion of the men. It will be noticed that it describes many types of rhythm. Beginning with the individuals who exhibit the usual types of periodicity, we see the tides of inebriety rise periodically and recede at very regular intervals. These tides are ascribed variously to the periodical changes in business prosperity, but there is no one cause which determines this feature. It is no doubt true, however, that the changes in business and the occasional temperance agitations do much to maintain the periodical feature of public inebriety. The psychology of these alternate waves of temperance agitation and debauchery is an interesting subject, as a writer has well said, for it demonstrates a fact of nervous action, which is that any extreme is certain to be followed by a swing of all forces in the opposite direction sooner or later. This law always holds in politics in those countries which are governed by the people.

In America public inebriety rises highest during the general election. Following this it begins to decline, and reaches the lowest ebb in about two years, when the careful watcher may see that the tide is again rising.

The American makes a business of inebriety as he does of all other things, at least to this extent—he drinks to most desperate degradation when he enters upon a debauch. One drink follows another in most desperate haste, and the poisonous effect is quickly brought on. The foreigner sits in his beer garden and sips leisurely while he smokes, talks and eats, while the American drinks hastily from the bar. For these reasons the secondary diseases, accidental deaths, and fatal acute alcoholic poisonings are more prevalent in America.—Dr. Leslie E. Keeley in Banner of Gold.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON XII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 20.

Text of the Lesson, Math. ii, 1-12—Memory Verses, 10, 11—Golden Text, Luke ii, 10—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "Now, when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judæa in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem." He was foreordained before the foundation of the world (I Pet. i, 20), and when the fullness of time was come God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law (Gal. iv, 4, 5). Not only is He the Son of God, but, as in chapter i, 1, the Son of David, the son of Abraham, and therefore the one in whom all the promises to David and Abraham will be fulfilled. In Him shall all Scripture be fulfilled, for it all concerns Him (Luke xxiv, 27, 44). His birth in Bethlehem was but an event in a life without beginning or end (John xvii, 5; Rev. xxii, 1-5).

2. "Saying, Where is He that is born King of the Jews, for we have seen His star in the east and are come to worship Him?" They had no doubt as to whom they wanted to see, nor as to what they wanted to do. They came to see the newborn King of the Jews and to worship Him. It was long since the Jews had a king, and they were now subject to the Romans, of whom Herod was the representative. But in their heaven given book it was written that the throne of David should be established forever and the promises to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob fulfilled (Isa. ix, 6, 7; Mic. vii, 19, 20).

3. "When Herod, the king, had heard these things, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him." If he had known the promises of God concerning the overthrow of Israel's enemies and the future glory of Israel, he might well have been troubled. See as a sample Mic. v, 15; vii, 16, 17. But, not knowing the Scriptures, all he saw in the words of the wise men was probably the possibility of a deliverer for Israel who would redeem them from the power of Rome. The redemption of Israel will yet come, and the signs of its approach are not few (Luke xxi, 25-28).

4. "And when he had gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people together, he demanded of them where Christ should be born." He would thus see if the leaders of the people were expecting a king, and if there was anything in this extraordinary visit and question of these men from the east. Christ is the Greek for the Hebrew word Messiah, and the English of each is the anointed. See the use of the word in I Sam. ii, 10, 35; Ps. ii, 2, 6; Dan. ix, 25, 26. Hear also the chief priests mockingly call Him "Christ the King of Israel" (Mark xv, 31, 32).

5. "And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judæa, for thus it is written by the prophet." Herod would now see that there must be something in it, for the prophets of Israel had foretold what the wise men from the east indicated had now come to pass. That there were those in Israel who were patiently waiting for this great event is clear from the record concerning Simeon and Anna (Luke ii, 25, 26, 38). There were those who looked for redemption in Israel and expected a Redeemer about that time.

6. "And thou, Bethlehem, in the land of Juda, art not the least among the princes of Juda, for out of thee shall come a Governor, that shall rule my people Israel." This is quoted from Mic. v, 2. The rest of the verse is most interesting and a proof of the divinity of this child, "His goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." He appeared to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, to Moses, Joshua, Gideon and Solomon. Jesus, the Son of Mary, is the Lord God of the holy prophets. He sees the end from the beginning, and 700 years before the event foretold His birth in Bethlehem.

7. "Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared." The devil, whose great weapon is death, was working in Herod to destroy this child King. This is evident from verse 16, for the age of the children slain is associated with the inquiry which he made of the wise men. What blessed little martyrs those innocent babes were! They died for Him, and He will not forget it in that day. "They shall come again from the land of the enemy" (Jer. xxxi, 16). Death, the enemy, took their bodies for a time, but they shall rise again.

8. "And he sent them to Bethlehem and said, Go and search diligently for the young child, and when ye have found Him, bring me word again, that I may come and worship Him also." The devil is a liar and a murderer (John viii, 44), but all his plots against God and His Christ shall come to naught. He seems successful for the present, but the end is not yet.

9. "When they had heard the king, they departed, and, lo, the star which they saw in the east went before them till it came and stood over where the young child was"—evidently guided them to the very house. Possibly an angel of God guiding them all the way, for ordinary stars, while they guide the mariner across the trackless sea, do not stand over a particular house in a town, as if saying, "This is the place." Angels are called stars in Rev. i, 20; ix, 1.

10. "When they saw the star, they rejoiced with exceeding great joy." It would seem that they lost sight of it for a time. Was it because they stopped to inquire of Herod, or in order that they might inquire of Herod? It is not written, but this we know, that God Himself is all sufficient for His people in all things. He does sometimes guide thus through people, but when He begins to do a supernatural thing, as in this case, it is not likely that He would have us turn aside to man.

11. "And when they were come unto the house they saw the young child with Mary, his mother, and they fell down and worshiped them, and when they had opened their treasures they presented unto Him gifts—gold and frankincense and myrrh." Thus God provided beforehand for a journey of which as yet Joseph and Mary knew nothing. He will provide for all the needs of His people in His own wonderful way even if He has to use an angel or birds or even fishes. These men, how many we are not told, believed that this child would yet be the king of the Jews, and as such they worshiped Him.

12. "And being warned of God in a dream that they should not return to Herod, they departed into their own country another way." Notice in the rest of this chapter the other instances of direct guidance from God concerning this child, and if you are a child of God by faith in Christ Jesus fear not to believe that you are loved as He is loved and will be equally cared for (John xv, 9; xvii, 23).

Masks, Faces, and Shadows. By Joseph Parker.

Heather from the Brae.

By David Lyall.

"Lyall is of the school of Barrie and Ian Maclaren, but is far from being an imitator. He writes from conviction, because he has been deeply impressed with the simple pathos of the Scotch character and because his love of this life is quite as deep as his knowledge of it."—Examiner, New York.

"We have read every word of this book, and we can unhesitatingly say that viewed from every standpoint, we have here one of the best biographies that it has been our fortune to read for a long time. We feel a great relief in so saying, for Dr. Gordon was a man of such power along so many lines; was a nature of such sweetness, sympathy and wisdom, and purest, noblest Christian character, and withal, so widely known and so deeply loved, that had his biographer failed to reproduce him as men knew him, the failure would have been most disappointing."—The Standard.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE HISTORY

In this book alone can be found the information sought by every Bible reader, whether old or young, scholarly or unlettered. It is, indeed, a great work.

Recent discoveries in archæology have brought the world of today face to face with the men who lived, and acted and wrote during the early periods covered by Biblical Historians. These discoveries have resulted in the triumphant vindication of the sacred volume from the charges brought against it by open foes and pretended friends. Every intelligent person will order the book, as the matter contained in it is of vital importance and cannot be found in any other book on earth.

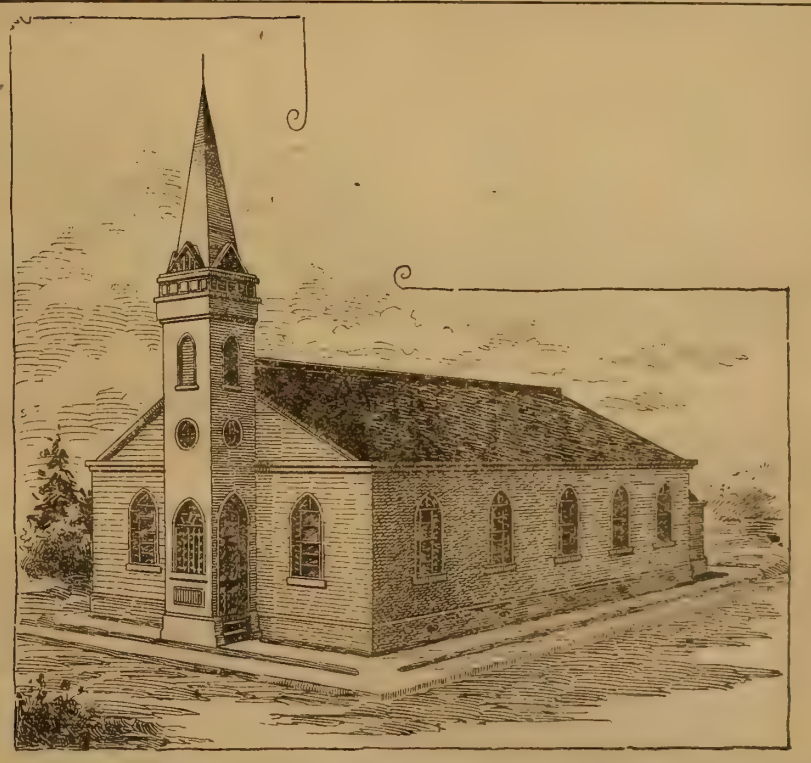
The Larkin Soap Mfg. Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

Our offer explained more fully in Christian Cynosure of Nov 19th and 26th.

The Northwestern Christian Advocate, Chicago, says: "For the Soaps manufactured by the Larkin Soap Mfg. Co. we have heard many expressions of satisfaction and commendation. Knowing what we do, we recommend the Company with confidence."

From the Epworth Herald, Chicago: "We have examined the soaps and premiums, as described above, and know they will give satisfaction. We know the Company, have personally visited their establishment in Buffalo, have purchased and used the soaps, and gladly say everything is as represented



The above cut is an exact likeness of the proposed new (brick) St. Matthew Baptist church, Francis J Davidson, pastor, corner Second and Clara Sts, New Orleans, La. Bro Davidson accepted a call to this church in May, 1889. Their membership was then 13. They had no real estate nor a dollar in treasury in 1890. Through Mr. C. W. Sterry, of Pontiac, Ill., they purchased two lots and built a small frame structure for worship in 1891. Before it was paid for an incendiary set fire to it, and the building with all its contents was destroyed. However, another was soon erected, which is still in use. Bro Davidson has had a great deal of opposition to his church because of his loyalty to Christ and opposition to worldliness This church is the only anti secret society and anti rum colored church in New Orleans. They have an article embodied in their church bylaws against secret societies, intoxicants, excursions, picnics and church entertainments Bro. Davidson, by earnest prayer and continual working has increased his membership to 100. This church buries its dead and takes care of its sick. Bro Davidson's home was destroyed by fire, the work of an incendiary, July 20th last. He earnestly appeals to every reform friend to contribute something to help in building and paying for this new brick church. The Louisiana Baptist Convention will meet at this church (D. V.) in September, 1897.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

MANAGEMENT OF BEES.

In Winter Quarters on Summer Stands. Feeding the Bees.

Bees that are to be wintered on their summer stands should be placed in winter quarters when first frosts appear, but it is often put off much longer, even until severe winter is upon us. When this occurs, our only resort is to use substitutes, the time being past that would admit of proper management.

A colony of bees that do not have the necessary supply of honey to carry them through the winter will surely die, and all weak colonies that do not have bees enough for self protection will also die. Again, colonies left on their summer stands, in thin, unprotected hives, are liable to succumb to very severe cold weather, even if they are well supplied with honey. Protection is not only a saving in this respect, but it is a saving in the pounds of honey consumed, and the amount thus saved will pay for the extra protection. And this is not all. A colony of bees placed in proper condition, at the right time, is usually worth as much as two colonies that are not the following spring. Thus writes a correspondent in The American Agriculturist and authority for the following:

Bees should be fed liquid sirup only during warm weather. After cold weather has set in it is not safe to food liquids, and the only feed that can be used is candy made from a good quality of granulated sugar. This may be made in large cakes or slabs and laid over the frames, directly over the cluster of bees. This candy serves as a good and healthful food for them and in many respects is better than natural stores. The candy may be molded in the regular honey frame and suspended in the hive, the same as a frame of honey.

It is never too late to provide protection for bees during winter, if neglected in the fall, but the conditions must be just right at the time of doing it, or it will prove to be a serious damage. Bees should not be handled or disturbed in cold weather, but only on a warm day, when they are on the wing. A colony of bees should not be moved from one locality to another, except when taken away a mile or more, as changing the location or place of entrance to the hive in the immediate vicinity will be followed by a heavy loss of bees the first time they take a flight. Good chaff hives are the best outdoor protection, and they should be made large enough to admit of not less than two inches of packing space around the sides and bottom of the hive proper and four or six inches on the top, and to double this amount is still better.

Trenching Celery.

The celery which is marketed after January is trenched out of doors as follows by a contributor to Country Gentleman. He says:

About the 1st of November I take up the unblanched celery without any banking or handling. I put six rows in a trench. I first take up the two middle rows of plants with a spading fork, setting them to one side, then run the plow several times through the place from which the plants were taken, making a deep furrow. This is made deep enough with a spade so that the tops of the plants when standing upright in the trench will be about six inches above the surface. I make the trench wide enough for four plants, and take them up with a little soil on the roots and set them rather loosely in the trench. This allows more air to circulate among them, and they are less liable to heat and rot.

The earth is drawn close to the plants with a hoe, or if the boards are at hand, narrow boards may first be set on both sides of the celery. These will keep the earth from coming in contact with the celery and will save washing it. Two boards are nailed together in the form of a trough and laid over the rows for a roof to keep the plants dry. A small opening is left at the ends and joints for ventilation, which is filled with straw in cold weather. It is very important that attention be given to ventilation if the celery is to keep well. Before the ground freezes about a foot of earth is shoveled on the trenches, and it is better to put this on gradually.

Beet Sugar Factories.

According to The American Agriculturist, the air is full of propositions for beet sugar factories. Not only California, but most of the other states of the arid west and of the Missouri and Mississippi valleys are keenly alive to the possibilities of this new industry, while a clever lot of men in central New York have quietly secured an option on the outfit of the only beet sugar factory in Quebec. The middle south is also moving in the matter, and the enterprising farmers and business men of Chattanooga are already in the race for a factory, claiming unsurpassed advantages for their section. It is also told that several parties have passage engaged for Europe to order machinery and secure foreign capital for new beet sugar factories.

News and Notes.

A new departure in education is represented by the modern dairy schools.

None but the best apples ought to be exported. Don't ship poor fruit.

There is now a machine that will crush and cut corn fodder. The stalks are cut into short pieces and then run through a cylinder, which smashes them into a soft, easily handled mass.

The final estimate of the apple crop substantiates earlier reports of a very large yield in the states of chief production. New England, New York and Canada have an enormous surplus, which is in contrast with the deficiency for the west.

Thrashing machines are now made with a blower attachment that distributes the straw over the stack and saves the labor formerly done by men.

Lincoln sheep are said to be in great favor abroad.

Black knot occurs in every state of this Union. The remedy is to cut out and burn the knots as fast as formed.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

NATIONAL SOLONS

Now Ready to Consider the Work That Is Before Them.

TIME CALLED IN THE CONGRESS.

Prospects for Business in the Two Chambers - Plenty of Work on Hand - House Can Proceed with the Appropriations, as Some Bills Are Ready, and Will Probably Do So.

Washington, Dec. 7.—Congress is once more in session and ready to do business, or will be by the time this dispatch is read by the public. The two houses convened this noon in the time-honored manner, the hour or so previous to the fall of the presiding officers' gavels, showing the floors of the two chambers scattered over with groups of congressmen greeting each other, talking politics, or speculating on what would be said in the president's message about Cuba or the finances, and what would be done by this session of congress with reference to the tariff, the money question or the pleas of the Cuban rebels for the assistance of Uncle Sam.

Little To Be Done This Week.

Vice President Stevenson, with a rap of the gavel, called the senate to order at noon today. The first day of the session will be devoted almost entirely to receiving the president's message, provided it is sent in today, as it is generally conceded that it will be. Immediately after the opening prayer a committee was appointed to notify the president and the house of representatives that the senate was organized and ready to receive communications and proceed with business. The first week of the session is not expected to be productive of any important results in a legislative way. There are many senators who think nothing should be done beyond the passage of the appropriation bills at this session, and as these measures necessarily originate in the house there will be a disposition to postpone the season of activity until some of these bills can be received from the other end of the Capitol.

There Is Plenty of Work Ready.

The probabilities are that the daily sessions at the beginning will be comparatively brief, and that the senate will content itself with four days' work each week. The calendar presents a wide range of material for consideration in case the senate shows a disposition to busy itself. In this is included the immigration bill, which is the unfinished business; the Pacific railroad refunding bill, the statehood bills and the Dingley tariff and bond bills, as well as the Cuban and Hawaiian questions. Senators Lodge and Chandler have announced their determination to press the immigration bill to a vote as speedily as they can. It will be the first regular business to be taken up, and cannot be displced except by vote or unanimous consent. They hope to get the bill through before the holidays.

Tariff Will Wait on a Caucus.

It is also possible that the president's message may suggest subjects for speeches, and there are those who predict that the Cuban question will receive vigorous attention from the beginning of the session. It is generally agreed that the Republicans will hold a caucus to determine upon a line of policy, especially with reference to the tariff, and until after the exchange of views which this conference will permit no step is likely to be taken which will commit the party to any position on any question of political significance.

HOUSE LIKELY TO PUSH BUSINESS.

Appopriations Have the Right-of-Way, and Two of Them Are Ready.

The opening week promises to see the house put its shoulder to the wheel of the regular appropriation bills. Chairman Cannon and the committee on appropriations were at work all last week, and it is their eanest intention to pass two and possible three of the bills before the Christmas holdays. The pension and legislative appropriation bills are about ready, and work on one or the other of these will be begun in the house before the week closes. The pension bill, although it carries a larger amount of money than any of the other supply bills, is very brief, and unless some political discussion is precipitated is not likely to consume much time in its consideration. Beyond these two bills nothing is in sight at present. It is, of course, not unlikely that the committee on rules will provide something for the house to do in case the committee on appropriations is not prepared to go ahead with either of these appropriation bills.

The course of the legislation, so far as the important measures on the calendar is concerned (like the Pacific railroad funding bill, the Nicaragua canal bill, etc.), will be determined entirely by the rules committee. But it is safe to assume that nothing will be allowed to block the appropriation bills as they are reported for action. They always have the-right-of-way at the short session.

Minnesota State Convention at Willmar, Feb. 23, 24.

Gladstone says that "Jesuitry is the deadliest foe that mental and moral liberty has ever known."

An excellent report of the New England Convention by the Secretary, Miss Flagg, awaits our next issue.

The National Reform Convention in Willard Hall begins Wednesday this week at 2 P. M., and closes Thursday evening.

The Washington State Convention will be in Seattle about Jan. 18, 19. Will not the friends in Minnesota and Washington begin at once to arrange for their State Conventions?

Ten men having a secret purpose and understanding can manage a hundred men in almost any assembly. Jesuitry in our government may be compared to the ten men who have a secret understanding among the hundred who have not.

The most important victory of Jesuitry in recent years was in the supreme court decision of Wisconsin against the use of the Bible in the public schools. Joseph Cook says: "It is beyond controversy that the arm of the most powerful ecclesiastical organization known to history is lifted with a Jesuitical sword in its hand for the purpose of cutting to pieces the historic, absolutely priceless American common school system."

The Western Catholic of this city quotes with approval an editorial from the Ave Maria condemning the school text book, "Readings from the Bible," because "parts of the Bible which are most precious in our sight are necessarily excluded. There is no mention of the founding of Christ's church, of the Last Supper and the institution of the Holy Eucharist, of the power conferred on the apostles and their successors to forgive sins."

ABNER BRANSON

We are glad to show our readers this week the picture of a Friend indeed; the large-hearted and faithful Friend whose wise management contributed so much to make the recent Iowa State Convention a success. He is a native of Ohio, and came to Iowa by way of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers when a boy, arriving at Muscatine in the spring of 1853. He located in Cedar county where he continued to reside for forty years. In 1867 he started a fruit farm and embarked in horticultural pursuits which he has followed continuously until the present time.

Abner Branson was the Prohibition candidate for Congress at the last election in the sixth Iowa district, and was highly commended by some of the State press. He became interested in the anti-secret reform from hearing a lecture by Pres. Blanchard in a school house, in Cedar Co., Ia., about the time our National Association was organized. His reading led him to take a radical stand against the lodge system as a whole. Because of his strong temperance principles he was often urged to join the temperance lodges, the Good Templars especially. But the lodge organizers found that his eyes had been opened to the fact that these minor lodges were but stepping-stones to higher.

An important item in holding a successful State Convention is to select the right place in which to hold it. This is secured for Missouri; and this morning's mail brings a pledge of ten dollars. Let us hear from as many as possible at once. There ought to be several weeks' work done preceding the convention. Let every friend in that State do liberally. Rev. S. H. Swartz has promised to attend. No one can help the cause more. Write at once.

It is a fact of history that in 1863 Napoleon III., then at the head of the strongest Papal power in Europe, had about succeeded in inducing England to unite with France in espousing the cause of the Southern Confederacy; and what saved our government in that critical hour was a dispatch to the government of France and England from the Czar of Russia warning them that if they interferred in our civil war he would at once dispatch his naval fleet from Cronstadt and take the side of our Federal government.

The able address of Rev. J. M. Foster in this issue gives striking instances of the secret power of Jesuitry aiming to exalt itself upon the ruins of all governments. It has been proven beyond a doubt that Maximillian's disastrous expedition to Mexico in the crisis of our civil war was a gigantic plot by the Jesuitical powers of Europe to found a papal empire upon the ruins of our Republic.

At the last regular monthly meeting of the Chicago Woman's Educational Union on Dec. 3, Miss M. J. Onahan, a prominent Catholic lady, read a paper giving strong testimony for the adoption of Bible Readings in the public schools. Her father, perhaps the most prominent Catholic layman of this city, has given his influence for the use of these Readings which has made him the target of the Jesuitical press. A widening chasm is opening in that church between Jesuitry and progressive enlightened Catholicism. There are indications that the latter will soon disentangle itself from the deadly coils of the former.

"Readings from the Bible," selected for use in our public schools by the Chicago Woman's Educational Union, promises to accomplish more to destroy the influence of Jesuitry against our school system than any force hitherto employed. It is a neat volume of near 200 pages of choice Scripture selections, topically arranged. The editorial committee consisted of Hon. W. J. Onahan, Dr. J. H. Barrows and C. C. Bonney. But we understand that the laboring oar in the preparation of this volume was in the hands of Mrs. Elizabeth Blanchard Cook, president of the Woman's Educational Union of Chicago. We learn that these Bible Readings are being put into the public schools all over our country. Recently 2,000 of them were put into the schools of Minneapolis, we understand, by the recommendation of Archbishop Ireland. They are also used in the schools of Lincoln, Neb., Memphis, Tenn., and of other cities.

Lord Robert Montague of England, once such a zealous Papist that Gladstone called him "the champion of the Papal church," but he left that church in 1882 because he said "The shock which I experienced at the discovery of the gross immoralities of the Romish priests and then the knowledge that the prelates of Rome taught the doctrines of rebellion, excused dishonesty and murder, and were carrying on political intrigue." He was on intimate terms with leading Jesuits, and an esteemed friend of Cardinal Manning, and of the Pope himself. After leaving the Papal church he wrote to this country in 1887, "I know from personal experience in 1863 that your great war, by which you lost thousands of brave citizens and immense capital, was planned and promoted by the Jesuits. Rome cannot endure a strong Protestant power. Therefore she tried to split your great and powerful country in two, and if she had succeeded she would have been continually irritating the South against the North."

FREEDOM.

BY JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

Men! whose boast it is that ye
Come of fathers brave and free,
If there breathe on earth a slave,
Are we truly free and brave?
If ye do not feel the chain,
When it works a brother's pain
Are ye not base slaves indeed,
Slaves unworthy to be freed?

Women! who shall one day bear
Sons to breathe New England air,
If ye hear, without a blush,
Deeds to make the roused blood rush
Like red lava through your veins,
For your sisters now in chains;
Answer! are ye fit to be
Mothers of the brave and free?

Is true freedom but to break
Fetters for our own dear sake,
And, with leathern hearts, forget
That we owe mankind a debt?
No! true freedom is to share
All the chains our brothers wear,
And with heart and hand to be
Earnest to make others free.

They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak;
They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think;
They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

NEW YORK LETTER.

BY REV. F. M. FOSTER.

It is a satisfaction to see the great battle on the question of "secrecy" thickening; to hear "the thunder of the captain and the shouting." One encouraging sign is the secret legions appear to be waking up to a consciousness that some kind of defence must be made. The "keep still" policy fails to satisfy inquiries. They must be judged, and their institutions, as others; and no amount of "bluff" and "you don't know" will stop the grand swell of investigation. This is a great gain for those who have fought the issue into publicity —the place where, above all others, the devil and his followers do not want it. The conventions which are being held are remarkable gatherings, and show that a "door which no man can shut" is opening.

The minor orders, and they are legion, are industrious feeders of the old established ones. They are so organized as to entrap even the friends of anti-secrecy. But on thorough investigation they will be found to rest on the same principle—secrecy—more or less diluted, sugar-coated and embedded in roses. They must be the more carefully watched. Even then the careless and less scrupulous will fall a prey to the evil. In one congregation in New York, with testimony plainly written and plainly understood in pointed opposition to all secretism, several members were found in the Royal Arcanum Society. One had been an officer, and yet in the order for eleven years. Of course this was not known outside his own family. But it shows the danger and the amount of care necessary. These small orders are even more dangerous than the great ones.

The New York Presbytery of the Reformed Presbyterian church appointed a special committee to report on the Royal Arcanum. This committee reported the following, which was unanimously adopted by the Presbytery:

THE ROYAL ARCANUM.

Committee on the character of the Royal Arcanum Society would respectfully report:

The following paper was referred to your committee:

Whereas, Members of the society known as the "Royal Arcanum" have crept into some of our congregation; and

Whereas, There seems to be difference of opinion, some holding that said society is not "secret," therefore, in order that action in all cases be uniform, be it

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to examine the character and obligations of said society, and report at the next meeting of Presbytery.

1. "Arcanum" is a Latin word, and according to the Standard Dictionary, means "something hidden from the mass of men; an inner secret or mystery." The "Royal Arcanum" is the "Royal secret or mystery." The name of this society defines and determines its secret character. It publishes itself to the world as the Royal secret.

2. The following are parts of the "obligation" taken by candidates as they are being initiated into the order.

"In the presence of Almighty God and these witnesses, I do, of my own free will and accord, most solemnly promise that I will strictly comply with all laws, rules and usuages of this fraternity established by the supreme council of the Royal Arcanum.

"I will hold allegiance to said supreme council, and be loyal thereto, as the supreme authority of the entire order.

"I will obey all orders emanating from the supreme or grand councils, or from the subordinate council of which I am a member, so long as they do not conflict with my civil or religious liberty.

"I will keep forever secret all that may transpire during my initiation, and will never improperly communicate to any person any of the words, signs or tokens.

"I will answer all proper signs of the fraternity, and use all proper means to protect a brother from defamation." (See "Constitution and Law of the Royal Arcanum," 1891.)

In this "obligation" the candidate solemnly promises before God that he will hold allegiance to the supreme council of the order, and that he will, if not in conflict with his civil and religious liberty, obey all orders emanating from the supreme council. Here, he is in allegiance to an irresponsible power, and solemnly promise before God that he will obey their commands, though ignorant of what their commands shall be. This is the principle of secrecy against which the Covenanter church testifies.

Furthermore, the candidate solemnly promises that he "will keep forever secret all that may transpire during initiation, etc." In this the candidate gives his conscience into the hands of others and binds himself to not reveal what shall be disclosed. This is inconsistent with Christian character, rectitude and honor, and is clearly inconsistent with the testimony of the Reformed Presbyterian church, which says, "Christians should walk in the light. Their doctrines, their purposes, and manner of life, their rules of conduct, should not be concealed. The formation of secret associations for the prosecution of ends, however good professedly, is inconsistent with the requirement of Christian principle." (See chapter 22, Sec. 5.) Also, in same chapter, the following error is condemned: "That members of associations, either sworn or pledged to secrecy in regard to the nature and doings of such associations, may be admitted to ecclesiastical fellowship." (Error condemned No. 7)

Furthermone, the councils, the subordinate councils, the supreme council, show the various grades of a secret society; and the titles, supreme regent, supreme vice regent, supreme orator, supreme secretary, supreme treasurer, supreme chaplain, supreme guide, supreme warden, supreme secretary, etc , etc , bear the unmistakable stamp of secrecy.

Without entering into the character of associates in their lodges, the "smokers," the saloon to which squads often adjourn; no further demonstration is needed to prove that membership in the Royal Arcanum is inconsistent with the Word of God, with "walking in the light," and with membership in the Reformed Presbyterian church."

In the hard, unpopular, thankless (in this life) battle against "secrecy," "God-speed" should be wished to every worker, and to every paper, such as the Cynosure, supporting the cause. May God make them an hundredfold mightier!

SECRET SOCIETIES VS. THE REPUBLIC.

PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE PENNSYLVANIA ANTI SECRET CONVENTION AT OAKS, WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 18, 1896, BY REV. J. C. M'FEETERS, OF PHILADELPHIA.

Secret societies are in their nature and spirit un-American. America stands before the world for all that is true, noble, public-spirited and great-hearted in humanity. Secret societies stand for that which is narrow, selfish, exclusive and distrustful. The charity which gleams in the American sky and beams in the American's eye, tolerates the noxious plant which is not indigenous to the soil.

Secret societies are contrary to the genius and welfare of the American republic because they are hostile to true liberty. We claim to be a nation of freemen. If any nation has a right to such a claim, it is the American nation. Nowhere over any considerable territory is freedom enjoyed like ours. Any thing that despoils our people of their liberty is therefore contrary to the republic. Masonry, with the brood of lesser fraternities under its wing, despoils multitudes of their rights as freemen. They who belong to the oath-bound lodges are slavishly bound. Having taken the oath before they knew what was required, they surrendered themselves to human masters. Their eyes being closed while passing under the obligations, were afterward opened only to see bonds upon the soul, and bristling penalties guarding every way of escape. Thus the men of the lodge, thousands upon thousands they number, have put themselves under power of their fellow mortals, and their lives under a yoke, which neither the Gospel or the law of Jesus sanctions, and are no longer freemen either in the republic or in Christ.

In the days of African slavery, when a negro was sold to a white man, the new master would sometimes subdue the slave to himself, break his spirit, and forever banish the idea of running away, by tying him to a whipping post, lashing him till the flesh was lacerated and washing the wounds with briny water. When the fainting man came to himself he was tamed, and felt adapted to the new situation. We are reminded of this treatment by the initiatory exercises of Masonry; the half-nakedness, the blindfolding, the halter around the neck, the leading from place to place among mocking comrades, the humiliating ceremonies; when a man goes through all this, and has the wounds washed with the fiery brine of horrid oaths, he is subdued, becomes adapted to the new situation, never dreams of being able to get away, unless in an exceptional case like Fred Douglas the slave, who prayed both with heart and feet, and ran with all his might, keeping his eye fixed upon the guiding star.

The secret fraternities are against the republic because they foster a false religion in this land of Christianity. God has honored our nation with the light of the Gospel. In the thousands of churches that ornament our country the people are taught every week the truths of redemption through Jesus Christ. They know him who died to take away sin; who rose again from the grave; and who ascended up on high to rule the universe of God. They know that he has been exalted by the Father above every name that is named, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue confess.

They know that the nations are given unto him for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. They know that he has gone forth on "his white horse, conquering and to conquer," until all the nations shall bow down to him. They know that "the nation and kingdom that will not serve him must perish." From the inerrant Scriptures they have this knowledge. The American people have embraced the Christian religion which teaches them to place themselves as a nation under Christ, honor his scepter, obey his will, and be prosperous. Our country's safety depends upon her loyalty to him who is King over all. Her danger lies in doing despite to his throne and departing from his law. Freemasonry mutilates the Bible, caricatures Christianity, introduces pagan rites, and assumes horrible obligations in the name of religion. Its corrupt devices have two destructive effects upon our republic: They despoil the heart of the citizen of the virtuous and self-sacrificing principles which constitute the granite foundation of a republic, and they provoke the God of nations to come in judgment against our land.

On the battlefield of Waterloo a lofty cone-like mound has been built to commemorate the victory. It slopes gradually from the base to the summit. On the summit a solid pavement of stone has been laid; above the pavement a massive pedestal of granite; and on the pedestal a bronze lion, the symbol of British power; the lion with mouth, ears and eyes open toward the French capital, as if to roar against any approaching legions. Jesus is "the Lion of the tribe of Judah." After his victory he was exalted to the highest position; the circumference of creation is the base of the mound; its sloping sides are far beyond the azure of the sky; the summit is high as the heaven of heavens; out-laying space immeasurable in all directions is the horizon; a paved work as of a sapphire stone overlays the top; and thereupon the throne, that is from everlasting to everlasting; and the one that sits upon it is He to whom the Father said, "Sit thou at my right hand until I make thine enemies thy footstool;" and concerning whom it is written, "The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of His wrath. He shall judge among the heathen; He shall fill the places with the dead bodies; He shall wound the heads over many countries." And in the presence of that throne, in the very gleamings of its terribleness, in the face of all solemn warnings, Freemasonry is doing what it can to infect our nation with an idolatrous religion, and place our country under the blighting shadow of heathenism, and bring our land under God's wrath.

The secret fraternities are against the republic because they are inimical to good government. They interfere with good government in various ways. First, they obstruct the ways leading to political positions, so that true merit is hindered in the race, and compelled to struggle against unjust disadvantages. In our free land, merit ought to be honored; merit should have the nomination and the election. The man who has fitness, mind, conscience, capability and trustworthiness is expected to get highest. But while that man is making an honest effort to gain the position whither he nobly aspires, a secret fraternity has stealthily laid its schemes and placed its wires; and suddenly, to the surprise of all, an inferior character, unfit, not wanted, disrespected, pops up into view, like a jumping jack out of the box. The machinery that foists by secret plans and tricks officials upon the people, brands those officials with inferiority, reveals a consciousness that they are sure of being left in an honorable, open race.

DANGEROUS FACTOR IN POLITICS.

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS BY REV. J M. FOSTER, OF BOSTON, BEFORE THE NEW ENGLAND ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION IN BOSTON, TUESDAY EVENING, DEC. 1, 1896.

The secret order of Jesuitry has removed Pope Sextus V., Clement VIII. and Clement XIV. The Jesuits poisoned Pope Leo XIII., and then coldly informed the bed-ridden victim that the antidote was ready if he would abandon his opposition to the order. He submitted and saved his life. What have the Jesuits done in our country? They assisted the Southern confederacy when the life of our nation was in jeopardy. Pope Pius IX. wrote a letter to Jefferson Davis to encourage him. They assassinated President Lincoln. The hand of a Romanist carried out the plot that was laid in the home of a Romanist. A secret order that resorts to murder as a weapon ought to be driven from the face of the earth. A Jesuit assassin, Ravaillac, stabbed Henry IV. of France, in 1610. William the Silent, Prince of Orange, was struck down by Gerard, a Spanish Jesuit, in 1584. And Abraham Lincoln was shot by Booth, the Jesuit instrument, in 1865.

They are manipulating the daily press of the country. There is not a daily in Boston without a Jesuit on its editorial staff since they throttled the Standard. They are assaulting our public schools. The liberal wing of the Jesuits, led by Archbishop Ireland, propose to engraft our public school system upon their parochial schools. The conservatives, led by Bishop McQuade, propose to destroy our school system and substitute the parochial system. Satolli, the Pope's abligate, was sent to reconcile these two factions. His three years' term served its purpose; he was recalled and his successor has been sent. They hold the city governments of Boston, New York, Chicago, New Orleans, San Francisco. They have a lobby at Washington to which Senators and Representatives bow, because of its superior force, and 15,000 appointees in the departments are dictated by them.

They fill the chairs of their university at Washington and seminary at Baltimore for training their agents. They sit as father confessors in 100,000 confessionals in this land, and are in possession of all the inner workings of the homes, the school, the city councils, the State legislatures, the national congress, and the Protestant congregations, synods and conferences. The 80,000 confessionals destroyed liberty in Spain. The 100,000 confessionals in the United States will be its destruction here unless our enemy is cast out.

But we must descend to lower depths in tracing this enemy of civil and religious liberty. I have before me a remarkable book, in its third edition, entitled "Conspiracy in Europe," by John Robison, LL. D., professor of Natural Philosophy and secretary to the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He traveled extensively in Europe, and collected documentary evidence which clearly proved "a conspiracy against all the religions and governments of Europe, carried on in the secret meetings of Freemasons, Illuminati and reading societies," and published these in a volume of 390 pages in 1798.

He belonged to the Masonic lodge in Edinburgh and took forty-five degrees in a lodge in Paris. He was made the custodian of the papers of a French lodge when their treasurer absconded, and the seal of secrecy being honorably removed by the death of the official keepers, he used these in his work. He also came into possession of papers from lodges in Leipsic, Berlin and also Bavarian cities. His information is first hand, as he quotes so extensively from these manuscripts. He divides his book into four chapters: First, The Masonic Schism; second, the Illuminati, third, the German Union or Reading Circles; fourth, the French Revolution. A sentence or two from his introduction will be suggestive. "I have found that the covert of a Masonic lodge had been employed in every country for venting and propagating sentiments in religion and politics that could not have circulated in public without exposing the author to great danger. I have observed these doctrines gradually diffusing and mixing with all the different systems of French Masonry; till, at last, an association has been formed for the express purpose of rooting out all religious establishments and overturning all the existing governments of Europe. I have seen this association exerting itself zealously and systematically, till it has become almost irresistible. And I have seen that the most active leaders in the French Revolution were members of this association, and conducted their first movements according to its principles, and by means of its instructions and assistance, formally requested and obtained."

The order of Masons is about as old as the trade. It was imported from Persia to Syria, and from thence to Ionia, and from there to England. They monopolized the building of churches and castles, working under the patronage and protection of princess and sovereigns, enjoying certain immunities which gave them the title "Free." King Charles II. and James II. and many royalists became members. Their standing was good though they never lifted a mason's tool, and hence the name "Accepted." The first three degrees, of Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason, existed then, but the Grand Lodge was founded in 1717, in London. The Lodge of York refused to join this order. In 1813 the grievance was removed, and the Grand Masters of the two rival lodges founded the "United Grand Lodge of Ancient Free and Accepted Masons of England." Scotland has a similar Grand Lodge. So has our country.

In the English Revolution of 1688, James II. was compelled to fly to France, as Charles II. had done during the Protectorate of Cromwell. Hear what this Mason says: "Nay, the ritual of the Master's degree seems to have been formed or perhaps twisted from its original institution, so as to give an opportunity of sounding the political principles of the candidate, and of the whole brethren present; for it bears so easy an adaptation to the death of the king, to the overturning of the venerable constitution of the English government of these orders by a mean democracy, and its re-establishment by the efforts of the loyalists, that this would start into every person's mind during the ceremony, and could hardly fail to show by the countenance and behavior of the brethren how they were effected. I have met with many particular facts which convince me that this use had been made of the meetings of Masons, and that at this time the Jesuits interfered considerably, insinuating themselves into the lodges and contributing to to increase that religious mysticism that is to be observed in all the ceremonies of the order."

ANTI-SECRET WORK IN IOWA.

Some account of our late convention along the line of this reform may not be uninteresting to your readers. We had arranged for the convention to take place in the Friends church, New Sharon, Iowa, Nov. 17th and 18th. Some of us thought that a meeting in advance would be in place; and so, through the efficient help of our friend, Mr. R. F. Boyd, arranged to hold a meeting Monday evening in the Free Methodist church of Oskaloosa. We had a good and appreciative audience, and Bro. Swartz, of Morris, Ill., made the address of the evening. Delegates were appointed to attend the convention, and all were present. Bro. Boyd earned the thanks of friends by his very earnest work in arranging the meeting, and also by the unstinted hospitality extended by himself and his worthy wife.

On the 17th, we were met at New Sharon by friends who proved themselves wholly equal to any occasion. As usual, an effort was made to defeat the convention, and turn it out of doors. Our host, A. Branson, who belongs to Friends church, went quietly to work, and when the hour came the coast was clear. He and his noble family proved themselves worthy of a place among the royal of the earth. I went to the convention with a cloud banging over me. Bro. Trumbull, on whom we always depend in the event of an unpopular reform, was necessarily detained. Death had invaded one of the homes of God's people, and the sorrowful parents and their sons and daughters clung to him to abide with them while they laid away their precious dead.

Then Bro. Black wrote me he could not possibly be present, and so our program was sadly broken. What was my delight then to learn that, when Bro. Phillips of the N. C. A. arrived at New Sharon, he was accompanied by that staunch, brave old reformer, Edmond Ronayne. "Well," I said to my friends, "the success of the convention is assured if Ronayne is here;" and it was. I had not heard him speak for twenty years. How changed the man is since then. How blessed the change. But the argument—then it crushed, it did no more; now it wins over to a better way. We all thank God for his coming. Rev. Ferris, of Cherokee, did splendid work, and Rev. S. H. Swartz and Harvard Brown filled the closing evening full to overflowing with hard facts—facts drawn from the Word of God and the ritual of the lodge. It is worthy of note that the secretists were conspicuously somewhere else.

Friends had arranged for an after convention meeting at Morning Sun. The large and commodious hall was secured, free seats, no collection, and the address of the evening to be delivered by Rev. S. H. Swartz, pastor of the M. E. church of Morris, Ill. The Y. P. S. C. E. of the R. P. church, Morning Sun, had the affair in charge, and the Sharon Y. P. S. co-operated. Pulpit notes were sent to all the pastors of Morning Sun. I understood some of them were read.

How strange that a secret order like the Elks can inflict fatal injuries on a man while initiating him into their order, as they did with Curry in Des Moines, and the matter is hushed up. His wife is taken into their favor and given money. All expenses are paid. It does not matter though he was the recognized head of a great political party, and a thirty-two degree Mason, an Oddfellow and Knight of Pythias; all these must keep quiet, and carefully conceal the cause of his death. When will men open their eyes?—Rev. T. P. Robb, in the Christian Nation.

FREEMASONRY IS DEVIL WORSHIP.

In reply further to the writer in the Contemporary Review of October last, let me say that the Masonic denial of the true God is not only accomplished negatively by the exaltation of Satan to the rank of deity, but he is positively denied; and not only denied, but scandalized by Freemasonry; for listen to the best and most highly praised and honored among Masons of all their authors as a historian, Rebold. He says: "The God of the Israelites is, if we judge from the manner in which he is represented in the Bible, a despot, a revengeful God, and exterminator of the peoples." ("Rebold's History of Freemasonry," page 410.) Surely, therefore, it is that being whom the Bible calls the devil, whom Freemasonry exalts to the imaginary dignity of "Grand Architect of the universe."

And whether the writer in the Contemporary Review is a Freemason or not, an ignoramus or a knave, he is out of the way and none the less a deceiver of the people in undertaking to make us believe that Freemasonry is not devil worship. He quotes the same Anti-masonic writer as saying that, "The real secret of Freemasonry is revealed to the neophyte in the third degree." Well, what is that secret?

In the esoteric ritual of Freemasonry printed by the Masonic fraternity in America for the use of Masonic lodges they have turned the Bible into a lie, and thus made it conformable to the devil worship of the mysteries of ancient heathenism; this thing is done in the third degree of Freemasonry. Freemasonry calls it the legend of the third degree; nevertheless, it is the most infamous of all lies ever uttered by man. By means of it, "the Jew, the Mohammedan, the adorer of Buddha or Fot" are taught the resurrection of the body and the immortality of the soul. The landmarks of Freemasonry make this legend essential to the existence of Freemasonry. In countries where Christianity is the prevailing religion the Bible, after being turned into a lie, is made to teach that legend. And the Jew, who, in his converted state and without Christ, is very fond of Freemasonry, may in harmony with the principles of Freemasonry say, if he hears the name of Christ mentioned in the third degree, "We don't want your old Christ here."

The neophyte is told in this third degree that he must personate Hiram Abiff. See "Ecce Orienti," third degree, published by the Masonic fraternity. Freemasonry identifies Hiram Abiff with Osiris, Bacchus, Mithrae, Adonis or Tammuz, and all the gods of the legeud, which the Bible calls false gods, and the worship paid to them, devil worship. And besides, Freemasonry clings with all the tenacity of devotion to that abominable god symbol, the point within a circle —the abomination of Moab—the symbol of the god Chemosh, to whom King Solomon, when he fell into idolatry, built a temple. Hence they might as well tell the neophyte outright that he must personate the devil before he can be a Mason; but that would probably frighten him too much, so he is left to enjoy the thrills of emotion that flooded the souls of the worshipers of the calf and Baal Peor, when as the Apostle Paul says of them, "They sat down to eat and drink, and rose up to play," and calls it a sacrifice to devils. See 1 Cor. 10th chapter.

The lie which the neophyte is made to personate in Christian countries before he can become a Freemason is that during the building of Solomon's Temple Hiram Abiff was murdered, his dead body lost, and searched for and found, and raised from the dead by King Solomon. And that lie is intended by Freemasonry to identify the Bible with sun or devil worship. And by personifying that lie and its author in a pretended murder and loss and searching for and finding, and resurrection of the neophyte's body to life by the Worshipful Master of the lodge, if the neophy is not, in consideration of the three previously forsworn obligations each under a penalty of a bloody murder to forever conceal the lie, well prepared for the worship of the devil, what can be imagined that will prepare him for such worship and service? After personating that lie and its author, the neophyte is told that he has "All that the soul of man requires." See Sickels' "Ahiman Rezon," lecture on third degree of Freemasonry, page 189.

No doubt this most infamous of all lies whereby the neophyte is taught resurrection and immortality, and that he has a claim to life everlasting, is "the real secret of Freemasonry." And every Freemason may well be supposed to be under the strong delusion to believe the lie. See 2 Thess. 2:11.

REFORM NEWS.

GARNISHING A KNIGHT TEMPLAR'S SEPULCHRE.

218 COLUMBUS AVE., BOSTON, Mass., Dec. 8, 1896

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Commemorative services were held yesterday in Park Street church, Dr. A. H. Dunning presiding. Dr. A. H. Quint having been for forty years a Mason, and thirty-five years a Knight Templar, the seats of honor were of course reserved for his "fraternity brethren." Samuel C. Lawrence, the rum distiller of Medford, may have been among the little group, as I do not know him personally, but careful inspection failed to disclose the Rev. Geo. C. Lorimer, D. D., among the sad and sorrowing Knights.

Very little was said of the doctor's piety, and nothing whatever of his success as a winner of souls for the kingdom of Christ. The breadth and catholicity of his views and character were kept at the front, and the opening prayer was succeeded by a series of five addresses, to which neither Jew, Unitarian, Mormon or Buddhist could have taken the slightest doctrinal objection. Whether this was in deference to the creed of those Masonic dignitaries occupying reserved seats or not, is only a matter of conjecture. I simply note the fact.

Dr. Wellman spoke of his inheritance of ancestral greatness, of his educational experiences, his intellectual accumen and of his personal traits. Hon. W. H. Hodgkins dwelt upon the remarkable tenacity of his mental powers, of his indomitable perseverance, of his efficiency in building two churches, and directing Congregationalism in and from its publishing center, of his kindness as a friend and pastor, and of his patriotic devotion to the flag of his country.

Dr. Arthur Little treated Dr. Quint's life as an army chaplain, and gave many touching instances of the doctor's sympathy for the sick, the wounded and the dying. Rev. Edward A. Horton (Unitarian) said, "I have been requested by the committee of arrangements to say something of Dr. Quint as a Mason, and his relation to other denominations." He began, "I am aware that all present are not Masons, and I am sorry you are not," etc. Having indorsed and eulogized the order, he presented Dr. Quint's views and relations to the lodge, substantially as follows:

"Dr. Quint was an ardent member of Freemasonry. He was initiated forty years ago, and two years afterward joined the Washington lodge of Roxbury, in which he retained membership until his death. To this Blue Lodge attainment he added the order of Knight Templars, becoming a member of 'De Molay Commandery' in Boston, in 1860, and was thus a continuous member for thirty-six years. During this time he was called upon to serve as Grand Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, and did so continuously from 1870 to 1881. Many of his addresses have been published, and they are pungent and inspiring. The last service in which he participated was at Roxbury last spring, giving the prayer in the Centennial Anniversary of his own lodge. Dr. Quint believed in Freemasonry, because he saw in it what Washington, who was also a Freemason, declared to be a great opportunity for the promotion of the happiness of mankind. He shared with LaFayette, another Freemason, the opinion that this organization was a wonderful exponent of Christian philanthropy."

Dr. Ward, of the New York Independent, considered at length Dr. Quint's record as a strategist, a parliamentarian, a tactician, a debater, a statistition, and as the organizer of Congregationalism, of his historical research, his affable deportment, the catholicity of his views, and the fair and frank way in which he met opponents and disputed questions.

President Tucker admired Dr. Quint for his many-sidedness, not in a questionable sense, for his quick perceptions and ready wit, for his clearness in statement, for his rare gift of comradship and for his humanitarianism, in which lay the secret of his great power, and of the great loss which the cause of Congregationalism had sustained in his death. Dr. I. J. Lansing pronounced the Apostolic benediction, closing the two and a half hours services.

Of course nothing was said of the doctor's heroic struggle in overcoming habits formed in the army, which were doubtless due in a measure to comradships formed with brother Knights, who, like himself, had taken the sealed and fifth libation of pure wine from a human skull. Masonry was eulogized by one who denies the atonement and the divinity of Christ. But not a voice of warning was heard from the professed disciples of Jesus, against the unfruitful works of darkness. The man who, if correctly reported, was a Masonic devotee for forty years, and who died grasping "the cup of devils" in his right hand, and "the cup of the Lord" in his left, was eulogized in most glowing and captivating language, and his death deplored as an irreparable loss to the church.

It is not for me to sit in judgment either upon the dead or the living, but I am amazed when ministers, professing allegiance to Christ and responsibility for the deeds done in the body, should silently and passively indorse the career of even a friend whose course has led scores of young men into what they confess to be a snare of the wicked one, and of whom it was not intimated by one of his panegyrists, that he was "filled with the Holy Ghost." Is such an example fitting to be held up as a model before the ministry and our young men?

RESCUE MISSION WORK.

POSSIBLY MORE CONSECRATION NEEDED.

HOUSTONVILLE, Washington Co., Pa., Dec. 9, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—While waiting for a train to Washington, Pa., I will improve my time and write. Business of importance to our Association detained me in Washington, D. C., some days. It was my privilege when at home to visit some of the missions and listen to three addresses given by that man whom God has so wonderfully blessed and used in lifting up the fallen in our great cities. All have heard of the Florence Crittenton Rescue missions. There are thirty-eight of these life-preserving homes in the midst of the slums of nearly as many cities. It was an inspiration to hear him tell of God's leading, and the joy that came with the consecration of his life. He has not only laid his wealth upon the altar, but his life with all his God-given talents. In his address on consecration he struck telling blows on many popular sins.

He did not hit the lodge. I am led to attribute this to a lack of information. Possibly a little more consecration is needed to speak right out in meeting against this evil. We know that a close walk with God is required to faithfully and properly speak. By invitation of the pastor I preached for the Brethren mission Sabbath evening. We enjoyed a season of refreshing. I took as my text the first six verses of the thirty-seventh Psalm. Reformers need to read this Psalm often.

Bidding loved ones goodbye I took the train Monday morning for Myersdale, Pa. There I

CORRESPONDENCE.

ONE OF CHRIST'S WITNESSES.

CHAMPAIGN, Ill., Nov. 23, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since I wrote you last, I have been very much afflicted by the death of my wife on last July 31. Also, since then my own health has been feeble. I feel the loss of dear sympathizing friends, and I also feel that increased persecution is making my last days very sad.

I want to assure you that I still cherish the deepest interest in the Cynosure. I read it over two or three times, and mark many articles and editorials, and hand it to neighbors with a request to read them. This county is most terribly ruled by Masonry and kindred secret clans and licensed saloons, with their attendant brothels and gambling hells, all triumphant with the assurance of four more years of licensed crime and debauchery.

In these last times of anti-Christ's moral, religious and political degeneracy, though many may cry, save the country, yet think of the innocent little boys and girls compelled to grow up amidst the temptations of these licensed hell holes all over our land, which their fathers have voted to legalize and protect. When will they learn to vote to protect and save their innocents from the curse which destroys both their souls and bodies in an endless hell. Christ has said that their blood will be required at the watchman's hands.

I am sure that every Cynosure grows better and better with its faithful portrayal of the grand old heroes of fifty years ago. Oh, that we had more such grand men as Thaddeus Stevens, Jonathan Blanchard and Charles G. Finney. May God abundantly bless you and help you to continue to emulate their godly example, and share in their glorious reward. There is no church, minister or association of any kind in this region that pretend to obey Christ's command, Eph. 5: 11, 12. So I accept the persecution incident to obeying the injunction, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," etc. There is no other name under heaven whereby we can be saved but by the name of Jesus. In the awful hour of his lonely suffering, when his Father hid his face from him, and the sins of our lost world were crushing his innocent soul, all his disciples forsook him and fled, and perhaps ninety per cent of his professed followers are doing the same thing to-day.

It is a comfort to know, however, that Christ's disciples afterward repented and sacrificed their lives in his cause. So let us hope that his disciples to-day who crucify the Son of God afresh and put him to an open shame by voting with the saloon keepers, will sooner or later repent of this fearful sin. For those who thus vote to pray for a revival is to throw additional insult in the face of Christ.

I am horrified to read in the Inter Ocean such noted infidels as Sarah Bernhardt lauded as the "Divine Queen of the Drama." The popular infidelity of many churches, whose worship is but a performance which discards Christ as God, and which depreciates the Sabbath and the Bible and all our fathers loved so dearly, is fast leading our country down to the debased morals and crime which have been the ruin of nations in the past. My confidence and faith in the dear Jesus, who has thus far sustained and protected me, remains unshaken. It is hard to be isolated, ostracised and forsaken, yet though my Lord should permit my enemies to slay me, I will still trust, love and obey him. I very much desire that some of you visit me, for the infirmaties of my 79th year prevents me from going to see you.

TURKISH AND CUBAN QUESTIONS.

WHAT PRESIDENT CLEVELAND THINKS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 9, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The portions of President Cleveland's message which attracted most attention, in and out of Congress, and which are being most discussed, were those relating to Cuba and to Turkey. Neither were just what the extremists desired and expected them to be. But the election is over, and with no temptation to try to make political capital by advocating radical measures, Congress as a whole will probably be inclined, notwithstanding resolutions for immediate recognition of Cuban independence which have been offered, to take as conservative view of these two troublesome problems as the President has taken—at least that is a fair inference from the general tone of the talk of Senators and Representatives on those subjects. There is no denying, however, that both of these questions may bring about a serious state of affairs in the near future.

The President's message made that very plain when notice was thereby served upon the great European nations that none of them would be allowed to acquire possession of Cuba nor to interfere with its control, and when Spain was informed that there was a limit to American patience, and that a time would come, if present conditions continue, when considerations of humanity would make it the duty of the United States to give Cuba peace.

It was a surprise to most people to learn that Turkey had so far refused to admit the validity of the claims made for payment for American missionary property destroyed at Harpoot and Marash during the riots at those places, although the complicity of Turkish soldiers had been proven by strong evidence. It had been generally supposed that the dely was caused by failure to agree on the amount that should be paid. The President warns people not to expect too much from the efforts of this government, because any attempt to use force would bring about a clash with the European treaty powers, who are responsible for the existence of such a blot upon civilization as the Turkish empire is.

There is one marked point of difference between Congress and the national convention of the American Anti-saloon League, which met here this week. The latter body knew exactly what it wanted to do. Its sole aim and end is to abolish saloons, and it proposes to keep up the fight until it succeeds. The convention was presided over by Hon. Hiram Price, the president of the league, and was a great success, considering that the organization is only one year old. There was neither color nor sex line drawn in the convention, the opening prayer having been made by Rev. Walter H. Brooks, a colored Baptist minister who is chaplain of the local league, and among the delegates were many women. The report of the national superintendent, Rev. H. H. Howard, of Ohio, showed that much progress has been made during the year and gave promise of greater progress in the future. The convention endorsed the Peffer bill prohibiting the issue of United States tax receipts in localities where the sale of liquor is prohibited by local laws, and the Morse bill providing for a commission to investigate the liquor traffic. It also provided for a legislative committee with headquarters in Washington, and made some changes in its constitution.

DEAF AND DUMB REPORTERS.

STRANGE CASES OF MORAL BLINDNESS.

ON TRAIN, Dec. 8, 1896.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—As I was leaving home yesterday I received a copy of the Montgomery county Transcript, and a clipping from the Providence Independent, sent by some kind friend. They refer to the recent convention at Oaks. May I ask space in the Cynosure for their publication and a few suggestions I may make? Not that they contain anything new or of special interest to those of our readers that are accustomed to lodge tactics, but in the hope that I may benefit some of our more recent subscribers and those especially in Montgomery county who have noticed these items.

As a rule I notice we get much more fair reports of our conventions in the great dailies of our cities than in the little country papers. There is no doubt a reason for this. The Providence Independent says:

> Your correspondent attended the recent convention at Oaks. Secret societies were denounced as being non-American, selfish; that members thereof were not freedmen to the Republic, and that the societies were false to religion because Christ was not mentioned in their prayers; but your correspondent heard no evidence in proof of the assertions made. Of course the convention folks were not selfish. They spoke from ¾ of an hour to 1½ hours each, and then accepted 5 minute replies from secret society members. "Consistency, etc."

Not being acquainted with the reporter for this paper, I can only guess whether he told the truth, when he says he "heard no evidence in proof of the assertion made." We may in charity to him conclude that he is totally deaf. Before making such a statement the wise thing for him to have done would have been to have made inquiry of some one who could hear. There was happily at this convention no denouncing without giving proof. Every speaker brought forward proof to substantiate the statements made. The time offered the lodge men was not all occupied. When they did not use all the time given, why should they ask for more? Would not it be well for our friend, the reporter, to hold a convention and occupy an hour and a half of the time; he might conclude then it would be well occupied, and strong arguments could be presented. The Montgomery Transcript has the following to say:

> The convention of the Christian Reform Association has been, and is spoken of in the past imperfect tense. It was prolific of much good and bad feeling, strengthening the faith of those who believe that secret societies are wrong, and binding secret society members with a faith still stronger than ever. It is considered by many a lack of good judgment to have had them come here. There were pastors of different churches here and they pleaded eloquently for the cause they espoused. They have doubtless read the first verse of the twenty third chapter of Jeremiah.
> Your correspondent attended the last session on Thursday evening, and listened to an address which often repeated becomes as pat to the tongue as the wag of a dog's tail when the dog's master has something good for it to eat. The speaker, fortified by that strength which comes from the reverence of old age and gray hairs, proceeded to do the secret societies up in fine style by first exposing the Masons. He said he never was a Mason, never belonged to a lodge, and I must confess I was disappointed.
> I wanted to hear a proselyte Mason tell me all about it. You know it would be such fun to know all their secrets. But he never was a Mason, and how could I believe what he said? We have been guyed by stories of great sea serpents and most wonderful stories of snakes ever since that one, whose greatest attribute was subtlety, duped our first parents, and I could not be brought to believe what he said, and we were persuaded that his arguments were but flights of imagination.
> Indulged too oft, engendered, nurtured for length of time, ideas become so real to him that entertains them, and in return casts them forth as veritable facts which are but idle fancies. Or, in the literature of the present day, he was talking through his hat.
> He said the name of Jesus was not mentioned in the lodge. It is not mentioned in the Constitution of these United States, either, and God and Creator but once in the Declaration of Independence. Yet we enjoy favors multitudinous, for this nation offers freedom to Jew, Gentile, rich, poor, halt, lame, blind, lean and lank, one eye open and one eye shut, and does not discriminate between a no-lodge or a lodge man. I only refer to what came under my notice, and the situation I was in. To believe a man who acknowledged he never was a lodge man, or to take the word of him who was so indiscreet as to make exhibit of his oath and perjure himself before his fellow men, better not have joined than use this method of gaining notoriety.
> The sequel of the whole matter is simply this: increase my worldly store and subscribe for the Christian Cynosure and Lodge Lamp; by so doing you will increase dividends, enhance the value of the stock of said paper, and it will require less effort on our part to make a living by this means, and we can be retired on a fixed salary.

In considering this report as in the former case I labor under the disadvantage of not knowing the writer. I am acquainted with the editor. If I am not misinformed he is a Mason, and hence would not be in such ignorance as the reporter appears to be in reference to what was said. Editors are regarded as responsible for what appears in their paper. Unless I learn to the contrary I will so regard in this case. As this editor has represented his people at Harrisburg and writes Hon. before his name, we naturally expect more than ordinary from him. Let us note some statements here made:

THE DOG'S TAIL

illustration is intended to teach what? Does anybody know? Is there anything wrong about a dog wagging his tail when expecting something good to eat? or a speaker presenting his subject as though it was not new to him? Must a thing always be as new as this report to be of value?

You say, as he was fortified with reverence for gray hairs he "proceeded to do the secret societies up in fine style." Did you carefully weigh that sentence before writing it? Even if the speaker was not a Mason, why should you be "disappointed" if he did "the secret societies up in fine style?" Was your anxiety to hear a "proselyte" so great that you could not enjoy the address of one who did up "secret societies in a fine style?" Was it the joy that there were proselytes that caused the disappointment, when the "fortified" speaker only

"PROCEEDED TO DO THE SECRET SOCIETIES UP IN FINE STYLE?"

In your disappointment you exclaim, "He never was a Mason and how could I believe what he said?" Now if you would have just asked some school boy ten years of age this question before putting it in your paper, he might have answered it thus: Your question in brief is this: How do I know about any place I have not been, or anything I have not seen? By the evidence, my friend! Eight-tenths of all the information I have comes through the testimony of others. Is the evidence that Masonry is correctly revealed beyond question? It is. If you did not want to bother the school boy with such a question, had you asked the honorable editor of the Montgomery Transcript he could have confirmed the testimony of the "fortified" speaker from personal knowledge, had he been so disposed. Should he tell you the truth in regard to this matter there would then be another proselyte. How glad you would be to get the facts from him.

I may here say, if it was your chief desire to hear lodge seceders you should have come to the seceders' testimony service at the time published on the program. Perhaps their testimony would have so satisfied you that it would not have become necessary to have heard the "fortified" speaker. I must conclude this comment. These items speak for themselves. I am sure the honorable editor of this paper reasoned with more consistency when he persuaded his fellows to send him to Harrisburg. There are one hundred and fifty or more copies of the Cynosure taken by friends in Montgomery county. Its messages week by week are read by the families into whose homes they go. I am sure they will feel sad to see so promising a young man presenting such an unfair report.

My friend, we are both soon to stand before the judgment bar of God. When standing before the Judge of all the earth, surrounded by the angels and all the bright intelligence of the world to come, will you say to the Searcher of all hearts, "I am the Hon. D., editor of the Montgomery Transcript, and I bring as evidence of my loyalty to your Son an article published in my paper, reporting a Christian Reform Convention held in Oaks, Pa." Oh, you know you would not do that.

You are right when you say we desire subscriptions to the Cynosure and Lodge Lamp, and to increase dividends thereby. Were it not for the circulation of these papers in your neighborhood many would be blinded who are now walking in the light. The receipts enable us to send out this light, and when I retire from this work on earth, it will, I trust, be "on a fixed salary," "the eternal riches of his grace," "the joys of eternity. That you may so pass through life's journey as to enjoy the same fixed salary, is the earnest desire of yours for Christ and reform,

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

TWELFTH LETTER.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Dec. 8, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Grand Jury, before which Walkinshaw's case came, happened to be composed of sensible men. One of them especially deserves honorable mention; his name is L. D. Hoag. He has had some experience in lodgery, but his Christian manhood still reigns supreme in his life. He was a member of the executive committee of our Law and Order League. The case was thrown out as utterly without proof.

We hoped this would end the matter. But you can never know what those who trust to fraud and the aid of lodge power will do. Had this criminal case prevailed there would have been some tangible reason for pushing the civil damage suits, but when it failed there was not a shadow of ground on which to found a damage suit, yet the Clarinda trio of lodge lawyers began pushing the civil suits with all their might and main. They chose out what they considered was the strongest case and centered all their strength around it, knowing that its success or failure meant the success and failure of all.

It was evident from the first that something besides justice was relied on by the prosecution, and hence the temperance people thought it wise to employ the best legal talent to oppose this Clark-headed, lodge trio. Both sides took time to prepare. The battle was long and severe. Every means was employed to make the faithful witnesses seem, at least, to contradict themselves. The drunken characters of our community were employed to perjure their souls in lying testimony. The jury was looked after, and every point of law was warped to the utmost extent. What was the result? An utter and most miserable failure.

Right triumphed even beyond our expectation. You may ask: Why did you not expect to win when there was no proof on the other side? We answer: Because no one can tell the outcome in a case in which the lodge is one of the main factors. Why did they begin a case in which they had no proof? We can only answer: They expected to "lodge" it through. Why didn't they succeed? With all due respect to the legal talent we had employed, every man of whom acquitted himself most nobly, I must answer: The Lord of hosts had a hand in battle; and the God of Jacob was too strong for the lodge.

In looking back over this whole struggle, I can plainly see that we owe all the honor of our victory to the Lord, "to whom all power in heaven and earth has been given." We succeeded because we looked to him and trusted in him; and we succeeded in proportion as we trusted and prayed. Every meeting of our League was opened and closed with prayer. On the day of our first trial in Rockport, we had a cottage prayer meeting at Mr. Wm. Dunn's, and every time I think of it my heart throbs with the influence of the fervent prayers that ascended to heaven for temperance, truth and right.

You may guess that during the struggle not only prayers, but sermons rang out from the pulpits where the people of God were assembled. We had not only praying men, but praying women who threw their whole soul into this struggle.

There was one, especially, who watched many a night out in prayer and supplication, and she knows that God heard her. The week of the last trial was one of most earnest pleading with God, and we know that he heard us. Oh, what a grand realization it is to know that, although the lodge may bring under its poisonous influence all the powers of the state and church, as it seems to have done to-day, yet it can never bring under its power "The Lion of the tribe of Judah," "The great Captain of our salvation," the world's conquering King.

Has not the time come for us to separate ourselves to this service from every entangling influence, and work only in his name and under the banner of his truth. I know, and every reader of the Bible ought to know, that neither the saloon or the lodge or any other evil will be overthrown until we do this. See Rev. 19th chapter.

NO, NOT ALONE.

CHEERING LETTER FROM MICHIGAN.

BLISS, Mich., Nov. 30, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have been impressed for some time to write a few lines of appreciation of your valuable paper, the contents of which have been a great stimulant to my faith and encouragement to me in opposing secretism. I have only been taking the paper a few months, and it is a welcome visitor to our home.

Some time ago I noticed an article written by Bro. Beers, a radical U. B. minister, of Petoskey, Mich. He spoke of fighting against secrecy alone. I thought, no Bro. Beers, I am with you, even if we are thirty miles apart. I have hard fighting here in Bliss, Emmet county. The secret society devil is here. The leading man of the Maccabee lodge, who is justice of the peace, gave me a great raking for daring to preach against secretism; but I am determined in the strength and power of Christ to denounce sin in every form.

I look upon the lodge as the greatest curse of our fair land, because it stands directly in the way of every civil reform. Our prayers are being offered daily that God may prosper and uphold the Christian Cynosure and its noble workers. I wish I could attend some of those conventions. I am in real symphony with your work. I shall do all in my power to help on the work upon my missionfield. I secured several copies of the Lodge Lamp which I think has stirred up the devil here, and I am lending my Cynosure to as many as I can reach. When I give a copy away, I tell them to pass it on. The young men in particular I try to influence to keep out of the lodge. I am getting plenty of opposition, but God wonderfully blesses me and upholds me by his free spirit. May the blessing of God rest upon the whole staff of workers is the prayer of your unworthy servant,

(Elder) NELSON KITELEY,
Pastor of Mennonite Brethren Church.

ANOTHER VICTIM OF LODGE INITIATION.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 4, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It was in Minneapolis last night another victim was sacrificed to the devil and taken to the Mason's grand lodge above. This time it was at the "Shrine of Islam," where they indecently "sprinkle the Devil's Pass" in the presence of men disguised as women, and whom they call "The Lady Nobles of the Mystic Shrine." He dropped dead like a devil's poor pack horse with the devil's harness on, and full-fledged for the grand lodge above. The oath of this degree, the candidate is told, can "never be retracted or departed from." Kneeling at the altar, it is taken upon the Koran and the Bible in the name of "Allah, the god of the Arab, Moslem and Mohammedan, the god of our fathers." And the appeal to this god is, "Support me to the entire fulfillment of the same; amen, amen, amen." "In token of your sincerity salute the sacred book, the Bible."

The penalty is, "eye-balls pierced to the center with a three-edged blade, my feet flayed and I be forced to walk the hot sands upon the sterile shores of the Red Sea until the flaming sun shall strike me with livid plague." A part of the lodge furniture is incense and a bier and coffin; and they have a mock murder tragedy; illustrative of the condition of the man's soul to meet his maker.

A few weeks ago it was the "Elks" that burned a man to death in their initiatory ceremonies. At another time it was a Methodist preacher precipitated down a shaft thirteen feet deep in a Masonic lodge, killed outright while in an act of blasphemy, pretending to recover the ark and continuing the Aaronic priesthood in connection with the blasphemies of Freemasonry, and buried without inquest.

And nobody seems to care, while all the world is being intitiated by the devil into the same abomination in one form or another, preparatory for the devil's grand lodge above, while God is winking at it. Yes, winking at it; for where is the minister of Christ having the power of the Holy Spirit to meet and denounce the woes of God upon lodge demon worship according to the Word of God? The best that is done tickles the vanity of the secretists, so that exposures of the lying frauds help the devil. Well may the true prophet be filled with amazement and exclaim: "Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud that our prayer should not pass through." Lam. 3:44.

The quotations about the Mystic Shrine are taken from "The Mystic Shrine Illustrated," published by Ezra A. Cook. The city papers inform us that during the initiatory ceremonies of the Mystic Shrine in Minneapolis last evening, Charles Wetter, a novitiate, fell dead. The Masons disclaim any responsibility for his death, and they raised $1,200 for the widow of their victim. The devil may boast of his liberality even as when he offered one soul all the world if that soul would fall down and worship him. But that soul was our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and he said to the devil: "It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." It is also written, "Resist the devil and he will flee from thee," which command every man ought to obey when he is tempted to join the lodge.

Mr. Wetter was not a novice in lodge worship, for he was a member of Blue Lodge, Chapter and Commandery Masonry. Would it not be very unreasonable and unjust to suppose that his soul has not gone to be with his god, although he may know nothing whatever of his character outside of his lodge? Surely our God will send him to dwell with his god, as it is written: "And the beast was seized, and with him the false prophet that wrought the signs in his sight, with which he led astray those who received the mark of the beast and worshipped his image. The two were cast alive into the lake of fire that burns with brimstone." Rev. 19:20.

CHEERING LETTER FROM KANSAS.

ESKRIDGE, Kan., Dec. 4, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In your issue of Dec. 3, you refer to a contributor who appears to think you are reaching only the friends of the cause. Even if that were true, the friends of the cause need the information and encouragement they now receive through the Cynosure. As for my own copy it is handed on to a family where there are three boys, and every one of them worth saving from the lodge. Then it is handed on from there to another, and where it stops I cannot tell you.

But the chief thing I want to tell you is what I learned recently in conversation with a friend. A relative of his through the influence of friends (?) was carried into the secret lodge. A true friend desirous of his deliverance from such evil, ordered to his address a copy of the Cynosure. At first he would read it and then put it in the fire. Sometimes it would go into the fire without reading.

Once as he was about to pitch it in the fire a headline attracted his attention. He hesitated long enough to read a little. He became interested. Then he studied the subject until convinced of his sin and of the evils of the lodge system. He left the lodge—not to keep his oaths of secrecy, but to testify boldly for the truth and against Masonry. The large town in which he lived was stirred to its very centre. Thus many learned of the truths published in the Cynosure.

Of course the man was boycotted and compelled to close his store, but that was only a mild exemplification of what lodgemen will do where they have power. His trade was lost. The man was saved. I do not know that this was an exceptional case. At least I am encouraged to send you what little money I can at present to place the Cynosure with those who are now the friends of the lodge. May they soon be the friends of truth and of the cause. J. R. W. STEVENSON.

HOW TO KEEP CLOTHING.

Long Worn Garments Should Be Well Aired.

Everyday garments should be disinfected. Brushing is not sufficient, as it does not remove the unpleasant odors that come from long usage. Some women sprinkle their waists and dresses with scent and use sachet powders to perfume their bonnets and wraps. All this would be admirable were it availing. Scent needs to be overpowering to conceal the unfragrant emanations from an old garment. Then the bouquet is fulsome and vulgar.

Better than scent bags or potpourri is a clothespole and an open window. Turn the garments wrong side out, and let the air and sunshine disinfect and deodorize them. All night airing is good, but a day of blowing winds and purifying sunlight is better. When a bonnet lining or a set of dress shields becomes perceptible, it should be removed. Cloth garments can be sponged and pressed clean. A pint of benzine costs 5 cents and will clean anything in the way of kid, silk, lace or worsted. Camphor is another common disinfectant and not half appreciated. If after brushing the only coat or gown it is sprinkled with spirits of camphor and aired a few hours, it will be tidy and grateful. Garments and belongings that smell of nothing are the cleanest and most agreeable. There is always a suspicion of bad health, bad sanitation or bad habits where there is much perfuming. If a scent is desired to neutralize what is known as shop smells, emanating from the laundry, factory, packing room, etc., orris, muscadine, bergamot or a bit of saudal wood is preferable to the sickly sweetness of manufactured perfumes. Deodorized alcohol, with a teaspoonful of scent to a pint, used as a spray, will leave the clothing redolent of neatness. And for the skin there is nothing more aromatic and agreeable than a handful of lavender water.

How to Use a Broom.

Don't let it get dirty. Cleanse often by putting in a pail of lukewarm soapsuds or hold under a faucet.

Don't use a broom straw to test a cake. It is not neat and is very dangerous, as many brooms are soaked in arsenic solution to give them their green color.

Don't sweep with your back. Use your arms and the broom, with not too long a stroke.

Don't put salt on the floor when about to sweep. Dampen a newspaper, tear in pieces and throw on the carpet.

How to Select Your Winter Wraps.

Women who are short and stout should shun the long rows of ruffled capes and elaborate coats, while those who are tall and slender should never linger before the graceful sweep of wraps whose end and aim is to give an appearance of height rather than of breadth in the wearer. This might seem superfluous advice if one did not see so many victims of this very mistake going about every season and looking as miserable as they feel. The next thing is to select the color that will best harmonize with all probable toilets, and here the Rubicon is reached. Of course black is always acceptable and becoming, but black is too somber for young women and often trying to older ones; so to decide upon the exact shade that will wear nicely, that will not intrude itself at any time and that toward the end of the season will still look at least presentable is a task that tries one's utmost power of discrimination.

How to Cure Chapped Hands.

Insufficient drying is the cause of most chapped hands. It is an excellent idea to keep on one's dressing table a box of almond meal with a perforated cover. When the hands are dried with the towel, a little almond meal dusted over them will complete the work of absorbing the moisture and the hands will not chap.

How Silver Is Assayed.

Fragments of the ore or alloyed metal are placed in cupels. The cupels are placed in a muffle, and the muffle is exposed to intense heat until the metal is melted. This heat is maintained until the baser metal is oxidized and is partly volatilized and partly absorbed by the cupel. As the silver will not oxidize, it remains in globules in the cupels. The weight of these globules is then compared with the weight of the original fragments.

A cupel is a small, shallow vessel made of bone ash. The muffle is made of fire clay. It is about eight inches long and about four inches high and has a flat bottom and an arched top. One end of it is open and the other closed, and it has numerous apertures along its sides.

How to Make a Blood Purifier.

Four ounces of sifted sugar, 2 ounces of epsom salts, 2 ounces of cream of tartar, 2 ounces of carbonate of soda, an ounce of tartaric acid. Mix all together well and keep in a bottle corked tight. From one to two teaspoonfuls in a glass of water.

How to Set Color.

To set the color in colored cotton dresses that are to be washed, dissolve 3 gills of salt in 4 quarts of hot water, put the material in while the water is hot and let it remain until cold. In this way the colors are rendered permanent and will not fade in washing.

How to Make Chili Sauce.

Pare 24 large ripe tomatoes and chop with 3 peppers and 3 small onions. Add 4 cups vinegar, 4 tablespoonfuls sugar and 2 of salt. Boil an hour and bottle.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1896.

A REMARKABLE PROPHECY.

In Ezekiel 47th chapter, and 8th, 9th and 10th verses, we read a remarkable prediction of a channel which would turn the waters of the Mediterranean Sea into the Jordan Valley, flooding that valley and carrying the fish of the eastern Mediterranean into the Dead Sea. These waters would purify the Dead Sea and change its brinish waters so that it would be a noted fishing resort, and the fish would be the same as those for which the Mediterranean is celebrated.

This flooding of the Jordon Valley would change the physical as well as the geographical character of Palestine It would raise the water of the Dead Sea 1,300 feet, and that of the Sea of Galilee about 600 feet, combining them into an inland sea more than 150 miles long and from ten to forty miles wide. It would make Jerusalem a seaport town, for the sea would come within ten miles of that city. In the language of Mr. Saunders in his able paper read before the British Association, it would make the Jordan Valley "a vast and capacious water communication for the immense and increasing maratime traffic between the East and West, besides restoring to civilization and commerce the fertile regions on either side that were once the seats of great wealth and prosperity and still display the ruins of their former grandeur."

Johnson's Universal Cyclopædia, in an article on ship-canals, says that a syndicate has been formed in England, and much of the money has been subscribed for the purpose of cutting this canal. It will extend from the Bay of Acre on the Mediterranean to a depression on the Jordan Valley below the Sea of Tiberias. The object is to make a ship-canal that will compete with Suez. It will flood the entire Jordan Valley, submerging many of the ancient ruins and historic places. The southern outlet will be over a sandy valley from the Dead Sea into the Gulf of Akaba, which is an arm of the Red Sea. The chairman of this sydicate is the Duke of Sutherland.

When this enterprise is completed, and there is every reason to believe it will be, what a striking fulfillment it will be of this prophecy of Ezekiel: "Then said he unto me, these waters issue out toward the east country (the very direction in which this canal will send the current) and go down into the desert, and go into the sea; which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed. And it shall come to pass that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live; and there shall be a very great multitude of fish because these waters shall come thither; for they shall be healed, and every thing shall live whither the river cometh. And it shall come to pass that the fishers shall stand upon it from En-egedi even unto En-eglaim: they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many."

MINISTER'S DUTY TO CRY ALOUD

Those who take pains to inform themselves on what has been truthfully revealed regarding Freemasonry, cannot fail to be shocked at its nonsense, degrading immodesty, shameful superstition and diabolical oaths. What conception of moral character can an editor of a religious journal have after having been initiated into a lodge of Freemasons, and then claim to be morally and civilly bound to keep the oaths administered in conferring the degrees?

How dare any man professing to be a minister of Christ offer any apology or justification of his joining the Freemasons? How dare such a man to sit quietly saying only, I have not been in a lodge for months, and never expect to enter another; and then with the same breath say it is not safe to antagonize them; you will hedge up your way as a minister, and subject yourself and family to ostracism, and endanger the educational interest of your children; for most of the male teachers in the public schools are Freemasons, and you will place your children at a disadvantage, if the teachers know you are antagonizing Freemasonry? Is not this a most dangerous state of affairs? Those who know most positively this to be the true condition will be the first in an attempt to defend Freemasonry. They will rise up against the statement of such facts and declare them to be untrue.

There is no crime that rests more completely under the anathema of God's law than Freemasonry. What can be more dangerous to every interest of society than that men are bound by Masonic oaths to do what these oaths bind them to do? The oaths bind to inflict the death penalties upon a certain class. Every Freemason ought to know this to be true. The most intelligent men who have joined Freemasonry, and come out from it, renouncing it as evil and wholly evil, have declared to the world that Freemasonry is bound by oaths to inflict the death penalties, and if we will take pains to read the oaths, we will find this to be true to the letter.

The ignorant and vicious in the lodges go out to froth and foam about not believing such men on oath, who would take such oaths as administered by Freemasons, and then divulge what they had sworn not to divulge. If a man should foreswear himself to keep secret murder and treason, and tell you he regarded himself morally and civilly bound to keep such oaths, what would you think of him before the tribunal of Christian intelligence? Let ministers give no uncertain answer to the question. Let them turn on the light of divine truth upon such performers. Such oaths cannot stand before the light of divine wisdom, which they claim to advocate.

WHAT BOLSTERS UP THE LODGE.

It has truly been said that if the ministers of Christ were a unit in testifying against the lodge, the iniquitous system could not stand for six months. It was because the ministers of this land withheld the truth on the slavery question that we had to fight it out at the cost of four years' war. We believe the greatest influence to buttress and fortify the lodge is that of ministers who officiate at these altars of Baal, and try to gain popularity by blending his worship with that of the Lord Jesus. As an example of this we give the following from the Washington (Pa.) Times:

Dr. T. Chalmers Easton preached last night to his own congregation and representatives from the seven lodges of the Royal Arcanum in this city. The church was comfortably filled in honor of the occasion. The pastor chose as a subject "The Genius and Aims of the Royal Arcanum," and found a text in Paul's words to the Romans, "If a man provide not for his own he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." Dr. Easton reviewed the workings of the society. He spoke of it as a fraternal union of social attributes, and referred to its beneficial, educational and secret virtues.

OUTDOING JOHN TETZEL.

When Tetzel went through Europe selling indulgences for the remission of sin, he went far enough to shock Christendom; but the modern Masonic and Odd-fellow orders go farther than Tetzel, for they send every member from the lodge below to the lodge above; especially all the Sunday theatre chaps, about all of whom belong; and who, if not upheld and sustained by lodges, would not dare to violate law on the Sabbath, and draw so many of our American and foreign population into the traps and pitfalls of saloonkeepers, gamblers and theatres.

From the Washington (Pa.) Times of Dec. 7th, we find an example of how the Elks, who recently killed Lawwer Curry, of Leon, Ia., by electrocuting him during an initiation, and whose order was started by theatre men and is largely composed of that class—how, aided by a professed minister of Christ with a D. D attachment, they send their deceased members to the grand lodge above. The Times says:

The annual memorial services of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks were observed at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in the hall of Washington Lodge, No. 15, on E street near Tenth. The occasion was an impressively formal and solemn one, and the handsome quarters of the order were crowded. The hall decorations were as unique as they were artistic. Potted palms rested in convenient localities. Long vines of ivy trailed about the frames of pictures and through the antlers of elk heads that adorn the walls. The platform at the front of the room was a mass of green, with a happy effect in a great electric cross, trimmed in green, fitted with scores of incandescent lights, that stood at the right hand of the exalted ruler.

Immediately before the platform was the customary altar, upon which rested the Bible, and around which was wrapped an American flag in such a manner that the four watchwords of the order could be easily read. The guests of the occasion found chairs as the orchestra played "Nearer My God to Thee." Following came the impressive ceremonies of the lodge. John T. Brady, exalted ruler, sat in the center of the platform and presided over this portion of the exercises. He was assisted by John E. Sheckells, esteemed leading knight; Fred Wagner, esteemed loyal knight; A. Sillers, esteemed lecturing knight; Richard A. O'Brien, secretary; M. Dyrenforth, treasurer; William Williams, tyler; Jacob Heid, esquire; Joseph E. Rawlings, chaplain, and Rud F. Riegel, inner guard.

Before the opening ode was sung and a prayer was offered by Rev. Alexander Kent, of the People's church, the secretary was directed to read the names of those who had died since the organization of the lodge in 1883. It was a long list and included those who had died within the past year. Mr. Isaac Sharp was called upon to deliver the usual eulogy in honor of the departed, and he referred feelingly to many of them who had been his personal friends and acquaintances. The chief addresses of the afternoon were made by Mr. Kent and Mr. Joseph Taylor. Mr. Kent dwelt at length on each watchword of the lodge, and offered many warm words of congratulation to the order. He complimented the lodge on its quiet efforts and the broadly human nature of its work.

Fraternal feeling in the order is carried to an unusual degree and in no other lodge, said he, did there seem a stronger exercise of the attributes of the foundation words of the body. "The things men have in common," said he, "are immeasurably better than those in which they differ. No organization that honors humanity and holds out its hand to the needing brother can fail." Mr. Taylor followed in a brief and appropriate address, also highly complimentary to the order. Another solemn service was carried out by the members of the lodge and the services closed with the singing of the doxology and a benediction by Mr. Kent.

MASONIC INTERFERENCE WITH OUR PUBLIC EDUCATION.

By what principle of justice and right do Freemasons claim the honor of laying the corner-stones of our public schools? They interfere so often with the administration of justice, that it affords a clew to their interference in the corner-stone laying of court houses. When we find them presuming to lay the corner-stone of a public school is it that they intend to control our public education? We find in the local press of Oct. 17, of our nation's capital the following:

"The laying of the corner-stone of the new Washington building on Saturday, was one of the most auspicious events in the history of the public schools of this district, and was accompanied by Masonic ceremonies, it being the first corner-stone laid under the auspices of the local lodges. Upwards of 3,000 people were present when the ceremonies took place, and the program, as published, was observed. The first floor of the building had been laid, and upon it were congregated the school children, teachers, Board and Masons.

"At 11:30 o'clock Fisk Military band escorted the teachers and pupils, who had gathered at the High School building, to the site of the building at West Third and William streets. The band then escorted the school directors to the Masonic Temple, where they were joined by the Masons and marched back to the building, where the ceremonies began under the direction of Grand Marshal Kline. The impressive introductory services were concluded by a prayer by Grand Chaplain Benfer.

"The stone, a large granite block with a hollow place in the top to receive certain articles, and on which is inscribed 'Erected A. D. 1896,' was held in place by a derrick over the spot it was to occupy on the front wall. Grand Treasurer Keller placed in the receptacle a list of the Masonic officials in whose charge were the ceremonies. At the close the assemblage sang 'America' and Dr. E. J. Gray pronounced the benediction. The gathering dispersed and the Masons, headed by the band, marched to their temple, where an excellent banquet was served."

The Masonic program, we are told, lasted over an hour. Let us say for the hundredth time to the friends of light, to ascertain as long beforehand as possible and report to us when such Masonic corner-stone laying is to take place. Then let them join with us in thundering a protest which will be heard from one end of the State to the other. The dark handmaid, which so covets popularity, will then cease these parades before the public.

THE MILLENNIAL CONTROVERSY.

As the question of the speedy coming of Christ to reign is one in which our readers are deeply interested, we will publish a condensed half column article each week on the subject. They will present alternately both sides of the question, and must not exceed half a column in length. The following on the origin of the controversy is from the pen of the former editor of the Cynosure, H. M. Hugunin:

"The genuineness of the Apocalypse ('The Revelation of St. John the divine,' as it is called in the Authorized Version of the Bible) remained unquestioned for nearly two hundred years after its delivery to the early church. Then the great controversy over the doctrine of the millennium (or the predicted thousand years personal reign of Christ on earth) brought the book into general discussion. This controversy is recorded by Neander, the ablest historian of the church; but as all have not an opportunity of consulting that ponderous work, the version given by Prof. Calvin E. Stowe in his 'History of the Books of the Bible,' page 470, may be read with interest:

"'The occasion on which the genuineness of the Apocalypse was first called in question, was the following: About A. D. 230, Nepos, the pious and active bishop of Arsinoe, in Egypt, adopted the notion of.....the millennium, and published a book entitled "Refutation of the Allegorists," in which he amplifies this doctrine, advocating it with great zeal, and maintaining it principally by quotations from the Apocalypse. The book was very popular, and gained many adherents to the doctrine, and so high did their zeal run that the chiliasts, as they were called, or the millennialists, began to secede from the mother church at Alexandria, which opposed their notions. After the death of Nepos, Coracion, the pastor of a country church, took the lead in propagating the same sentiments. Dionysius, the mild and learned bishop of Alexandria, desiring to put an end to this dispute, and unwilling to fulminate ecclesiastical thunders—which he knew could have no other effect than to irritate without intimidating or subduing—went into the province of Arsinoe, where the seceders were most numerous, and proposed an amicable conference. They met him with Coracion, their leader, at their head, and the book of Nepos was carefully read and its arguments examined. The good bishop Dionysius, with exemplary patience, spent three days reasoning with his wandering sheep; quietly listened to every thing they had to say; answered all their objections, and by the mildness of his bearing and the force of his arguments so completely satisfied them that they had been in the wrong, that Coracion, in the name of all the rest, thanked him for his kindness and his instructions, and declared that they were all convinced that he was in the right, and accordingly they cheerfully renounced their own opinions and adopted his."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. W. L. Ferris, of Cherokee, Ia., writes: "I am glad I was at the New Sharon Convention."

—Geo. O. Robinson, attorney at law, N. Cambridge, Mass., was a welcome caller at this office last week.

—The Free Methodist last week contained an able article on "Religion of the Lodge," by Rev. D. W. Rose.

—Prof. D. B. Willson, of Allegheny, Pa., writes of an excellent lecture delivered by Pres. C. A. Blanchard in Pittsburg, Friday evening, Dec. 11.

—Even if a preacher thinks he can get along personally with the objectionable forms of Masonic ceremony, yet something is due to seemliness.

—Rev. H. Nordahl, a returned missionary from Africa, called at the Cynosure office last week for literature. He reports that no obstruction on the Dark Continent is so formidable as the secret lodge.

—It was not an anti-secretist outside the lodge, nor yet a seceding Odd-fellow, who, when the Grand Lodge decision came prohibiting the mention of Jesus' name in prayer, resigned the office of chaplain.

—Rev. J. A. McKelvey is conducting a city mission known as "The People's Temple" at 50 and 52 W. Madison street. He was for two years a student in the R. P. Seminary in Allegheny, but for some years has been connected with the Presbyterian church.

—A Wisconsin lodge has been bequeathed $4,000, with the stipulation that once every year its members drink two kegs of beer at one sitting. Up to date the lodge has not found it necessary to order a new lot of withdrawal cards.

—In spreading the light on Christian Citizenship, as Elder Smith wisely exhorts, we wish to say with emphasis that this light will be dim and unsafe unless it reveals that no officer can be safely trusted with the administration of government who is pledged or sworn in a secret order to favor one class of citizens more than another.

—Secretary Phillips spent most of last week in Campaign county, Ill. The next Illinois State convention may be held there. Some of the nephews of Isaac Crane, of Peru, Ind., have already decided to contest his will. It is sure evidence to some people that a man has become crazy if he wills anything to a benevolent association, though, as a rule, they wait until the man is dead before declaring their intentions.

—A donation of $18,000 was made through Bishop Hurst to the American University a few days ago, with the sole condition that the name of the giver should not be made public. Would that God might put it into the hearts of some of his children, to whom he has entrusted wealth, to give such a contribution, or even less, to the cause of educating men out of the moral and intellectual darkness of the secret lodge, through which so many are stumbling their way to hell.

—Rev. O. M. Owen says in the last Free Methodist: "In the city of Trent there has recently been held a congress opposed to Freemasonry. The members of this congress were largely Romanists. There may be some danger threatening Italy from Freemasonry, but Romanish denunciations of Freemasonry will have but little effect while Rome cherishes the darkest secret order on the face of the earth, viz., the Jesuits. Rome wants no secret societies to exist only those she can control. If Rome were to array herself, as do some Protestant churches, against all secret orders, she would take a tremendous stride towards liberty."

—Elder Rufus Smith is deeply interested in the Christian Citizenship League. He finds it the very movement he has been looking for these many years. He writes us: "Have you heard the call to enlist for the war? It is not to shoulder a gun and slay your brother, but to spread the light on Christian citizenship until wars, strikes, saloons, brothels, legislative boodleism, dishonest officialism, secret orderism and every other foe of God and humanity shall be driven from our land. Send at once to 153 LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill., to the headquarters of the Christian Citizenship League, for all necessary information. We have been asking God to make haste to help us. He has reported himself ready and waiting for us to co-operate. Bless his name. Only one thing is required, and that is, let the Lord's people with one accord come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Who will enlist? We shall see."

made but one call and secured one subscription to the Cynosure. Bishop C. G. Lint, of the German Baptist Brethren church, received me kindly; expressed an interest in our work and a wish for meetings that the young might be informed. He will consult and report the general wish of the brethren later. I hastened to take the stage going to Salisbury. Riding six miles I came to the home of Elder W. A. Gaunt. I found it was not necessary to give the grip to be welcome here; the salutation did as well. I was given a good bed and breakfast and a promise of co-operation in arranging meetings.

The stage reached Myersdale just in time for me to catch the 9:20 train to Pittsburgh. A brother by the name of Weaver took the same train. He publishes a paper called the Theocrat His main idea is commendable—the recognition of Christ in our political life. To this end he hopes to enlist all religious, semi-religious and no-religious societies. He advertises the Masons and Good Templars in his paper, and would be glad to secure the N. C. A. as one of his adjuncts. While wishing friend Weaver well, I suggested he was undertaking a good deal.

Reaching Pittsburgh I went to Hope Mission, 111 Market street, where the Gospel is preached every evening, and the wanderers are urged to return to Father's house. Bro. Sandys asked me to preach, as he always does. There is now a goodly number of workers and the attendance is much increased since my last visit. There is a good Christian atmosphere in this mission and many are blessed who come under its influence.

A young woman dying with consumption lay upon a bed—kind hands ministered to her needs. She had been a stage performer. She now gave evidence of conversion, and was looking anxiously for her release from pain and suffering. Her life has been of little or no benefit to the world. Only as she may point some one in her last hours to the fountain that cleanses from all sin, can she help others. It is believed she has been plucked as a brand from the burning, and that her testimony may help others. I felt a blessing in preaching the Gospel. Sinners were evidently convicted. Some of the young men raised their hands requesting prayer, but did not have the courage to come to the altar. My conversation with them would interest, were there time and space to write. God bless the Hope Mission. It is worthy of the prayers and financial support of friends.

Friends at Canonsburg and this town are manifesting continued interest by giving subscriptions to the Cynosure. I plan to go to Ingleside, Westmoreland county, for Sabbath. Dec. 15th I am advertised to speak in the Town Hall, Plainfield, Pa. Meetings are arranged for me for the Brethren church, Brockton, Pa., the 16th and 17th. Further work in Clearfield county is expected. I then, D. V., go to Johnstown for meetings. For Christ and reform,

W. B. STODDARD.

THE COAST AGENT AT SEATTLE.

PORTLAND, Ore., Dec. 7, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since my last letter we have had a few saved in the meeting here at Portland. On the last Saturday in November we went to Salem and found them in the midst of a quarterly meeting. Rev. Wm. Stewart, the presiding elder, on Sabbath morning preached an excellent discourse from Paul's words: "Come out from among them," etc. It was on the line of separation from the world in all its spirit and practices.

I preached on Sabbath evening. A deep feeling of conviction rested on the people. Some were enquiring the way; others to know the way more perfectly. The evangelists and pastor are working in harmony, and they must succeed.

I remained at Salem till Wednesday the 2nd, on which day at noon I had the pleasure of uniting in marriage Rev. Walter Reynolds, the pastor at Salem, and Miss Bertha E. Savage. They have our congratulations. Thus the reform ranks are receiving additions from time to time. May they live long to bless the world is my earnest prayer.

On our way home Wednesday we were met at the train at Woodburn by Elder Stewart and Dr. Barkley. We were glad to learn that Mrs. Morse is on the road to recovery. After arriving at home I found, among other letters, a very interesting one from a faithful young Baptist minister in Lane county, Ore. In his letter he gives his recent experience with one of his members who is a Mason. The Mason said of my somewhat recent address at their place: "He is a hypocrite." The pastor answered him: "The secret orders are all thieves and murderers, and I can prove it by the Word of God.

The Mason took steps to discipline the pastor at once; waiting on him and then taking two or three brethren with him. The pastor now urges him to bring it before the church, but he is backing down. I hope the pastor will hold him to it, and perhaps it will result in the local society passing a rule denying membership to lodge men until they renounce the lodge.

The first Sabbath in December we spent at our home church, preaching for the pastor in the morning, it being the last time we will worship at home for some time. To day we start for Seattle, Wash., to remain on the Sound about six weeks, working up and holding a convention in that city about Jan. 18 and 19. Let every friend of the cause pray and labor to make this the best of all meetings yet held on the coast.

Those to whom blanks have been sent for Lodge Lamp subscribers will please respond. Also send me some Cynosure subscribers and cash, and thus help on a worthy cause and share in the ultimate reward. P. B. WILLIAMS.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 20. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Joys that were born into the world with Christ.—Luke ii, 8-20. (A Christmas song service suggested.)

When Christ was born, joy was born into the world with Him. The angels of heaven sang for joy. The shepherds, when they had seen Him, returned full of joy, "glorifying and praising God, for all the thing which they had heard and seen." This was not to be a temporary, transient joy. It was to extend to all people and throughout all times. Not only was it an occasion of joy, but the angel announced to the shepherds the joys that came with Christ's coming. The angel said, "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people, for unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." According to the angel there came with Christ—

1. The joy of good tidings. Good news is always joyful. It was particularly so in the birth of Christ because these tidings announced the fulfillment of a promise and hope long held dear. Christ had been promised. It had been prophesied that His coming would be a joyous occasion. What rapture, therefore, must have filled the hearts of all who recognized in Christ the long looked for Messiah!

2. The joy of the universality of the good tidings. The good news was not limited. It was "to all people." The larger the number included in good news the more joyous it is. If Christ's coming should have benefited only one nation or one class of people, the joy of it would have been overshadowed with sorrow. Christ brought universal joy.

3. The joy of salvation. The cause of the joy as expressed by the angel was that a Saviour had been born. Christ came into the world to save it—to save it from sin and to save it for God. This is why His coming was so full of joy and why it should still be so today. The world needed to be saved. Christ only could save it. What joy, then, when He came to do it. This is the supreme cause for joy in the birth of Christ. He came into the world to save the world.

4. Joy in the personality of the Saviour. He was Christ, which means the anointed one. He was sent from God. He was anointed, appointed and ordained of God for His work, a great cause for joy. He was also the Lord, which means Jehovah, or very God. The Saviour was God, a divine Saviour. What a cause for joy! This fact made salvation both possible and absolutely certain. If salvation depended upon men, even upon ourselves, we might fear and tremble about it. But we need not when we remember that it depends upon a divine Saviour.

Bible Readings.—Ps. xxxv, 9; Isa. vii, 14-25; xxxv, 1-10; lii, 7-10; lxii, 10-12; Zech. ix, 9-17; Mal. iv, 1, 2; Math. ii, 1-11; Luke ii, 25-32; John i, 1-5; Acts viii, 26-39; Gal. iv, 1-9; Heb. i, 1-4; Phil. iv, 4-7.

Character Fences.

Good habits are fences against the devil and a great protection against his assaults. Some strong fences are named by The Endeavor Banner, as follows:

First.—A habit of reading a portion of God's word every morning before leaving your room.

Second.—A habit of always speaking the truth.

Third.—A habit of governing your appetites and passions.

Fourth.—A habit of never going to any place of which you would be ashamed to let your parents know.

Fifth.—A habit of keeping company only with those who honor God and reverence His name.

Sixth.—A habit of keeping the body under self control and restraint.

Seventh.—A habit of reviewing your conduct during the day, in the tribunal of conscience on retiring to rest for the night.

Treasures In Heaven.

What about the treasure in heaven these days? We do not see that people are much concerned about it. There is just one standard up there—the gold standard, Christ's righteousness. There are many advocates for free coinage. Almost anything in the way of morality or self righteousness, they think, should pass there as well as the golden cross or righteousness of Christ. But it has not been adopted by the kingdom, because it would soon retire the more precious blood of Christ from circulation as the price of redemption.—Christian Instructor.

Until It Expands.

Emotion is the bud, not the flower, and never is it of value until it expands into a flower. Every religious sentiment, every act of devotion, which does not produce corresponding elevation of life is worse than useless. It is absolutely pernicious, because it ministers to self deception and tends to lower the tone of personal morals.—Murray.

Speaking Ill of Others.

They are most apt to speak ill of others who do most ill themselves.—Episcopal Recorder.

Christian Endeavor Jottings.

That a method was good last year does not prove it good this year. Keep out of ruts.

Some Endeavorers are already saving up their money for the San Francisco convention. It is well to take a long look.

"Next to the Bible I dearly love common sense," sagely wrote John Wesley, a good maxim for Christian Endeavor workers.

"The best way to increase liberality is to increase spirituality." Remember those wise words of Dr. Pierson, missionary committees.

What are you doing? Honestly, now, what definite, persistent work, that is leaving a mark for righteousness on this old world, has your society undertaken? Think about it.

Lecturing as a Business.

A young girl who happened to know a great deal about a certain country in Europe decided last winter that she would try at an entertainment given for a charitable purpose to tell her friends what she knew and see how they enjoyed it. The experiment was a success—such a success that after awhile she was asked to repeat it oftener than she had time to. So she decided to ask $25 for the evening, and she got it without any difficulty. Her profits during the season were enough to enable her to go to Europe and have a number of photographs of the country taken to be used in her lecture. This winter as soon as the season commenced there was another demand for her lectures, and it was enough to justify her in asking $100 for the entertainment. At that rate she got as many engagements as she could fill. She is a pretty girl, with an engaging manner, and her lecture consists in reality of nothing more than a series of anecdotes agreeably told. Her engagements are usually to lecture before women's clubs or societies of some kind, and the occupation is free from all the unpleasant features of some phases of professional life. She began the work as an experiment, and her success shows how unexpectedly a woman may find employment of an agreeable and profitable kind.—New York Sun.

A Two-thirds Vote In Idaho.

State No. 4 has wheeled into line for woman suffrage.

An unexampled victory for woman suffrage has been achieved in the state of Idaho. Hitherto suffragists have only sought to attain for woman suffrage constitutional amendments the customary majority of votes for the question, whereby amendments of state constitutions are usually adopted. But in Idaho, on Nov. 3, more than two-thirds of the votes cast on the question were recorded for woman suffrage.

And yet it is claimed by the opponents of woman suffrage that by a peculiar wording of the suffrage clause of the Idaho state constitution two-thirds of all the votes cast at a general election are needed, and that these not having been given for suffrage the amendment is lost.

Such a provision was never intended by the men who voted for the new constitution. It would be unjust, unusual, undemocratic and unrepublican. We do not believe that the supreme court of Idaho will so interpret the state constitution. Any such provision, if it exist, was fraudulently framed for the express purpose of perpetuating the disfranchisement of women and was never understood or intended by the voters of Idaho.—Boston Woman's Journal.

Simplicity the Rule.

Garnishing has become of late such a fine art and is attended by such wonderful results as to seriously threaten the popular and generally accepted service known as a la Russe. This is so beautiful in effect and withal so labor saving in result that housekeepers will hesitate to part with it for the more cumbersome and elaborate method of other days. It adds much to the ease and dignified movement of the modern meal to have only the necessary glass and silver together with the decoration of flowers, fruit and lights on the table. The courses are then served from side table, buffet or butler's pantry without delay of carving, mistake or confusion. The host and hostess are free to devote themselves to conversation and the amusement of their guests without interruption, which is a great advantage. Chefs are making an effort to restore the French service, at which all dishes are first presented at the table and afterward taken away to be carved and served. Thudicum, in his "Spirit of Cookery," explains the intent of this display of showy dishes by the oft repeated quotation "one eats with the eye"—in other words, that the beauty of food is a pleasure to sight, as its perfect delicate flavor is to palate, and in this way ministers to two senses rather than one. It is to be hoped, however, that the modern hostess will not be deprived of the convenience of the napkin or the pretty service a la Russe until the presentation of something much better reconciles her to their loss.

Except on anniversary occasions and intended to serve as a souvenir, the menu is seldom seen in private entertaining. At a formal dinner the name card is a convenience in seating guests in the order previously decided upon by the hostess without possibilities of mistakes. A card is now given each gentleman before entering the drawing room bearing his own name and that of the lady he is to take in to dinner. This is true courtesy on the part of a hostess, as the value of a bright little talk between them before beginning the meal adds much to its enjoyment and success.—Table Talk.

Fin de Siecle Chivalry.

The Boston Advertiser says: Two thousand two hundred and thirty-seven members of the Cambridge university "senate" in England have signed a document whose purport, stripped of all verbiage, is that women may be permitted to study at the university, provided they pass entrance examinations as rigid as those required of men, keep up during their course of study as high a standard of scholarship as the men do, pay the same fees that the men pay and receive none of the degrees, none of the honors and none of the privileges which are accorded to men in consequence of connection with the university. And this document emanates from what is known as the "liberal" party in the university senate. The other party wants the women excluded absolutely. The terms upon which the "liberal" party is willing to admit them constitute a very faithful sample, stripped of all glitter and tinsel and other false pretense, of about nine-tenths of what passes in the world for chivalry.

Queen Victoria's Gay Dress.

The queen always had a liking for gay colors, and a lady who was presented to her on her first visit to Deeside gives the following interesting account of the queen's dress: Her majesty wore a bright blue silk dress, with a great number of flounces of varying depths, each edged with narrow black velvet over a not inconsiderable crinoline. Above this very brilliant garment she wore a royal Stewart tartan shawl in all its rainbow colors, a white chip bonnet trimmed with pink roses and blue ribbon bows. A white veil and pale lemon colored gloves completed what could hardly be called a quiet costume. She carried in her hand a small blue silk parasol, with a thick silk fringe of the same shade and with a white ivory handle and stalk.—Woman.

Lady Hayter.

Lady Hayter, known in London as the Zenobia of the Liberal party, is not only an accomplished woman of the world, but also one of the most indefatigable of women travelers. With her husband, Sir Arthur Hayter, she has journeyed twice around the world, hunted kangaroos in Australia, elephants in Ceylon and tigers in India and has explored the Yellowstone park and the Yosemite valley. In spite of her taste for outdoor life, she is said to be a consummate artist in dress, and her toilets serve her as the frame to a charming picture.

Chicago's Woman's Temple.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, who planned the Temple in Chicago which is used for headquarters of the National Woman's Christian Temperance union, The Union Signal and many other important offices, has taken to the platform in order to raise money to liquidate the debt of the Temple. Miss Shentz, an able elocutionist, accompanies her. Any one desiring to perpetuate the memory of a temperance worker can, by the payment of $100 to the building fund, have such name inscribed on the tablet in Willard hall in the Temple.

A Stocking Bag.

A stocking bag is a convenient article to have about the house—a receptacle into which go all the stockings brought from the laundry that need darning, there to rest until made ready for the dresser drawers. The basket shown in the sketch has a wicker standard tinted a bright red.

The sides are covered with scarlet denim arranged in bag shape, with a wide frill finishing the top. Full knots of scarlet satin ribbon set off the sides. A durable material such as denim is by far the best to use, as the dark stockings are apt to soil it.

An Old Time Woman's Club.

A writer for the New York Times says there was a woman's club in that city in 1797. It was an "association of persons for the promotion of a common cause," a missionary society the members called the Society For the Relief of Poor Widows and Orphans. The society, which was the first one organized for missionary work in New York, was founded by Mrs. Isabella Graham in 1797. Continuing the work, 29 young ladies met at Mrs. Ogden Hoffman's, on Wall street, in 1804, and banded themselves together to teach and sew for the children of the "poor widows." Then came the need of caring for the children when the mothers died, and the New York Orphan Asylum society was founded March 16, 1806. The orphan asylum on Riverside drive, between Seventy-second and Seventy-third streets, one of the finest institutions in the city, is the outcome of the work.

There were many names familiar in the early history of New York connected with the society. The "first directress" of the original Orphan Asylum society was Mrs. Hoffman; the "second directress" was Mrs. Alexander Hamilton. Mrs. Hamilton continued to be an officer until she removed from New York to Washington.

Jules Breton's Artist Daughter.

Virginie Demont-Breton is the only woman painter since Rosa Bonheur to receive the cross of the Legion of Honor, so rarely given to women. She chooses greater subjects than her illustrious senior, in that these subjects are human and her talent is more versatile and tender. Her color and harmony of tones please the most critical. Her mothers speak to all and her children to those who have had children of their own. They are not impossible, idealized dream children and dream mothers, but real ones such as one knows.

Though the beautiful Joan of Arc child, on her knees in the field, has an inspired look in her face, she is nevertheless like many French peasant children to be met along any roadside in summer. The mother, aiding the tottering steps of her twins, is doing only what all nurses and mothers do. In "Dipped In the Sea" the child is but struggling as all others do when plunged into the waves.—"A Painter of Motherhood," by Mrs. Lee Bacon, in Century.

A Woman of Good Works.

Mrs. Temple, wife of the prelate who has just been appointed by Queen Victoria to the primacy of the Church of England, is an ideal helpmate for an archbishop and ever since her marriage has identified herself with many good works associated with the name of her husband. In the sees of Exeter and London Mrs. Temple has been a great favorite with all classes of society and is vice president of the Ladies' Home Mission association and of the Ladies' Diocesan association. She is the daughter of the Right Hon. W. S. Lascelles, M. P., third son of the second Earl of Harewood, and she, as well as two of her sisters, the Hon. Mary and the Hon. Emma Lascelles (now Lady Edward Cavendish), has held the post of honor to her majesty. Among her other accomplishments Mrs. Temple is a clever stenographer, and her sympathetic manner and the kindly tact she has displayed in her relations with the clergy and their families make her a popular hostess.—Kansas City Times.

Table Decorations.

No longer are tall flowering plants used for decorating the table. Instead there are low dishes tastefully arranged with choice flowers and delicate trailing plants, mingled with appropriate leaves and mosses. Another pretty way to arrange flowers for the table is to fill a low dish with small blocks of ice and sweet smelling buds and blossoms.

The Invaluable Weapon.

What cannot a girl do with a hairpin? Here is the latest use for that simple tool. Try it for buttoning your linen collar when you are afraid of breaking the corners in your wrestle with the longest shanked button that has yet been devised, but which isn't more than half long enough for the present fashion of neckwear.—Brooklyn Eagle.

The newest desk for the fashionable woman's den is a rather small affair of white enamel, decorated in blue. It carries out the delft coloring and design. The white desks, hand painted in a floral pattern, are also a novelty. These desks have but one drawer, and these boast of silver handles.

Korea, Turkey and India are sending women to America to study medicine. The oriental countries, where it is desecration for a man to touch any woman but his wife, afford an excellent field for women physicians, many English and American M. D.'s having a lucrative practice there.

DRINKING IN EUROPE

SCIENCE CONDEMNS THE USE OF ALCOHOL.

Claims That It Prevents the Enjoyment of Health—It Affects the System Like Arsenic and Results In Debility and Death.

A careful investigation of the drinking habits and temperance movements in continental Europe is calculated to overthrow the views prevalent on these subjects in the United States, writes a correspondent of the New York Voice. These views were shared by the writer when he went to Germany as a student, but he was obliged to abandon them after spending three years at the universities of Halle, Gottingen, Berlin and Tubingen, after living 14 years, 1880-94, in Berlin and mingling with all classes in the city and after making a special inquiry into the statistics of intemperance and into the efforts to overcome the frightful evils wrought by alcoholism.

It is but fair to state that, as one born in Germany, I had some of the notions on temperance which are common in the fatherland. But personal observation and my study of the drink question while in that country convinced me that total abstinence is the most rational and most Christian course. Faithfulness to this conviction among students, in literary circles and in ordinary society became the occasion of ridicule and unfriendly comment, but temperance from principle is respected by the respectable.

Many persons have a pecuniary interest in promoting the consumption of alcoholic drinks, while others apologize for their addiction to drink by trying to prove moderate drinking a blessing or at least harmless. The views of these interested parties are often confirmed by tourists whose hasty and superficial observations are published as if decisive, when they are, in fact, worthless. One must live with the people and study them and consult physicians and experts in order to get the facts of the case.

In half an hour in Berlin I have seen more drunkards than I did in Boston during a whole year. In Berlin I saw these in a quarter rarely visited by tourists. I do not, however, draw the inference that the drunkenness in Berlin is greater than in Boston. Such an inference would be justified only after far more complete investigation in both cities had proved it true.

If one wants to know what horrible effects result from intemperance, let him consult Lieutenant Colonel von Knobelsdorf, a man of high nobility, who withdrew from the army and from his social circle in order to devote his whole life to the salvation of drunkards. The writer of these lines had visited Switzerland repeatedly without any conception of the evils of intemperance in that country until he met a man who had been saved from drunkenness, was an active worker in behalf of total abstinence and gave an account of the many victims of alcohol.

Beer and wine producing countries are often referred to as models of temperance, and the supposed absence of temperance societies and temperance literature is thought to be due to the fact that these countries do not need them. This is a total perversion of facts, whether the source of the perversion be ignorance or intentional falsehood. Some of the best and most scientific temperance literature in the world comes from these very countries.

On the continent a movement in favor of total abstinence has been developed which is of the utmost significance. It is not the product of prejudice, for that is all on the other side. It has not tradition or custom in its favor, but it wars against these. It is not ascetic, but opposes asceticism and claims that alcoholism must be destroyed in order that the table, the health and society may be most fully enjoyed. It does not spring from theories of morals and religion, but is the result of the most thorough scientific inquiry and of practical experience.

In proof of this I refer to an appeal issued a few years ago in the German language on the continent against moderate drinking and in favor of total abstinence. The appeal states that science has proved immoderate drinking to affect the system like poison, similar in many respects to arsenic, resulting in debility, disease and death.

While the evils of excessive drinking are recognized, those of moderate drinking are, however, not so apparent. So powerful are the ordinary drinking customs that all are in danger of being led astray by them. But the weak ought to be considered. The example of moderate drinkers may ruin them. Besides this consideration it is a serious error to suppose that health and strength are promoted by moderate drinking. Alcohol is not nourishment and cannot take the place of healthful food.

The appeal is sent out for the purpose of opposing the social customs of drinking. The signers "want to show that the enjoyment of life which is the product of the mental activity of an unpoisoned brain is greater than that which is obtained by means of stupefaction. They want to show that sociability, which consists in genuine communion of intellect, requires neither wine nor beer to be acceptable." Hence they do not place themselves on the standpoint of moderate drinking, but on that of total abstinence, "and for their own sake and for the sake of their fellow men they banish alcohol and all alcoholic drinks from all their habits and customs."

The close of the appeal is significant. "We beseech all who have a heart for the future of humanity, who follow with interest the constantly growing struggle for existence, to join us, for the genius of humanity will never triumph until it adopts the motto, 'We will not stupefy ourselves, but we will fight.'"

Gladstone on Intoxicants.

"There is a general belief that alcoholic liquors tend to give greater bodily vitality, but I do not believe that there is a greater superstition than to suppose that these liquors can give men a greater capacity for bodily or mental exertion, and in this I am supported by the highest medical testimony."

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, DEC. 27.

A Comprehensive Review of the Quarter's Lessons — Golden Text, Eccl. xii, 13—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

LESSON I.—Solomon Anointed King (I Kings i, 28-39). Golden Text, I Kings ii, 8, "Keep the charge of the Lord thy God to walk in His ways." As it was the Lord's plan that Solomon and none other of the sons of David should sit on his throne, so it surely came to pass (I Chron. xxii, 9). "Every purpose of the Lord shall be performed" (Jer. li, 29). "The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed so shall it stand" (Isa. xiv, 24). Hear our God as He says, notwithstanding all the vain imaginings of rulers and people, "Yet have I set my King upon my holy hill of Zion" (Ps. ii, 6).

LESSON II.—Solomon's Wise Choice (I Kings iii, 5-15). Golden Text, Ps. cxi, 10, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." It is interesting to note that not only the second lesson at the beginning of the quarter, but also the second lesson from the end of the quarter, the one of two weeks ago, had as its topic "Wisdom." Let it be impressed upon us that "wisdom is the principal thing," not the wisdom of this world which crucified our Lord, but our Lord Jesus Christ Himself, who is "the Wisdom of God." See James i, 5.

LESSON III.—Solomon's Wealth and Wisdom (I Kings iv, 25-34). Golden Text, I Sam. ii, 30, "Them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be lightly esteemed." He asked only for wisdom, but God gave him wealth as well as wisdom, yet not for his own glory, but that God might be glorified through him, for he sat on the throne of the Lord for the Lord his God (I Chron. xxix, 23; II Chron. ix, 8). Every Christian is in the world for God, and God will give to every child of His all the wealth and wisdom which He sees that we will use to His glory that He may be made known.

LESSON IV.—The Proverbs of Solomon (Prov. i, 1-19). Golden Text, Prov. i, 10, "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not." Sinners are after something for themselves at any cost, even the cost of the life of a fellow being if that is the only way to get what they want, but Christ, the Wisdom of God, sought nothing for Himself and voluntarily laid down His life that He might be life and blessing to all who receive Him.

LESSON V.—Building the Temple (I Kings v, 1-12). Golden Text, Ps. cxxvii, 1, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." This temple was, like the tabernacle, a place for God to dwell in in the midst of His people Israel. David said, "It must be exceedingly magnifical of fame and of glory throughout all countries" (I Chron. xxii, 5). The fact that every stone was made ready before it was brought to the building (I Kings vi, 7) is very suggestive of God's dealings with the believer, making each one ready down here for his place in the building above (Eph. ii, 21).

LESSON VI.—The Temple Dedicated (I Kings viii, 54-63). Golden Text, Hab. ii, 20, "The Lord is in His holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him." In connection with prayer and sacrifice the building when finished was given to the Lord, and He accepted it by filling it with His glory. The great temple, the New Jerusalem, shall yet be seen filled with the glory of the Lord, and all the earth shall enjoy its glory. If any believer will by virtue of the blood of Christ present himself honestly to Christ, he, too, shall be filled to the glory of God that Christ may be magnified.

LESSON VII.—God's Blessing Upon Solomon (I Kings ix, 1-9). Golden Text, Prov. x, 22, "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and He addeth no sorrow with it." The continuance of the manifest blessing of the Lord upon Solomon depended upon his obedience. Our salvation depends wholly upon the blood of Christ, to which we can add nothing. We never can be more safe than we are by His merits when once we truly accept Him, but our enjoyment of Him and usefulness to Him depend upon our obedience and the closeness of our walk with Him.

LESSON VIII.—Rewards of Obedience (Prov. iii, 1-17). Golden Text, Prov. iii, 6, "In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths." Here again is the Lord as our wisdom entreating us to lean upon Him and never upon ourselves. What He seeks for is, on our part, weakness and helplessness and emptiness, that He may perfect His strength in our weakness and fill our emptiness with His fullness. We can yield to Him, we can trust Him and rely upon Him, that He may work. This is all He asks.

LESSON IX.—The Fame of Solomon (I Kings x, 1-10). Golden Text, Math. xii, 42, "Behold, a greater than Solomon is here." It was the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, for Solomon had nothing great or glorious except as God gave it to him. I often wonder what the Lord would give us of His power and glory, even here, if He saw that we would use it only for Him. We think that we are seeking only His glory, when often perhaps He sees some pride of talent, or knowledge, or scholarship, or denomination, or somewhat that hinders Him from working.

LESSON X.—Solomon's Sin (I Kings xi, 4-13). Golden Text, I Cor. x, 12, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." He used the power and wealth which God gave him to magnify himself and indulge himself and make himself like other kings of the earth. He did not obey his own precepts, but trusted in himself and leaned upon his own understanding. He even set up idols, almost without number, to please those whom he loved more than God, and thus terribly dishonored God and turned his back upon Him. This is written to warn us to let nothing come between us and God.

LESSON XI.—Cautions Against Intemperance (Prov. xxiii, 15-25). Golden Text, Prov. xxiii, 21, "For the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty." The substance of this lesson is that wise children make glad parents. No one is wise who lives unto himself, whether in the matter of eating or drinking or dress or in any way.

LESSON XII.—The Birth of Christ (Math. ii, 1-12). Golden Text, Luke ii, 10, "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people." While we consider the birth of Jesus as the King of the Jews, and wait for His return as the King of the Jews—though the church is not waiting for that, but to be caught up to meet Him on His way—there is nothing more important than that we magnify Him in these mortal bodies by allowing Him to set us apart wholly for Himself to manifest His life in us, and through us do all He can to bring the good tidings to all people.

LOSS OF THE SALIER.

NEARLY 400 PEOPLE WENT DOWN WITH THE VESSEL.

Would Have Been 100 Greater if the Disaster Had Occurred a Few Hours Later—Lost Like the Drummond Castle—Struck the Rocks at Night.

Coruna, Spain, Dec. 12.—Three hundred and eighty-one human beings went down in the wreck of the Salier, instead of 274, as first reported, the vessel having taken on more than 100 passengers after she left Bremen. Nearly all the passengers were in the steerage. Owing to the fact that there seems to be no survivors of the wreck there is little else but theories to fall back on to account for the disaster. Experts here look upon the loss of the Salier as having been due to causes proabbly in every particular similar to those which led to the loss of the British steamer Drummond Castle, of the Castle line, off Ushant, on the northwestern extremity of France, in June last. As in the case of the Salier, the weather previous to the wreck of the Drummond Castle and the loss of nearly 250 people had been very heavy, and was followed by thick weather which prevented Captain Pierce, her commander, from seeing the light.

How the Drummond Castle Was Lost.

When he believed he was far enough north Captain Pierce ordered the helm of the Drummond Castle to be ported, and with fine rain and fog headed her on the night of June 17 on a northeasterly course for the Bristol channel. But he was apparently out of his reckoning, for the Drummond Castle seemed to have run at full speed upon a ridge of rocks extending from the island of Molene, half way between Ushant and the mainland of France, to other and smaller islands. The concussion, it was generally admitted at the time, must have ripped the steamer open from stem to stern, and she apparently pitched over the reef and sank almost immediately afterward in deep water, for no trace of her was ever

Like the Drummond Castle, it is believed that the Salier was making the found. Like the Drummond Castle, it is believed that the Salier was making the best time possible under the circumstances, for after leaving Bremen the Salier had touched at Antwerp and this port and her commander was anxious to have his vessel's head pointing on her voyage across the Atlantic ocean.

Theories in Regard to the Salier.

Another theory of the cause of the disaster is that the Salier's steering gear was carried away while she was heading around the rocks for Villagarcia, and that she thus became unmanageable and was driven upon the reef, which is about two and a half miles from land. The passengers of the Salier, it is conjectured, must all—or nearly all—have been in their births in the steerage at the time the steamer struck, and it is thought most of them were drowned before they could tumble out on deck, for no bodies with life preservers have been found so far as known at present.

The steamer struck during the night of Monday last on a ledge of rocks about two and one half miles off Cape Corrubedo, on her way from this place to Villagarcia, where she was to ship another lot of steerage passengers bound for Buenos Ayres. A large amount of wreckage is reported to have washed ashore. The Salier was an old vessel, but she was considered to be in every way seaworthy.

If the disaster had occurred after the Salier touched at Villagarcia the loss of life would have been much greater, as it is understood there were nearly one hundred more passengers — men, women, and children—awaiting at that port to embark for Buenos Ayres.

HER RELIGION WAS OF NO AVAIL.

Did Ingersoll's Defense of Suicide Have Anything to Do with the Case?

San Francisco, Dec. 12.—The death by asphyxiation of Mrs. Sarah B. Cooper and her daughter Harriet yesterday morning has produced a profound sensation in this city. No woman in San Francisco or on the entire Pacific coast was so prominent as Mrs. Cooper, who had devoted her life to religious and philanthropic work, and was actively connected with every reform movement. She was a cousin of Colonel Robert Ingersoll with whom, despite their opposite religious views, she maintained a warm friendship.

There is no doubt but that Miss Cooper was responsible for the deaths of herself and mother. The family physician states that Miss Cooper had been suffering for months from melancholia with homicidal and suicidal tendencies. Her father committed suicide ten years ago and two cousins, nephews of her father, also killed themselves. Harriet Cooper had made several previous attempts to end her life, attempting to jump from a ferry-boat and several times announcing to her mother that she longed to turn on the gas at night so that she and her mother could pass away together.

Indiana Bimetallic League.

Indianapolis, Dec. 11.—The Indiana Bimetallic league at its late afternoon session yesterday decided by a resolution which was carried unanimously to hold a big mass-meeting of all Indianians who supported Bryan and the Chicago platform to take place in this city on Jackson day. Speakers of national repute will baeprovided and the meeting will be the rallying signal for Indiana bimetallists. It was decided to carry on the work of organization and education as rapidly as possible.

Pulpit for MacLaren.

London, Dec. 14.—In view of the belief that Rev. George F. Pentecost, the American evangelist, will probably accept the call to New York, his successor is being discussed here, and it is generally thought that Rev. Dr. John Watson ("Ian MacLaren") will fill the vacancy.

All these tools are full-sized, practical, neat, and cheap; not mere toys. They enable any person to do his own half-soling, boot, shoe, rubber, harness, and tinware repairing.

This Outfit is the result of years of study, experiment, and correspondence in the manufacture of Iron Lasts and Repairing Outfits; and its practical advantages need only to be seen and tried to be appreciated.

Our Improved Iron Lasts and Standard are one of the handiest tools you can have about the place. The Lasts are four in number, smooth and solid, 4, 6, 8 ,and 10 inches long, thus enabling one to half-sole all sizes of foot-wear. The Standard is made with an iron base, which can be easily fastened to the bench. No method of half-soling is now used on common work, except that of iron last and wire clinch nails. The writer of this has been in the business 20 years, and has seen the changes from the old wooden lasts and pegs to the modern method, and knows it to be complete.

Our Improved Harness and Saw Clamp is an indispensable tool in sewing a harness or filing a saw. The jaws are thrown open mechanically by a coiled spring on the bolt.

The weight of this outfit is 18 lbs. Price, all complete, packed in a neat, strong box, only $3.00.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

SHREDDED CORNSTALKS.

Is There a Market For Corn Hay?—What Hay Dealers Say.

The question was asked and answered not long since in the columns of The Rural New Yorker, "Is there a market for shredded stalks?" A Buffalo dealer said that his experience with corn hay had not been very satisfactory, for the reason that the shipments did not arrive in sound condition. Another wholesale dealer writes: "We know of no market for 'corn hay.' The cornstalks are of such a nature that they will heat very quickly after being baled, and we think it impracticable to open a market for this product while hay is so low." A hay dealer in New York city said: "There is no quotation on baled cornstalks, and, although we are constantly in touch with the hay trade, we have never handled them; neither can we say what they are worth."

From Cincinnati came the reply: "There is no market here whatever for the shredded corn fodder. A few cars were sent to this market last year, but were disposed of with great difficulty. Feeders in this section don't want this kind of forage when they can get hay so cheaply. We do not think that a demand could be worked up for it."

A hay dealer writing from St. Louis said: "Corn hay of the crop of 1895 has been handled in a limited way in this market, but it did not seem to take with the trade, and none has been offered here this year, owing to the very low condition of the market on timothy and prairie hay."

From Montreal comes the report that corn hay is not quoted and is unknown to the trade of that city.

Microbe Farming.

It is now well established that certain bacteria enable clover, alfalfa, peas, beans and other legumes to utilize nitrogen of the air that otherwise would not be available. By growing these crops to plow under or to feed stock farmers avoid buying nitrogen in fertilizers for some crops, and this means an immense saving of money. The trouble has been that the breeds or species of nitrogen bacteria that thrive on certain crops are not always present in the soil, and this accounts for many a failure of clover seed to "catch" well. Months ago The New England Homestead suggested that soon cultures of nitrogen bacteria adapted to each crop might be on the market, and now it is announced that such cultures have been placed on the market in Germany. The material is called "nitrogine" and is being carefully tested at the Gottingen experiment station. In our own country efforts have been made at the Illinois station to cross the clover root and corn root bacteria in hopes of breeding a hybrid microbe that, while possessing the ability to take up nitrogen from air, would also thrive on the corn root, and thus enable the crop to feed freely upon atmospheric nitrogen.

Competition of Western Butter.

Competition of western butter is constantly on the increase. In Iowa there are nearly 1,000 butter factories. Minnesota was solely a wheat country a few years ago, but now has over 500 creameries. Many factories have been established within a few years by creamery sharks on a watered stock basis in localities where farmers were ignorant of dairying and were deceived by golden tales of creamery profits. Such enterprises failed by the score, but many have been reorganized by the more progressive farmers and are now being operated as carefully and successfully as any well established creamery in Ohio or New York and claim to make equally good butter. Attention has been called to such a factory in Barton county, Kan., where the average output is about half a ton of butter per day. Only a few years back that section imported much of the little butter it consumed. All our western country can be adapted to dairying, and with low freight rates western butter can compete with that of the middle states, says American Agriculturist.

New Idea In Tree Planting.

A new and useful idea in tree planting circles is that which comes from a Colorado tree planter. It is with reference to the digging of the holes for receiving the trees, which, as all practical tree planters know, is one of the most laborious and particular duties connected with the undertaking. The new idea in this connection consists simply in the use of dynamite. A sharp crowbar is brought into requisition for probing down to the depth of three or four feet, when a half or whole stick of dynamite, with cap and fuse attached, is placed at the bottom. Fine dirt is first placed on the dynamite and when nearing the top is tamped solidly. Set fire to the fuse, and the dynamite will quickly do the rest.—Exchange.

Fall Plowing.

As to the importance of fall plowing, I think fall plowing is one of the most necessary things a famer can do, and the earlier the better, as it kills all the weeds. However, here in southern Iowa during the last five or six years we have raised better crops from spring plowing. But fall plowing helps the farmer along in the spring of the year. He can disk it up, and it is ready to plant much earlier, can get in a larger crop, secure a better seed bed and work it much better than spring plowing.

Cheese Without Rind.

A company of Utica manufacturers, it is told, make a cheese that is so put up that no rind can form over it. The cheese is made square and is coated with a thin coat of shellac, which is put on when the cheese is first taken from the hoop. These cheeses cure perfectly under their airtight covering.

How to Get Fish Bones From the Throat.

With children in the house it is especially necessary to know how to remove fish bones or anything else that has lodged in the throat. The white of a raw egg will do this.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THE WAY MACEO WAS LURED INTO A DEATH TRAP.

Deliberate Plot by Weyler, Ahumada and Doctor Zertucha to Trap the Great Chieftain and Kill Him Like a Dog—Details of the Alleged Plot.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—The detailed news that was sent broadcast over the country yesterday regarding the death of Maceo and declaring that he was the victim of a premeditated assassination by the Spaniards and was lured to his death, caused a wave of indignation through this country that would only need to carry the executive with it to eventuate in war with Spain. There were many versions of the story and all of them were emphatically and officially denied both at Washington by Minister De Lome and at Havana. Later they have been denied by an Associated Press dispatch from Havana which if absolutely reliable stamps the Cubans as very picturesque and persistent prevaricators. The alleged luring of Maceo to his death, on the other hand, was such a crime against modern civilization as would undobtedly turn the whole world against Spain.

New York Sun's Story of the Crime.

The New York Sun's account of the alleged murder of Maceo is the least sensational of the several printed and is in substance as follows: "Dec. 9 a commissioner from the insurgent camp came to Havana and brought news to the Cuban junta there that Antonio Maceo, young Gomez and other members of the staff of Maceo had been assassinated by the Spaniards, in accordance with a plan contrived through Dr. Maximo Zertucha, by the Marquis of Ahumada, second in command, or segundo cabo of the captain generalcy of the island of Cuba. * * * Early in November Maceo received a mysterious message which appeared to him to come from the Marquis of Ahumada, with full authority from General Weyler, as the messenger carried a safe-conduct issued by Weyler personally. Nothing was written; the message was only verbal. At this conference only Brigadier Miro, chief of staff of Maceo, was present. 'Well,' answered Maceo, 'go tell the Marquis of Ahumada that I will consider the thing and give him an answer.'

Zertucha Puts in His Word.

Maceo imediately gathered his staff, and explaining the situation asked the opinion of his subordinates. Brigadier Miro expressed his belief that the whole thing was a scheme for the Spaniards to catch Maceo in a trap. But Dr. Maximo Zertucha tried to convince the Cuban leader that it was wise to meet the Marquis of Ahumada, as the financial situation of Spain clearly indicated that the Spanish army would soon have to abandon the fight. Though Maceo was satisfied that the situation of Spain indicated a coming crisis he accepted the views of Miro and resolved to wait, thinking it strange that the first proposals for peace should be made to him and not to General Gomez."

A New Plot Is Concocted.

The Sun's account goes on to say that this attempt failing General Weyler returned to Havana to help concoct another plan, and Zertucha was retained to carry it out, the latter being promdoctor found means to communicate the plans and movements of Maceo to Ahumada, vie governor general, and to Ahumada, vice governor general and this brought about Maceo's death as follows: Maceo at Gomez' orders had to cross the trocha to join the latter who was moving west and intended to besiege Havana. "The crossing of the trocha was not an easy affair with a large body of men, and even when opportunity offered but few Cuban soldiers could do it without attracting attention. Maceo knew how, and moved to Mariel, but the Spaniards, through Zertucha, knew of his movements and of the communication from Gomez.

LED INTO AMBUSH BY ZERTUCHA.

And Upon Refusing to Surrender Shot to Death by the Spaniards.

"On the 2d of December Maceo sent four men to reconnoiter the trocha on the north side. They exchanged shots with the sentinels and by this the Spanish knew the proximity of the insurgent leader. Then orders were given by the Spanish commander not to resist. On the 3d Maceo sent some more scouts, who came back and assured him that the trocha was not well defended on that side. He passed the trocha on the night of the 4th without resistance after leaving General Ruiz Rivera in command of the Cuban forces in the province of Pinar del Rio.

"On the 5th, in the morning, he sent a commissioner to the junta in Havana. On the 6th, while marching with six men, among them Miro, the son of Gomez, and Zertucha, the latter advised him to take a route through a cane field which he knew. They did so, and fell into an ambush of 500 Spaniards, commanded by Major Cirujeda.

"'If you surrender,' said a voice, 'we offer you your life and an honorable treaty.'

"'Viva, Cuba libre!' answered Maceo, and then the butchery began. Gomez was wounded and fell before Maceo, but Miro escaped.

"At this moment, said the Cuban commissioner to the junta in Havana, a band of rebels who were going to join Maceo at the Havana side of Mariel, approached and were informed by Miro of the ambush. The Spaniards had already taken Maceo, who was pierced with bullets, and Gomez, who killed himself with the last bullet of his revolver. They had searched the bodies, and four men were carrying them when the Cubans came up. A terrible fight ensued, and the Cubans recovered the bodies of the two leaders, pursuing the Spanish with their machetes clear to Punta Brava.

GOLD DEMOCRATS CONFER.

Determination to Maintain the Organization the Unanimous Feeling.

Indianapolis, Dec. 11.—"Maintain the organization" was the unaimous sentiment of the executive committee of the gold Democratic party, which met here yesterday. There was not a dissenting voice in regard to this proposition and one of the first things done was the adoption of resolutions of regret at the death of Colonel Fellows, of New York, and Charles A. Emery, of Illinois. Ex-Representative Bynum presided, both at the conference and the banquet at the Bates House, at the latter of which there were twenty-five guests present. Here Bynum made a speech in which he said that in "glancing over the events of the past few months it seems almost incredible that so much history could have been made in so short a space of time. The organization of a great national party; the convening of a convention composed of 900 delegates, representing more than forty states of the Union; and the prosecution of a campaign unsurpassed in its educational influence, within the short space of three and a half months, certainly an achievement which will occupy a conspicuous page in the political history of our country."

He earnestly urged the continuation of the fight and everything he said in that regard was enthusiastically applauded. Henry Watterson also spoke. as did others, all in the same vein as Bynum. The executive committee decided not to issue an address at the present time, but gave out a statement that the national organization will be preserved in all the states, that national headquarters will be in New York, and that no alliance will be made with the Republican party. Meantime all honorable efforts will be made to reunite the two wings of the Democratic party.

Episcopal Convention in Session.

Springfield, Ills., Dec. 9.—The nineteenth annual convention of the diocese of Springfield convened yesterday in St. Paul's cathedral, with 150 delegates present. The session will continue three days.

Washington Convention at Seattle, Jan. 18, 19.

Minnesota State Convention at Willmar, Feb. 23, 24.

The Missouri State Convention will be held at Kirksville about Feb. 4, 5.

The report of the New England Convention in this issue will be found interesting reading. The testimony of Rev. D. B. Gunn is worth repeating: "I have found that as soon as a church member joins the lodge he loses his spirituality." And this: "In a town of seventeen to twenty-five lodges the church could scarcely muster from five to a dozen men at its weekly prayer meeting."

It has been shown in the various publications of the Immigration Restriction League and elsewhere, that illiteracy and general undesirability for citizenship go together. The illiterate are the Slav, Latin and Asiatic races. During the last fiscal year the average illiteracy of immigrants from Austria-Hungary, Italy, Poland and Russia was 40.1 per cent, while of those from the United Kingdom, France, Germany and Scandinavia it was only 3.7 per cent.

Question.—Are the 4,500 secret lodges of Chicago not exerting a greater influence to dethrone Christ in our politics than the 450 churches are exerting to enthrone him? Let it be remembered that very many in the churches advocate, either directly or indirectly, that Christ's authority should be limited to the family and the church, and that it does not rule in the sphere of politics. Ask the average church member how far he wants the law of Christ applied to his politics, and listen to him hesitate, and stammer, and knit his brows.

We wish some of our readers across the water will tell us why no movement has been set on foot in the British Isles to bear testimony against secret societies. The assassinations and attempted assassinations of government officials, and the note in this issue from our Princeton correspondent, go to show that secret orders are strong in Great Britain, and that little has been done to counteract their influence.

JAMES M. FULTON, D. D.

The death of this devoted minister and reformer of the United Presbyterian church occurred Nov. 24, at his father's in Belmont Co., Ohio, where he was born in 1849. He graduated at Westminster in 1872, and after a course in theology in Allegheny seminary, he was for thirteen years pastor of the Fourth U. P. church, Allegheny. He was compelled, owing to feeble health, to retire from the work of the ministry, and for two years he was principal of the new Normal Institute at Henderson, N. C. He was a great preacher, practical, earnest and sympathetic. He was a man of clear convictions and intense earnestness, a typical pastor, tender and faithful, and a born leader of men.

Dr. J. M. Fulton was active in all reforms of the day. He gave frequent utterances both by voice and pen on the anti-secret question. A short time before his death he wrote of college fraternities: "They must do their work in the dark. They must act lies and almost tell lies to hide themselves. They put forward some ambitious fellow to do their work that is not a secret society man at all. Everybody thinks he is. The men that are making the plans and providing the ammunition are not seen. They may be sitting in the councils of the anti-secret men or be giving pointers to the faculty. They are living a double life that is leading to hypocrisy, deceit and dishonesty in the worst forms."

The letters from our valued correspondent, Rev. J. R. Wylie, Blanchard, Ia., have been full of interest not only to the friends in that vicinity, but everywhere. They furnish a most striking illustration of the Satanic spirit of the lodge and saloon, when they are determinedly resisted. The slave power, when it was resisted, plunged the nation into a bloody war which closed with an attempt to assassinate the nation's rulers. We have no reason to expect anything less sanguinary from the saloon and lodge power, when they are driven to the last ditch.

We close in this issue the able reply of Rev. Wm. Fenton to the Contemporary Review, in which he proves that Freemasons identify themselves with the worshipers of Baal Peor on the plains of Moab; a crime for which God slew 24,000 of the Israelites. This giant iniquity not only saps the foundation of the church by absorbing its talent, time and money, but it is the modern anti-christ, provoking the God of heaven to sweep our land with the storms of divine judgment.

It is a serious question how far we may go in supporting voluntary organizations in doing the legitimate work of the thurch. It is only when the church is indifferent and refuses to agitate or bear testimony against great evils, such as the liquor traffic or secret societies, that we are justified in organizing special movements to do this work. We should not forget that Christ has organized the church, and prescribed its officers and work. Its business is to maintain the whole truth, and testify against all evil. When it fails to do this it is defective, and must be supplemented by other agencies.

Missouri State Convention will be held probably about February 4 and 5, 1897, in Kirksville, Mo. A strong convention will do good locally as well as throughout the State, and responses so far are encouaging. Let the old guard be strong and of good courage, for some lodge men are acknowledging the baneful influence of their societies upon the church, and are favoring our conferences. What lodge men confess, must soon be confessed by all true ministers of Jesus Christ, and then will come our harvest, and souls will be saved in the lodges and out of the lodges, and the power of organized secretism will be broken.

It is estimated that there are 4,500 secret lodges in Chicago. They are all training schools exerting a powerful influence upon public and private life. The most dangerous feature of their education is that which excludes Christ. With but few exceptions their aim is to unite men on platforms on which all religionists can stand; and such platforms must reject Christ, because many cannot accept him. It is estimated that nearly one-half the voting citizens in this country are members of secret lodges, trained to exclude Christ from lodge prayers and rituals; and Freemasons going so far as to blot that precious name out of texts quoted from his Word. Is it any wonder then that so many fight shy of any movement aiming to enthrone Christ's law in American politics? And is it not sad moral stupidity for any such movement not to recognize the Christ-rejecting lodge system as their greatest enemy?

WHAT I LIVE FOR.

BY GEORGE LINNÆUS BANKS.

[This poem was a great favorite with Dr. Guthrie, the great Edinburgh preacher, and often quoted by him.]

I live for those that love me,
For those I know are true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And waits my spirit too;
For all human ties that bind me,
For the task my God assigned me,
For the bright hopes yet to find me,
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story
Who've battled for my sake;
The patriot crowned with glory,
The martyr at the stake:
Bards, prophets, heroes, sages—
The noble of all ages,
Whose deeds crowd history's pages,
And time's great volume make.

I live to hold communion
With all that is divine,
To feel there is a union
'Twixt nature's heart and mine:
To profit by affliction,
Reap truths from fields of fiction,
Grow wiser from conviction
And fulfill God's grand design.

I live to hail that season,
By gifted ones foretold,
When men shall live by reason,
And not alone for gold:
When man to man united,
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted
As Eden was of old.

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true;
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too:
For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

NEW ENGLAND CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

REPORT OF THE FIFTH ANNUAL MEETING OPPOSED TO SECRET SOCIETIES.—INTERESTING REPORT BY THE SECRETARY.

No great reform was ever carried forward to victory except through a sifting process; and the more important the cause in its relations to the church and humanity, the more necessity for this work of separation. So there was abundant cause for exultation, but none for downheartedness, that the faithful few who met in Wesleyan Hall on the evening of Tuesday, Dec. 1, like the early Abolitionists, were conspicuous for quality rather than quantity.

President Foster's opening address was all we have learned to expect when he is on the platform—scholarly and full of historical research, but radical and always hewing to the line. He showed with great clearness the family connection, through Masonry, between the Jesuits and the A. P. A. Secretary Stoddard followed with an address on "Masonic Mysteries." The questions asked by the audience at the close showed a deep and intelligent interest in the subject. Bro. Curtis, a seceded Mason, testified that he had been through all the ceremonies described.

The morning session on the next day began with the usual devotional exercises, which were followed by the reading of reports for the past year, showing steady progress in the work. One of the disappointments of the convention was the absence of Dea. George Morse, of Putnam, caused by the death of his son in California. Much sympathy was expressed for Bro. Morse, and with one consent the convention united in prayer that he might have all divine comfort in this great affliction.

The Busy People's meeting held at the noon hour, led by Rev. John G. Short, was well attended, and was in some respects the most interesting part of the convention. Bro. Short related his own experience in the Masonic lodge, particularly when attending a lodge banquet, to see an elderly minister, who was Grand Chaplain, smoking with the rest, listening with apparent pleasure to objectionable conversation, and mixed up with men who were not Christians. The disgust inspired by such a spectacle decided him to come out. It was necessary, he said, that the truth should be an offence. We must not expect that the crowd outside will say "amen" to us. But truth is eternal. He would not exchange the chance he had to-day to be true to God for the place of an archangel.

He was followed by Rev. Mr. Sears of Hyde Park, who spoke of the seventeen to twenty-five lodges in a single place, when the church could scarcely muster from five to a dozen men at its weekly prayer meeting. This is the reason why women have to be pushed to the front to do the work the men ought to do. But even they are organizing into lodges; and if the growth of the lodge power is not checked the time will come when we shall have neither men nor women in our churches.

Bro. Sears alluded to the oath in the Knight Templar's degree, and the drinking of wine from a human skull, at which a Mason in the audience excitedly jumped up and denied the statement as false. Inquiry soon elicited the fact that he had never taken but three degrees, and of course knew nothing of anything beyond. He told a story of his Masonic charity to a lodge brother sick of cholera on board a vessel in which he was coming home from California. He stated that about a hundred of the passengers in the steerage were ill, but according to his own account his charity extended only to the one he knew to be a brother Mason. When Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard put to him a few direct questions, whether he had taken such and such an oath, or submitted to certain ceremonies, he became very angry and abusive, and refused to answer, thus tacitly admitting, in a way that carried conviction to every intelligent mind, that the charges were true.

Among other things this would-be defender of Masonry asserted that the order was founded by King Solomon, to which Bro. Messenger, a seceding Mason, wittily replied that this was only another evidence that Masonry was from the devil. Solomon was an old backslider; and if it was true that he started Masonry, this fact in itself was sufficient to account for the heathenism found in the order.

Said Rev. D. B. Gunn: "I have been watching secret societies for forty years, and I have found that as soon as a church member joins the lodge he loses his spirituality. Romanism is not one-hundredth part so much in the way of the Protestant church as is Masonry." He mentioned a church he knew with 350 members and only two young men among them. There were thirty lodges in the place to five churches.

Rev. Mr. Hastings then gave his testimony. When an Odd-fellow, he was reproached for staying away from the lodge to attend the church prayer meetings. He was drawn into Masonry as a kind of decoy duck, in the hope—which was not disappointed—that his influence as a minister would be powerful to bring in others.

Bro. Trueblood, secretary of the Peace and Arbitration Society, said he had never had any inside experience of the lodge, and could not see how any man who respected himself could so sell out his liberty and his manhood. He had a Quaker friend who thought he would try the Masons, but came home the sickest man ever seen. He had noticed that men of broken-down and questionable character were in the lodges. He knew one case in which the chaplain was the lowest man in the community. He never went to church, his mouth was always filled with blasphemy, yet he prayed over the "good Christian men" who went into the lodge. He cited other instances showing the evil influence of Masonry on religion and morals.

Mrs. E. Trask Hill answered very effectually the Masonic brother who made such boast of his lodge charity, by relating how she herself, when a young mother with three small children, went to the help of a poor Irish Roman Catholic family sick of the small-pox and deserted by all their neighbors. Later she took care of a child sick with malignant diphtheria. But it was not Masonry, it was Christianity that was the impelling force. She had been brought up in an atmosphere of reform. Her father had to give up his church because of his anti-slavery views. She knew what it was to be ostracised because she stood for the truth. But it had only brought her up higher; and she wished to say to all engaged in the anti-secret cause, keep right on. How much better to have the hand of Christ than of a Mason or an Odd-fellow when you come to cross the river.

Mrs. L. M. Hoyt related how in her own town of Ware two men applied for the vacant position of high school teacher. The one who gained the position was far less competent; but, as he personally admitted to her, he was a Mason and all the members of the school board were Masons; so that, to use his own expression, he "took the cake and the other man had to hunt a hole somewhere else." Thus the interests of the schools were sacrificed through Masonic favoritism.

"Mother Prindle," of the Florence Crittenton Mission, New York, gave a most interesting address, filled with her own warm, loving personality. While she could not be a Mason if she would, and would not if she could, she knew enough about the organization to be impressed with its Christless character. She cited instances of its ruinous effect on the Christian character of men who joined it. The most that she knew about Masonry was what the Lord had taught her. She made an earnest plea that anti-secret work be carried on in the spirit of love. It was her only reliance in the rescue work in which she had been engaged for eighteen years.

Rev. Lucien Kimball followed her with an eloquent address on not allowing the world to cut the pattern of our social life for us. When ministers and saloon men were in the Masonic lodge together it was not strange that radical prohibition was little preached. In one place he was told that the W. C. T. U. was dead because most of the women were interested in the Relief Corps. Let us begin to cut our own pattern by taking it from consecrated Christian people and not from the outside world.

Rev. S. G. Shaw, of Cambridgeport, followed with an excellent address, in which he showed the radical difference between Masonry and the Gospel. The Gospel stands for that development and progress which is the law of nature. Masonry is a fossilized system that admits of no change. The Gospel stands for individual responsibility, while the secret of lodge barbarities and outrages is the irresponsibility of the members who think themselves safe in committing crime because the lodge stands behind them.

At the close of Bro. Shaw's address the unfinished business was taken up. The committee on nominations recommended the re-election of the old officers, and their report was unanimously approved.

The evening session opened with an address by Rev. S. McNaugher, who supplied the place on the program left vacant by the absence of Rev. H. H. George. It was an earnest appeal for Christ and his church against the lodge, which denies the one and traduces the other. He was followed by Pres. Chas. A. Blanchard, who made the speech of the evening. Dr. Blanchard's graceful oratory, keen logic and eloquent presentation of the truth wins for him delighted listeners wherever he speaks.

It made a fitting close to a convention second in interest to none which have yet been held. More and more our cause here in New England, under the wise and able leadership of Bro. Stoddard, is appealing to the minds and consciences of intelligent Christian people, and when this class is roused to its iniquity the doom of the lodge is sealed. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

ROMANISM VS. FREEMASONRY.

"I must write a letter on Masonry and Romanism," was the thought which came into my mind on reading an editorial in a recent number of the Cynosure, which described the late convention held under the auspices of the Romish church in the old historic town of Trent. Every school boy has heard of the celebrated Council of Trent, which began its sittings in 1546 and finished its labors in 1564 by the promulgation of the famous, or rather infamous, creed of Pope Pius IV., which is the standard authority for the religion of Rome from that time to the present. The Council of Trent was convened to crush the Reformation and to declare with infallible authority the faith of the Romish church; and the recent convention, held in the same old town, was convened to crush Freemasonry. At first sight this would seem to be very strange and singular. The doctrines of Masonry and the doctrines of the Reformation are as wide apart as the poles, while the doctrines of Masonry and those of the Romish church are as near alike as one pea is like another.

Freemasonry, as may be seen from "The Master's Carpet," is a revival of the "Ancient Mysteries," pure and simple; that is of the old pagan or sunworship practiced in secret among all the pagan nations from Egypt down to the fall of the Roman empire. The Hiram Abiff of the Master Mason's degree is simply the Osiris of Egypt, the Mithras of Persia, the Apollo of Greece, the Tammuz of the eighth chapter of Ezekiel and the Baal of Israel in the days of Ahab and Elijah. This fact the very best and highest authorities on Masonry take special pains to inculcate, and of course we are obliged to admit the truth of what they say, as they surely ought to know their own religious philosophy much better than outsiders. The "Traditions of Freemasonry" by Pierson, for instance, at page 240, most clearly informs us that "We readily recognize in Hiram Abiff the Osiris of the Egyptians, the Mithras of the Persians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, the Dionysius of the fraternity of the Artificers, and the Atys of the Phrygians, whose passion, death and resurrection were celebrated by these people respectively."

This is pure Masonic teaching, and it must be true, or nothing in Freemasonry is true. But is it on account of its pagan origin and pagan religion that the system of Rome to-day antagonizes with such vehemence the system of Freemasonry? Not at all. What is Romanism? It is paganism just as thoroughly and completely as Masonry is. Some good, honest, simple-hearted Christian people are exceedingly charitable towards the Romish system, and would try to persuade themselves and others that the Church of Rome is a branch of the Christian church, but it is just as much Christian as the Master Mason's degree. Listen: "Hail, holy queen, Mother of Mercy, our life, our sweetness and our hope! to thee do we fly, poor banished sons of Eve, to thee do we send up our sighs, mournings and weepings in this vale of tears. Turn then, most gracious advocate, thine eyes of mercy toward us," etc. This, one of the most popular and most venerated prayers of the Romish church, being addressed, as can be seen, to the Virgin Mary, and is based upon the teaching of the Council of Trent and the authority of an infallible pope. But is this prayer a Christian prayer, or does it bear the slightest approach to one? By no manner of means; it is simply and purely and wholly anti-Christian, and bears no more resemblance to a Christian prayer or to the truth of Christianity than a base counterfeit dollar does to the genuine coin.

Hail, holy queen! The Virgin Mary is enthroned by the Council of Trent, and hence by the Romish church at large, as "the queen of heaven." Venus was the queen of heaven in pagan worship; and the Virgin Mary has merely taken her place as Hiram in Masonry has taken the place of Osiris or Baal. But who is king if Mary is queen? The Lord Jesus is God's king—"King of kings and Lord of lords," and the glorified church is his bride, at the first resurrection, and therefore the true and only queen; so, then, where does Mary come in? Simply as the successor of Venus in the Rome-pagan of to-day; no more, no less.

Mother of Mercy. What a blasphemous title this is to be applied to any human being. God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, is "the Father of mercies and the God of all comfort" (2 Cor. 1:3), and "his glory will he not give to another, neither his praise to graven images." (Isa. 42:8.) Masonry ignores and rejects altogether the very name of the Lord Jesus, while Romanism, though pretending to honor Christ in some small way at least, yet sets up Mary as the real Saviour, and exalts her to a glory equal to that of the God-head. Now which, think you, is worse, Freemasonry or Romanism? Both are purely pagan.

"Our life." Is this true? Is Mary the life of the world or the life of any one, even of herself? The Lord Jesus says, "I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." (John 14:6.) "In Him was life" (John 1:4), and not in Mary; and the apostle expressly affirms that "Christ is our life" (Col. 3:4), and hence, of course, the conclusion is inevitable that either the Romish church, with its infallible pope, or the Apostle Paul must be wrong. Popery says Mary is our life—the Apostle Paul by the Holy Spirit declares that "Christ is our life; while the Virgin Mary herself flatly contradicts the teaching of Rome when she exclaimed, "My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour." (Luke. 1:46, 47.) She was a human being of course, and, like all the race of mankind, was dead, having no life in her, and was saved just as Paul or John or Peter was saved, or just as we are saved to-day—by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Christ is the central figure in Christianity; Mary is the central figure of Romanism and Hiram Abiff is the central figure of Freemasonry; and yet Freemasonry and Romanism are at war the one with the other.

But what are these two pagan systems contending so earnestly for? For "the faith once delivered to the saints?" No, by no means; they are simply contending for power—power in this country and power over in Europe, and hence the recent convention at Trent and its possible results here in the United States.

"Our hope." And last of all is Mary, in any sense whatever, our hope? If she is, then the Apostle Paul must have been entirely wrong, for he expressly declares that Christ is the "hope of glory." (Col. 1:27.) In the New Testament the word "hope" is generally connected with the first resurrection, at the second coming of Christ, when the church shall be exalted to "the divine nature" (2 Peter 1:4), and when the saints shall be glorified and bear the very likeness of our risen Lord.

The Virgin Mary will doubtless share in that glory with us, and at the same time as we do, but she is not and she cannot, in any sense whatever, be "our hope." By looking carefully through the Epistles the Christian will no doubt be greatly rejoiced to find that the order is always, with only one exception, faith, love, hope. "Faith" to begin with—faith in Christ; then "love," the guiding principle of the Christian life, and "hope," the end of the warfare and the walk. Not when one dies and goes to heaven, but when the church randsomed from death and redeemed from the power of the grave" (Hos. 14:13) shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air and be made a partaker of his glory. No; the Virgin Mary is not our hope any more than she is our life, or the mother of mercy, and it is nothing short of idolatry to address her as in the above prayer. Masonry and Romanism both reject Christ; the one substituting a pagan the representative of God and the other the representative of a pagan goddess; but they are quarreling as to which of the two shall be supreme. More on this subject later on. E. RONAYNE.

SECRET SOCIETIES VS. THE REPUBLIC.

PART OF AN ADDRESS BEFORE THE PENNSYLVANIA ANTI SECRET CONVENTION AT OAKS, WEDNESDAY EVENING, NOV. 18, 1896, BY REV. J. C. M'FEETERS, OF PHILADELPHIA.

Secret societies are against the republic not only because they are inimical to good government, but

Second, because the hideous obligations vitiates conscience, which inevitably leads to the abuse of power. The obligations tend to pernicious partiality. When a secret order man finds himself in a government position, he is likely also to find himself under conflicting oaths. His first obligation is to the lodge. That binds him to use his powers first and chiefly for Masons; others may reap the fruits of his administration; but Masons first. Do you believe that the man can be safely entrusted with power in a civil office, who kneeling on bended knee, with hands on the Holy Bible, swears under the most dreadful imprecations that he will aid and assist a companion when engaged in any difficulty, and espouse his cause so far as to extricate him from the same if within his powers, if he be right or wrong?

This is a part of the obligation of the Royal Arch Mason to his brothers of the lodge. How does this harmonize with the obligation of the other oath requiring a just and impartial administration of office? How does it correspond with the spirit of free institutions in this republic?

Thirdly, secret societies are inimical to good government, because they pervert justice in our courts. Masons of certain degrees are sworn to keep inviolate the secrets of companions, murder and treason excepted; and all in the Royal Arch degree and above, make no exception, no, not even of murder and treason. How can a man under such a bond tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, according to the justice, when the jury, the counsel or the judge is held in the chains of lodge oaths?

Our fair republic, highly favored in providence and greatly distinguished by our Divine Saviour, is beleagured by many dangers; but none of them more alarming than the rock under the surface of our tranquil sea, oath-bound secrecy, against which our ship may strike. God grant that she may be guided safely by pilots who will keep their eye upon the North Star of truth, the cynosure of fixed and eternal principles.

You, the friends of liberty and right, are leading in a holy cause. Many discouragements lie in your way. No greater discouragement than that coming from many voices, saying, you are uncharitable in your judgment and wrong in your conclusions, for you are not acquainted with the system of secrecy. In all your embarrassments look up to Jesus Christ; observe his instructions and his luminous life, and follow that; leading this nation into light by following Jesus, heedless of the opposing voices.

The story has been told of a colonel who had been ordered to storm a fort, that he laid his plans for a night attack. The march lay through a dense woods and up the slope of a mountain. He chose an astronomer to lead the way. The guide fixed his eye upon a star and pursued his course without variation. Some of the officers said he was leading out of the way. He insisted that he was right. They followed. The fort was soon seen with its dark, frowning battlements on the hill. The charge was made, and the victory won. After the battle search was made for the guide. He was found mortally wounded. Lifting up his head he said to the Colonel as he stooped over him, "Was I not right?" Lead this world on through the woods into that decisive conflict which will give the nations all to Jesus. Lead on, ye who are in the front, and to whom the trust has been committed; lead with your gaze fixed on the Polar Star of truth, the Lord Jesus Christ, and when you fall in the death hour you can look up into the face of friends and countrymen and say with holy satisfaction, "Did we not lead right?"

SECRET LODGE OATHS.

ADDRESS BY REV. ALLEN M. FRETZ, OF SOUDERTON, PA., BEFORE THE STATE ANTI SECRET CONVENTION AT OAKS, PA, THURSDAY, NOV. 19, 1896.

In our work of reform and opposition to existing evils, we find in each one are different phases of that evil. Some are worse than others and demand the reformer's special attention. It is only when we properly recognize this distinction between evils that we can intelligently oppose them. We cannot treat moral subjects on the principle of gain or loss. An evil will still be an evil, though in its general makeup it may contain some good qualities, which, mathematically or philosophically considered, may over-balance the evil. A man when he steals five dollars from a rich man's drawer is a thief; and he is a thief no less when he, to over-balance his crime, contributes $5,000 to charitable purposes.

The lodge system being an evil in principle, with various evil features, is no less an evil because it has a few apparent commendable features. Yea, even if the system should have an over-abundance of good qualities, we must still consider it an evil because of the selfish, un-Christian principles in its makeup. So to distinguish an evil from a good we must analyze it and take note of its pernicious qualities. I want to say with emphasis, one of the pernicious phases of the lodge system are the oaths or obligations which they impose.

In the treatment of this subject my object is not so much to antagonize any single society as the system,—the system which requires oaths, obligations, solemn promises, with severe penalties ever to conceal and never to reveal what, at the time of the obligations, is as yet hidden in mysterious darkness. Any profane oath is un-Christian according to the teaching of the New Testament. The Jews seemed to have been notoriously guilty of swearing—swearing by heaven, earth, Jerusalem, the temple, the altar, different parts of the body, etc., which indeed may not seem so very strange to those who adhere to the false theory that Freemasonry with its vile oaths and blood-curdling penalties antedate the Christian era, yea, takes its origin in the time of Solomon.

When Christ came, even in his very first recorded public teaching, Matt. 5, he instituted and taught the new doctrine. Not only did he lay the grand anti-secrecy principle as one of the fundamental principles of the doctrine and conduct for his followers in the figures of "salt of the earth" and "light of the world," but in particular and very plainly the anti-oath principle, when he says: "Again ye have heard" (Here read Matt. 5: 33 37). And again he repeats the same principle in his woes upon the scribes and Pharisees (Matt. 23: 16 22).

The apostle James, seeing these evils still existing and creeping into the church, writes with much emphasis: "But above all things," etc. (James 5:12). It seems clear to my mind from these references that all oaths are made in violation of the doctrine of Christ. And while we personally and conscientiously believe this of all oaths, still are willing to give freedom of conscience in this matter to those who may differ from us. What shall we say of extra-judicial oaths—oaths administered, solemn obligations required, with hideous penalties imposed, outside of the state and the church, in dens of darkness, behind tylered doors, by a conclave of similarly foresworn individuals whose main enjoinder, contrary to that of telling "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth," is to conceal and never to reveal the truth, the whole truth and all about the truth.

How does this correspond with the teaching of Jesus? The Freemason who applied for church membership found the principle of opposition to secret societies in reading our church constitution and discipline, which I had given to him, not a direct declaration to that effect, but in the article which reads: "Resolved, that we do not approve of taking judicial oaths." Reference, Matt. 5, 33; James 5: 12. While I am speaking to many whose views may accord with mine in the application of Christ's teaching to the oath in general, there are, no doubt, too many present who hold more restricted views, and apply the teachings only to extra-judicial oaths, thus covering lodge obligations.

In this we then agree; but allow me just in passing to say one word to such. It is this: To this concession of the church in the New Testament teaching concerning the oath we must credit to a great extent the prevalent intermingling of the church and the lodge. But as to extra-judicial oaths, in which we then all agree, it is generally conceded that it is not the oath for the oath's sake that influences to the keeping or the not keeping of the obligations. It is the penalty or penalties that are attendant upon the lodge oath that makes its votaries thus blight their consciences, smother their wills and do whatsoever they are bidden without asking why. The importance of secret keeping, though it may violate everything civil or religious, seems to be the groundwork and reason for the lodge oath.

These oaths are a deception and imposition on those uninformed as to the true nature of an oath. This is true no doubt both of those administering and of those taking the oath. They are made to believe that the oaths they are taking are of the most binding nature, and to increase this impression terrible penalties are appended to the oaths. For example, at a certain point in the ridiculously initiatory performance the candidate may be stripped, blindfolded, led up stairways and through divers rooms, branded on the left breast near the heart, "the hissing of the burning flesh and the pain of the operation reminding him of the serpent's bite." Having swords drawn across his bowels, breast and throat, he is informed "this signifies that your throat will be cut from ear to ear and your tongue torn out by the roots; that your heart will be cut out, burned to ashes and thrown to the four winds of earth; that your bowels will be cut open, torn out, and the fowls of the air devour them; your body will be sunk to low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice every twenty-four hours, if ever you divulge or reveal the whole or any part of the signs, words or tokens. Drinking a libation from a human skull he imprecates upon his own soul the punishment due to the one out of whose skull he drinks.

While these are awfully awful and vile penalties, but the climax of licentiousness may be seen in an oath as the following in the Master Mason's degree of Masonry: Furthermore, do I promise and swear that I will not violate the chastity of a Master Mason's wife, mother, sister or daughter, I knowing them to be such, nor suffer it to be done by others if in my power to prevent it." This oath, though upon its face it may have the smile of chastity, shows to us the climax of licentiousness. It is absolutely the vilest, the most abominable, wicked and ungentlemanly. The man who desires to take such an oath must have lust festering in his soul, and needs an oath to protect a certain class. He swears that he is a libertine, and then swears that he will have his throat cut across, etc., to remain a libertine.

And now in conclusion: Suppose, for example, that a church should be organized, at the door of which stood men with drawn swords, and of which no person could become a member unless he first consented on bended knee to take an oath, of the purport of which he knew, and could know, nothing until it was administered to him sentence after sentence while in a helpless condition. How long would such a church be tolerated in the community?

Suppose, also, that it limited its membership to persons of one sex, excluding the young, the aged, the penniless and the crippled; taking in only the able-bodied and prosperous, who were decked with barbaric trappings and marched around for public exhibition on gala days; how long would such a church be tolerated in the land? Would not its ostentatious secrecy be in itself an evidence that there was something radically wrong in its conception.

Anon now in conclusion let me quote from the writings of H. L. Hastings, whom I regard as a thoroughly spiritual man; a man of God who fearlessly stands for truth and right, and in opposition to all that savors of darkness and error:

The Church of Christ is doing her work in the world. There are no obligations of secrecy, no concealments, no darkened rooms nor guarded doors to hide the work she does. She feeds the hungry, she clothes the naked, she ministers to the sick, she lifts up the bowed down, she instructs the erring, she guides the perplexed, she warns the unruly, she comforts the mourner, she founds hospitals and colleges and academies and schools, she promotes reforms, she testifies against evils, she produces and disseminates wholesome literature, she scatters light and truth on every hand. Her work is open, and it shows for itself what she has done and why she does it. As compared with this, what have votaries of secretism to exhibit? Gaudy paraphernalia, pompous processions, medieval uniforms, magnificent buildings from which the public are rigorously excluded, midnight conclaves, secret grips, mysterious passwords, and a jumble of philanthropy, piety and profanity, all of which is guarded by oaths and obligations and penalties so shocking and absurd that their revelation invariably puts their votaries in a rage; and this is all. Or, if there is anything more than this, it is craft and guile, the plotting of secret mischief and the wielding of power by irresponsible despots, for objects which cannot bear the light of day.

Let Christian men maintain their integrity and independence; let them stand for God though they stand alone. If worldings will be bound together like tares "in bundles to be burned," let Christians spurn the unholy associations and stand separate from sin, waiting for the great day of the Lord.

FREEMASONRY IS DEVIL WORSHIP.

The criticism of the writer in the Contemporary Review is very long and has much in it that is highly interesting to the Christian. It looks like a "give away" on the part of Masonry, as if the Anti-masonic writers criticised had made public much that ought to be known concerning the deeper villainies and blasphemy of Freemasonry. The critic seems to realize somehow that he has the Romish church on his, the Masonic, side. He closes his long article with the following words: "Without the support of Rome the Anti-masonic movement must die of the weight of its own fables; and, when the pockets of the faithful have been exploited a little longer, its literature will sink into the limbo of forgotten frauds, where lie James II.'s warming pan, the legend of Pope Joan and the history of Pulmanasar, I think no lover of truth, even though he be a Catholic, will refuse to say with me, 'So mote it be.'"

But Masonry says: "The universe is the Temple of the Deity whom we serve." "Sickel's Monitor," page 62. If Freemasonry ever accomplishes its purpose, and its god reigns triumphant over the universe, then Anti-masonry will die. Which is equivalent to saying that Anti-masonry will never die so long as Freemasonry and the true and living God exists.

There is a drunken harlot in the world and the devil has got her; she "looks like a lamb," but there are those that "will hate her, and will make her desolate and naked, and will eat her flesh, and will burn her up with fire. For God hath put it into their hearts to do his will, even to do his purpose." That harlot is not Freemasonry, for Freemasonry does not look like a lamb.

It is also written in the decrees of God: "These have one mind, and they give their power and authority to the beast. These will make war with the lamb, and the lamb will overcome them; because he is Lord of lords and King of kings, and they who are with him are called and chosen and faithful." The end of this age in the history of the world will come. He who has declared it says, "Yea, I come quickly." "Amen; come, Lord Jesus."

MASONRY SUPPLANTING THE CHURCH.

As Winfield correspondent of the Richfield Springs, N. Y., Mercury says the funeral of John M. Thomas was held in West Winfield, Dec. 2, 1896, and according to request of the deceased there were no services except the solemn and imposing burial of the F. and A. M. lodge, which was rendered by the Master of No. 581." The solemnities were conducted by five lodges or their representatives from as many places.

It has not been usual to omit Christian services at Masonic burials, but this is the tendency of the times and is destined to become the common practice of the future. When Masons say Masonry is good enough religion for them, we may think it is defiance or boastfulness and does not express their real sentiments; but when they request on their death-beds, the most solemn occasion, that their funerals shall be conducted with Masonic or pagan ceremonies exclusively, including circumambulation with the sun, their god, we must acknowledge their sincerity and faith in their religion. It is an unmistakable expression of preference and abjuration of Christianity, and if Christ is the sole way to salvation they are fated for perdition. They are entrusting themselves to a religion that wars against Christ, the Bible and the First and every other Commandment. This is the effect of Masonic teaching, and the result must increase with time in an accelerated degree. The entering wedge is working and the lodge is beginning to prevail.

Some think the lodge is not injuring the church, but the former is seducing and withdrawing the men of means, and women and the poor are left for the latter. The remaining lodge men divide or withhold contributions; and impoverished, the church ministers are enticed into the lodge, and ever after handicap and conduct the churches in the interests of the rival institution. Women may enter the churches and sustain or increase membership, and rich men may stay to control or use it to promote their interest or influence in society, business or politics in the same way that they join a multitude of secret societies. The church is degraded and scandalized by presence and acts of men who are corrupted and demoralized by evil teaching, practices and associates, and the result is moral and financial weakness and decay. The church is placed in a fit state for substitution and devil worship. In 1,700 Congregational churches there was no increase of membership by confession of faith in 1896.

A STAR.

WHERE IS YOUR BOY TO-NIGHT?

"A large percentage of the American boys, between the ages of six and fourteen years, are allowed to loaf at will on the streets day or night." A gentleman made the above remark to me, and asked me what effect such conditions would have upon future citizenship. The effect is not hard to conjecture. As the homes of a nation are, so the national life will be. A nation is the aggregation of families. Happy, virtuous families will make a happy, prosperous nation. If the American boys are not kept under the restraints and wholesome influences of righteous homes, it will inevitably jeopardize the welfare of the country. If there is anarchy and confusion in the home life it will lead to lawlessness in the state.

Nothing is worse for the boy than to be given his own way in all things. The parent who permits the child to do as he pleases under all circumstances is that child's worst enemy. In later years he is sure to reap the bitter harvest from the seed he has sown, and he need not be surprised if the boy drifts into a life of dissipation and shame, or lands in the prison cell or upon the scaffold.

The parent should recognize but one standard of morality for both the boy and the girl. He would not think of permitting his daughter to roam the streets at will, either day or night, and mingle with bad associates. By what law of right does he permit the boy to do so? Where is your boy to-night?—Simpson Ely in the Standard.

—A New York paper says: "The failure of Louis Schinn, baker, of No. 91 Sixth Ave., who killed himself with carbolic acid in Central Park last Tuesday, to pay an assessment of $1.75, saved the Knights of Honor, of which he was a member, $1,000. The policy was found in his pocket at the Morgue."

REFORM NEWS.

THE WORK AROUND PITTSBURGH.

ON ALLEGHENY VALLEY TRAIN,
Tuesday, Dec., 15, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—As our train winds its way up the valley amid these rock and timber-clad hills I will occupy the time telling of my recent past. Attendance at the prayer meeting in the Second U. P. church, Washington, Pa., revealed the fact that this people are awake to the missionary needs of their church. The contributions of this church during the past year amounted to over $46 per member. The pastor, Rev. J. A. Alexander, will read the Cynosure and arrange for your agent to address his people. A warm friend was found in Rev. C. B. Lindtwed, pastor of the Lutheran church in that city. He will read the Cynosure and tell his people of the snare set for them in the secret lodges.

The address given by President Blanchard in Allegheny Friday evening could not fail to carry conviction. His subject, "The Holy Spirit and the Lodge Spirit," was well chosen. It is only the Holy Spirit that can drive out the lodge spirit. How much all the reform workers need his presence and help to accomplish effective work. It is a privilege to thus meet and hear one who stands in the front for Christ and reform. The arrangement for Sabbath did not develop as expected. For good reasons it seemed best to defer meetings near Ingleside until a later date.

I went to New Alexandria, Pa. Here I met a number of wife's relatives and friends, who were willing to recognize me as a relative and friend. John R. Steele, among other good things, has a fine horse and buggy. He agreed to take me around if I would teach his Sabbath-school class. This arrangement was carried out. Mr. Steele likes our paper very much, and paid that some of his friends might enjoy reading it. Rev. R.J. Gault gives much evidence of being a brother of the Cynosure editor. Our sympathy and regard seemed mutual. The return of himself and wife from their trip to the West was welcomed by his loving congregation. I was permitted to enjoy their kind hospitality and listen to the stirring reform missionary sermon preached on Sabbath. The collection taken for foreign missionary work at the close amounted to $118.

We were informed that arrangements were made for President Blanchard to speak in Miller's Hall, New Alexandria, last evening. My appointments this way made it necessary for me to cut short this exceedingly pleasant visit and hasten on. Whatever there is small about the Allegheny Valley R. R., it certainly is not its transportation charges. They exceed anything I have recently come across. If the people are as poor as much of the country through which we pass, the people better give their property to the railroad company if they will agree to carry them to a better place.

DEC. 17th.—Reaching Penfield I was met at the train by our tried friend, David Horning, and Rev. J. J. Zahniser, pastor of the Free Methodist church. My coming had been well advertised. A goodly company gathered in the town hall at the appointed hour. Rev. Hill, of Rock Dale Mills, was assisting Rev. Caldwell, pastor of the Presbyterian church, in special meetings. He expresses his sympathy with the opposition to the lodge. Both pastors subscribed for the Cynosure. Bro. Zahniser is an earnest worker. He is building a church at Brookville, and brought word from our highly esteemed brother, A. Bonnet, of that place,

Several Cynosures were planted here. The people seemed considerably stirred. We entered an office and found a man who said, in response to to my question that he ought to be a Christian but was not, "tell a young man what a good thing the lodge was." He said, "persons were often fooled by those who came along professing to be Christians, but that lodgemen were never thus fooled, as they could tell one another by grips," etc. I explained to the young man that when one joined the lodge he placed himself in a position where he was more likely to be fooled than outside. He could not know of the character of the lodge brother traveling for help. He would feel placed under obligation to give to unworthy persons who would use the lodge in looking for help. I gave an instance where this had been done. The lodge advocate left. The young man subscribed for the Cynosure.

At Du Bois I met Rev. Glass, the Free Methodist pastor, and a Bro. Bliss. Both expressed interest and a wish for lectures. The latter subscribed for the Cynosure. The pastor of the German Baptist Brethren church met me as I stepped from the train at Rockton and accompanied me to his home, where I now write. The attendance at the lecture I gave here last eve was more than expected.

I may speak to-morrow night also. Saturday eve and Sabbath I am announced to speak in the United Brethren church near Wallaceton. Mrs. Ella Reidy, who spoke with such telling effect at the Allegheny convention, is arranging these meetings.

I plan to reach Johnstown and other points south, later. Must now go to look for Cynosure subscribers. W. B. STODDARD.

BRO. WILLIAMS AT SEATTLE.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR THE CONVENTION.

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 11, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Last Monday at 1 P. M. we left Portland for this city to work up and hold a convention. At Castle Rock we were delayed three hours by a landslide. When we got to Tacoma we found that a washout above Puyallup compelled us to transfer to the steamer for Seattle. We boarded the Flyer, landing at this city near midnight.

We put up at the Hotel Diller, and spent a part of next day hunting quarters for our six weeks' stay. We are now snugly housed at room 51, Hotel York, where our friends may address us for the next few weeks.

On Wednesday I called on Rev. Alexander Beers of the Free Methodist church, Rev. M. L. Larson, Swedish Lutheran church, Rev. W. M. Howie, United Presbyterian, and tried to find Rev. P. J. McDonald of the Reformed Prebyterians, but failed. We arranged for a preliminary meeting at Rev. W. M. Howie's study for Friday at 2:30 P. M. to plan for the convention. In writing out invitations to the pastors, I found one who had succeeded me on a field of labor in Southern Ohio. I mentioned the fact to him. In his answer he said; "I am the identical fellow, and would like to see you, but find it inconvenient to meet you Friday at Rev. W. M. Howie's study. If I should come I would be a useless appendage, for I am a member of the clan you seek to obliterate."

At the preliminary meeting Friday afternoon, though it was raining like it does sometimes here on Puget Sound, we had more present than I anticipated. There were nine ministers and three laymen, a lucky number to begin with. Bro. Howie called the meeting to order; Treasurer Larson led in prayer.

Jan. 18th and 19th was fixed as the time for holding the convention. The following committees were elected. On program, Revs. P. B. Williams, W. M. Howie and James I. Frazier. On place of meeting, Revs. M. L. Larson and M. H. Nichols. On advertising and finance, Revs. E. L. Smith, Alexander Beers and Mr. Glasgow. On entertainment, Revs. P. J. McDonald and Frazier.

The ministers present represented the following denominations: United Presbyterian, Reformed Presbyterian, Swedish Lutheran, English Lutheran, Free Methodist and United Brethren. There is an effort on foot to secure the largest and best hall in the city for the convention. I am already invited to speak in the Swedish Lutheran, United and Reformed Presbyterian and both of the Free Methodist churches before the convention.

We must make this the most successful convention of any thus far on the coast. I believe we will. Let every friend of the cause bend their energies to this effect. If any can not come, send a hand. Send some help to rent the building in which the meeting must be held. Remember there will be some expense connected with the work, and you can help. P. B. WILLIAMS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

INTERFERENCE IN CUBAN MATTERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 16, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. Dr. Talmage opened the Senate with prayer yesterday. It was an eloquent invocation for divine blessing on the national law-makers and on the people of the entire country.

The conservatism which I lately expressed the opinion would characterize the final action of Congress in dealing with Cuban matters has not been characteristic of the resolutions offered and the remarks made in both House and Senate during the last few days, but, fortunately for the country, none of these resolutions can be acted upon unless reported from the foreign committees of the respective branches of Congress, and a majority of both committees are men of wide experience, who fully realize the gravity of the situation and who will not provoke war just to satisfy the clamor of hot-headed people who mean well but who often speak and act on the spur of the moment.

War is a horrible thing at best, and those people who are demanding that Congress shall virtually compel the President to act in behalf of Cuba are demanding war, for everyone who knows the existing situation knows that is bound to be the result of any precipitate action on the part of this government.

Last Sabbath was observed in all the Presbyterian churches of Washington as Foreign Mission day. Among the out of town speakers were Miss Fannie Nelson, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Board of Philadelphia; Rev. J. M. Alexander, for thirty years a missionary at Allahabad; Rev. W. S. Bannerman, recently returned from Africa; Rev. V. D. Collins, who talked about missionary work in Hawaii; Rev. Arthur J. Brown, secretary of the Foreign Board of Missions of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. J. R. Davis, of New York. Monday evening a Foreign Missionary mass meeting, presided over by Vice-president Stevenson, was held in the New York Avenue church, at which a letter was read from Isabella Bird Bishop, who is now in Corea, showing the urgent need of the immediate extension of the missionary work in that country.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS

ADDRESSED TO THE PENNSYLVANIA CONVENTION, AT OAKS, NOV. 18, 19.

REV. J. S. MOYER, NOV. 6, CENTER VALLEY, PA.—I would be glad to be with you; but as I made a trip to Kansas and only returned a few days ago, I cannot well leave home again.

REV. O. S. KRIEBEL OF THE PERKIOMEN SEMINARY, NOV. 19, PENNSBURG, PA.—I hope and pray that you may have a rousing convention with fruits commensurate with the greatness of the cause.

MICHAEL ZUG, NOV. 10, LEBANON, PA.—I like the Christian Cynosure quite well. I read all it contains. I was always opposed to the lodge. And to be consistant, I shall never vote for any candidate who is a member of a secret order. I would much enjoy attending the convention, but the distance is too far.

PROF. R. L. PARK, Nov. 17, '96, EAST STROUDSBURG, PA.—I regret very much that my work keeps me from enjoying the conference in person and adding my testimony against the "works of darkness." I have always thought and felt that the secret lodge system was a crime against the state, an enemy to the Church of Christ and the home; and my convictions only grow deeper and stronger as I grow older and observe. We have more lodges here than churches, and I fear the scarcity of young and middle-aged men in our churches is due largely to the fact that the god of darkness has satisfied many of them with his sham and mock religion.

REV. E. CRONENWETT, Nov. 18, 1896, BUTLER, PA.—This answer to your card, though unintentionally late, will nevertheless reach you though it should not be at Oaks. Enclosed find a small remittance for the support of your work. The plane from which informed Christians in their fealty to Christ view and testify against the lodge system is above the standpoint from which the world views it, therefore unpalatable to the natural man and not popular, but is called for by fealty to Christ. St. Mark's church, of Butler, Pa., is on record as to its position, yet business considerations have influence with some of its members in this respect.

A. BONNET, Nov. 9, BROOKVILLE, PA.—Enclosed find $5 for the work of light against darkness. Recently I asked a minister if he was a Mason; he said he was. I said, do you as a minister of the Gospel not believe that the good Lord has made the plan of salvation complete and perfect? He said, Oh, yes. I said, what need have you for another religion? I have a little paper here, I said, handing him a Lodge Lamp with an account of Jackson's expulsion. It contains some of the principles of Masonry carried out. He replied, I am not responsible for the principles of Masonry. A year or so ago I put the same question to a minister who said there were certain morals in Masonry we can't practice in the church. I keep some Lodge Lamps and tracts on hand which I distribute here and there, now and then, and I feel the vindictiveness of the craft no matter where I go. But the Lord is my shepherd and I shall not want.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

THIRTEENTH LETTER.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Dec. 14, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The suit described in the last letter ended the battle between the temperance people and our lodge-saloonist, but the troubles of the latter were not over yet. God tells us in his Book that "The way of the transgressor is hard," and our poor deluded lodge-druggist has found and is still finding that these words are true.

The suspicion with regard to the origin of the fire was so strong that the insurance companies refused to pay the policies held by this druggist. He had his goods insured in two companies. After a long and costly effort one of the companies compromised with him and he realized a small sum from it; but the other company refused to pay one cent, and set detectives to work to secure evidence to defend themselves if the matter was pushed. Evidence sufficient to convict the guilty parties was soon secured. The druggist put his policy into the hands of another party, and this party entered suit.

Almost a year had passed in waiting and some of the witnesses had been discovered by the lodge and intimidated or bought off, and the lodge men were thoroughly drilled as to what they should testify, so that it was a great surprise to the insurance company to find men swearing to the very opposite to what they had told their detectives.

The hand of the lodge was so manifest that the most stupid could see it. In giving this false testimony some of the witnesses got badly mixed. The principal lodge witness got so tangled up that he swore that he was in three places at the same moment on the night of the fire.

Most of the evidence was taken here, but the trial came off at Des Moines. With all their false swearing, when the day of trial came the case looked so black for the lodge-druggist that he sent such a wail for help over the wires that many of our lodge men were moved to tears, and they went moping about and consulting in knots with such long faces that one would think that the "crack of doom" was about to be heard.

Threats were freely indulged in with regard to the principal witness for the insurance company, and the leading lodge man and Mason in town was heard to say that this person would never come back to Blanchard. And the fact is that he never has returned. Through the advice of friends he went where he is probably safe from lodge violence at present, and he promises in the near future to return to Blanchard and defy those who have threatened him.

In answer to the wail that came over the wires the lodgemen sent four of their number to defend the character of their "frater." The decision of the court was in the nature of a compromise, but the insurance company appealed it, and so far as we know, that is the condition matters are in at present; but if the company had accepted the decision our lodgeman could do little more than pay his expenses.

This decision is to be accounted for from the fact that in this suit it was the lodge against the lodge. When matters come in this shape we can some times get justice. But there is usually a pull on one side or the other, and in this case the pull was decidedly on the side of our druggist, for his home lodge stood by him and sent their best men to defend him, and no doubt the "grand hailing sign" was more than once given.

The main result of the trial has been that it fastened the responsibility for the fire where it belonged, on the lodge. Everyone now has a moral conviction who planned the fire, and who struck the match; and they also know if it wasn't for the lodge these men would be brought to justice. They may blasphemously talk about the "grand lodge above," but, if the crimes of the lodge in this world have anything to do with its existence in the next, it will be a "grand lodge below."

THE BEACON LIGHT.

SECOND ANNUAL MEETING.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., Dec. 14, 1896.
1231 West Dauphin St.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Friends of Brother and Sister Powers gathered at the Beacon Light, Dec. 5, '95, on the occasion of the re-opening and second annual meeting of their work. The house was well filled with representative people. The testimonies against the lodge system were very much to the point. Some that testified had been members of various lodges and could speak intelligently on the question.

Response by J. T. Wilbide was rendered in his own inimitable style, closing with a ringing testimony for the right over wrong. Pastor Bowman, Bros. J. C. Cassel and H. C. Cassel and McFarland gave strong testimony against the hydra-headed monster, "secretism." Prof. Bowman with his trained quartette enriched the occasion with sweet reform music.

Sister McCulla gave her experience with women lodges which was amusing and instructive, having belonged to three, but left them all in disgust. Also related a happy experience in trying to pass the Beacon Light a few days ago on her way to the drugstore to get some remedy for her headache, but instead stopped in the Beacon Light. After some conversation and prayer her pain was gone.

The Beacon Light is nicely located, and Brother and Sister Powers are eminently fitted for the very important work of shedding some light upon the brotherly love in the dark in this great city. The beautiful title, "City of Brotherly Love," was a thorn in the eyes of Satan. It is a fair name, once well deserved; but soon the slimy track of the old serpent was discovered, and to-day the city is honey-combed with these benighted institutions, and much of the love is behind tyled doors; once there, Satan manipulates at will, something on the order of the spider and fly. When they catch a minister of the Gospel they have a fat fly, and they have a good sucking time because he represents a whole church. These hell holes, the secret lodge, under the guise of religion, are the devil's kindergartens for the saloon and kindred vices. This is not only an assertion, but I can prove it by facts. May God bless the Beacon Light, and by his Spirit may many who have been led as an ox to the slaughter into these oath-bound clans, be led into the light and set free, is my humble prayer in Jesus name,

LETTER FROM FRANCES E. WILLARD.

CASTILE, N. Y., Dec. 11, 1896.

DEAR MOTHERS AND SISTERS OF AMERICA:—My heart is deeply stirred by the sacred ministry to the hapless little orphans of Armenia. Anything more piteous than their condition it would be impossible to conceive, and I pray with all my soul that our good and true people, White Ribboners and everybody else, may give their Christmas money, not to fill the stocking of a child tenderly sheltered in a Christian home, but to put stockings on the bleeding little feet of pitiful Christian children who have no roof but the sky, no bed but the ground and no food but the ground roots, except as we who are surrounded by every comfort reach out hands of help toward them and their heart-broken mothers, Let us ennoble and enlarge the hearts of our little ones by showing them how they can on this loved day carry out the Christ spirit. What we do must be done quickly. One dollar will feed, shelter and care for an orphan for a month. Twelve dollars for a whole year.

The above suggestion is equally appropriate for New Year's gifts. Send contributions for this object direct to Brown Bros. & Co., 59 Wall St., New York, marked: For the Orphan Fund of the National Armenian Relief Committee.

I sometimes fear lest I plead too long, so I will make this short, but none the less earnest, devoted and tender.

God bless you one and all and make your Christmas sweet in the happy homes that he has given you; and, better still, may it be hallowed by the knowledge down deep in your souls that you have touched the keys of power that are vibrating in stricken Armenia, so that forsaken little children have food, clothing and shelter from the winter's cold. Let us remember the words of the Master, how he said: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, ye did it unto me." Believe me ever with brightening hope,

Your Christian sister,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

HOW HIS SPINE WAS INJURED.

You who know the facts, know that my persecutors here were all Freemasons, and that the first attack upon me was drawn up and signed in a Freemason's lodge here in Woodlawn. We had to fight Freemasonry every step of the way, and secret society business, and we walloped them soundly. And the next fight will come from the same quarters. There are 4,500 secret lodges in Chicago, and only 450 churches.

I told you the other day of a good brother who came to me with his spine injured a good many years ago when he was being initiated. He would never tell me how his spine got injured. At last I said to him, "Bro. C., look here, there is something between you and God that you do not get the healing of the spine. Were you ever a Freemason?.

"Yes," he said, and his face flushed up.

"Well," I said, "Bro. C. I believe you got that when your were playing Hiram, or something of that kind."

"Well," he said, "I did. The fellows that had to hold the sheet were laughing and fooling, and when Hiram was murdered, and I was knocked over, they did not hold the blanket properly, and I went down, and hit myself on my spine, and I have suffered for thirty years for my fooling that night."

I said, "You remember it now? Do you repent?"

"Why," he said, "I have been repenting all the time."

"Well," I replied, "you have got to confess."

"Well," he said, "I confess now. I believe the trouble is I have not confessed. I confess before God that I have sinned."

Then he got the healing. I never heard any more about his back troubling him.—Leaves of Healing.

PAINTING ON GLASS.

How to Imitate Pietra Dura and Mosaic In a Simple Manner.

The materials required are ordinary oil colors, mirrorine medium, some artists' enamels, sable brushes and a good black for grounding. Japanese black lacquer covers better than most of them, and a tube of ecailline brown black is needed for outlining.

The glass must be thoroughly cleaned with soap and hot water and free from smears. Place the glass face downward over the design to be copied and put in the outlines with ecailline brown and mirrorine medium. A fine sable brush is used, and the lines must be solid and very equal in thickness. They will take some time to dry—perhaps two days. They must be dry and hard before the next painting is started; otherwise their sharpness and decision will be entirely marred and cannot be restored without great trouble.

The tone for coloring must be chosen from among those that are found in stone and marble, of which there is an infinite variety. Gray, red, yellow, green and blue abound and can be blended in every conceivable manner. In arranging the scheme of color to be carried out, it will be found that a combination of three or four tints well arranged and balanced will prove easier to manage and more satisfactory in result than a kaleidoscopic arrangement of a number of colors, which is apt to impart a bewildering effect to the design. Each different tint of the oil colors must be mixed up ready for use in sufficient quantity to cover all the parts required. It does not answer to mix with the brush as the work progresses. The color would be certain to vary and look like paint, not stone.

Mix mirrorine with the color and cover solidly, taking care to keep within the outlines. The enamel can be used instead of oil color, and thinned with mirrorine answers very well. If the tints are not exactly what is required, they can be modified with oil colors.

The whole of the design being filled in with the various tints selected, the ground has to be well covered with the black varnish. Fill up all thin places, as the varnish dries very quickly. It can be retouched again and again without much delay.

How to Use Chicken Wings.

A nice dish can be made from the wings of fowls by stewing slowly until extremely tender. Then make a puree of peas by boiling a quantity of peas, either fresh or canned, in water until tender, draining and mashing through a sieve and seasoning with salt and pepper and butter. Just before mashing through the sieve thicken with a tablespoonful of flour to every quart of peas. Wet the flour with cold water and cook for two minutes. Serve on a steak dish, with the wings piled on top.

How to Economize In Dress.

If a black silk or fine wool dress has a frayed place under the arm or a conspicuous tear in the skirt, moisten a piece of court plaster, put it on the underside and smooth down the edges, carefully drawing them together. Any colored goods may be repaired in this way if you get plaster to match the silk. Material manufactured for the purpose can be purchased at the notion counters of some dry goods stores.

A last year's straw hat can be sponged and cleansed with coffee, afterward pressing with a warm iron, laying the rim on a flat surface and using a pan for the crown. In addition wire the brim so that you can change the shape or add an edge of fancy straw and fresh trimmings.

If feathers have become damp, hold them to dry over a gentle heat, shaking and waving until dry.

Fill damp shoes with torn newspapers and let them dry in shape and use no polish, but a very little sweet oil, applying this only after they have been well dusted, and they will look nice for a long time.

How to Sweeten Butter.

If you have butter that is not entirely sweet, put it in a porcelain dish with a little salt and a tiny piece of soda, place over the fire and bring to a boil. Turn it into a stone jar and set it in a cool place. The butter will be found perfectly sweet and not too salt for cooking. The impurities will settle to the bottom of the jar.

I, Geneарl L. GETTING AWAY FROM THE OLD GOSPEL.

Mr. Moody said in one of his New York meetings recently:

"I think the trouble is that we are getting away from the good old Gospel of Christ. We need to get back to the Gospel. Now, I heard a man say the other day that there were only a few old fogies like Moody left preaching the old Gospel."

"Bless the Lord!" cried a man in the rear of the hall.

"Well," snapped Mr. Moody, "I don't bless the Lord for that," and the audience laughed at the unwelcome interruption. "I don't bless the Lord for any such thing as that, and I don't think its true. I think there are many such old fogies preaching the same old Gospel. But there are many preachers who do not preach it. I was in a church one day where the preacher picked the Bible all to pieces. And in his church there was a man who had broken up a family in that very church, and he came in and sat down just in front of those whom he had ruined. His minister would not preach the Gospel to him, and all the Gospel he wanted was, 'I'll ruin my neighbor's daughter, but if a man ruins my daughter I'll shoot him.'"

A correspondent writes us that the man above referred to was a Freemason.

THE NATIONAL REFORM CONVENTION.

Seldom, if ever, has Willard Hall rung with more radical and vital reform ideas than at the convention last week Wednesday and Thursday. It was a convention of two national movements, one the Christian Citizenship League, whose central idea is to make Christian principles operative in our national life; the other the National Reform Association, whose object is to secure a legal basis in the Constitution for our Christian institutions. It has been well said that the test of a true reform as well as of a true church is its influence to honor and exalt Christ; and this convention will stand this test, for this was the keynote in almost every address.

It was significant that this convention attracted almost the same workers as those who are leading in the anti-secret movement. The speakers, with but few exceptions, were those whose voices have often rung from anti-secret platforms. The chairman of the first conference Wednesday afternoon was Lawyer McKenzie Cleland, a corporate member of the N. C. A. Among the speakers announced on the program were the President and Vice President of the N. C. A., Dr. S. H. Swartz and Dr. W. T. Campbell; also, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, chairman of our Board of Directors, and Lawyer T. H. Gault, a former member of our Board. Dr. D. McAllister and Dr. H. H. George have often spoken against secret orders. D. M. Quay, an earnest friend of our cause, led in the singing of Bible songs. He was assisted by a choir of well trained singers from his mission school. The business men's session at the noon hour almost filled the hall both days. The forenoon and afternoon sessions were well attended by friends from the city and by delegates from several States.

DASTARDLY LODGE TYRANNY.

The Chicago Record, of Dec. 16, gives this instance of the tyrannical injustice of secret labor organizations:

"O. F. Armstrong, a pressman who for the last week has been working for Donohue & Henneberry, was assaulted by two men at Walnut St. and Sacramento Ave., at 6:30 o'clock last night. The assailants ran away, with the expressed hope that their victim would be in bed for a month, but the injured man declared last night that he would go to work this morning, and would have something in his pocket for the special benefit of any other men who might attack him.

"Mr. Armstrong had been out of work for some time. When the strike was declared at Donohue & Henneberry's some time ago, he sought and obtained employment there. Two days later the friend who recommended him was waylaid on his way home, and beaten into unconsciousness. Armstrong lives at 1373 Fulton St. After leaving work last night he rode home on the Lake Street 'L' road, and left the train at Sacramento Ave. At Walnut St. he passed two men, but as they wore no overcoats he supposed they belonged to the neighborhood. As he passed them one of them said, 'Say, hold on a minute.'

"Instead of complying, Armstrong, who was unarmed, started to run. The men at once gave chase, and the pressman, seeing he had no chance of reaching his home without being overtaken, ran up the steps leading to the home of J. M. Coughlin at 694 Walnut street. Just as he reached for the bell he tripped on the long overcoat he wore and fell headlong.

"His two pursuers attacked him at once. No words were wasted. They just accused Armstrong of working for Donohue & Henneberry, and then proceeded to kick him in the face. The man was given no chance to rise or defend himself. His nose was broken, his eyes were blackened and his mouth is cut, but not one of his injuries was inflicted by a man's fist. Boots did the work. When Armstrong was covered with blood and almost unconscious, the men, who took pains to declare themselves trade unionists, ran away, and people who had been attracted to the spot by the noise carried the wounded man to T. W. Sollitt's drug-store, at 1333 West Lake St After the blood had been washed away he was taken home. The Printing Pressmen's Union of Chicago has unanimously voted to continue the help now being extended to the Donohue & Henneberry strikers for another six months."

INTRENCHMENT.

There is one principle of the utmost consequence in all discussion that should be borne in mind in religious discussions particularly and in anti-secrecy work.

It has an analogous application in warfare. An advantageous position once taken is held. Soldiers do not run out of their intrenchments to scatter themselves over the whole field wherever they see one in the enemy's uniform.

A closer analogy is found in the argument of a lawyer. His client is tried for murder. There are many accusing circumstances. The ax that struck the blow was his. His was the nearest house. He was a known enemy. But proof that cannot be broken makes it sure that he was dead in another town all the time between the last recognition of the victim alive and his first discovery. The lawyer barely recognizes the inculpating facts, and shows what the jury hardly need be told, that a man's ax can be wielded by another hand, that his house may happen to stand near almost anything good or bad, and that a man who made him an enemy is liable to have done the same with other men. He will not dwell on these things or allow the jury to imagine that he magnifies them in his own mind. He will not be drawn out into treating them as of consequence by the onset of the other lawyer. He will insist with all force on the alibi that settles the question.

Freemasonry also has two settled points; each of them actually possesses the quality of conclusiveness.

One appeals to a citizen, the other to a Christian. The first is illustrated by the recent Hartford expulsion. The oath is contrary to the duty of a citizen. It is made to shield criminals from the just operation of protective civil law. The second has a salient manifestation in the prohibition and avoidance of all allusion to Jesus of Nazareth, even in prayer. Convince loyal Americans of one, and devoted Christians of the other, and you are intrenched in their sacred convictions. You need not object to what they may think endurable features, for you have a secure vantage ground in two that are impassable.

MORE SECRET SOCIETY TORTURES.

The following is a fuller account than we published last week of an even worse affair than the electrocution of Lawyer Edward W. Curry, at Des Moines, Ia. It is from the Cincinnati Enquirer:

"Several students of the law department of the Ohio State University experienced an adventure last night that they will not soon forget. They were candidates for admission to the Phi Delta Phi Fraternity, one of the best known college secret fraternity organizations of the institution. Through the influence of Attorney-General Monnett, who at one time was a member of the fraternity, they secured permission to use the punishment department of the State Penitentiary in the initiatory exercises. They first took the candidates to the Goodale Park, where they placed a rope around their waists and then threw them into the lake.

"It is a body of water about 200 yards square, and the ropes were arranged in such a manner that the candidates, many of whom could not swim, were dragged through from the east to the west side. They were allowed to be in the water long enough to feel nearly all the sensations of drowning, and then jerked out. This, however, was only preliminary to what the candidates were to suffer. They were roped together and blindfolded at the Park Hotel, in the northern part of the city. From this place, they were marched, still blinded, at midnight through the streets, to the penitentiary.

"Attorney-General Monnett had secured the use of the punishment chamber, and to that place they were taken. Here they were clubbed with a large hickory stick and ducked in a bath tub full of water. Their screams were unheeded until they were more dead than alive, and when they were brought back to the city it was necessary to call a physician to attend them. Among those in the crowd were N. O. Winters, of Bucyrus; N. S. Monsarrat, of this city; C. H. Judkins, of Cadiz; J. H Blanke, H. W. Zigler and F. R. Fox, all of Canton. Fox became so ill that he was unable to stand all of it, and was sent to his room in charge of some friends. He is still quite sick to-day, and there is considerable uneasiness concerning his condition."

The Christian Conservator says of this barbarous crime: "In the name of common sense, of human sympathy and of common decency, we ask, how long will the colleges, the civil authorities and the enlightened Christian sentiment of the country endure and tolerate organizations which practice such inhuman tortures for the sake of gratifying a morbid desire for fun at the expense of their fellows? How long?."

MASONRY A POWER IN FOREIGN LANDS.

A good illustration of the potent influence exerted by Freemasonry is contained in the following dispatch from Havana, Cuba, to the New York World, dated Dec. 6:

"Wholesale deportation of the members of Cuban Masonic and other secret organizations and societies in Havana has increased. The victims are sent out on every transatlantic steamship. They are taken to the island of Fernando Po. It was only a few weeks ago when diplomatic relations between Spain and Venezuela were near a rupture through the arrest and sentence to Fernando Po of a Venezuelan citizen who was a member of the Masonic Grand Lodge at Caracas, President Crespo himself being Master of that lodge. A brother of the prisoner appealed to Senor Pinango Lara, the Venezuelan Consul. He hastened to the palace and demanded permission to see his countryman from Gen. Weyler. It was refused.

"The Consul communicated by cable with Rojas, Misister of Foreign Affairs, at Caracas. Within two hours he received satisfactory instructions. On that same afternoon many prisoners to be deported to Fernando Po were taken aboard a Spanish transatlantic steamship. The Venezuelan, in hand-cuffs and shackles, was recognized by his brother. Consul Lara hurried again to the palace and demanded that the prisoner be set ashore and released immediately. Gen. Weyler again declined, intimating that the representative of the Venezuelan Republic was making himself decidedly disagreeable by his interest in the prisoner.

"Retiring from the Captain General's presence the Consul again communicated with his government by wire. A prompt response came from Caracas over President Crespo's own signature. It read:

"Unless prisoner be released before vessel sails, close your consulate and leave Cuba immediately; and, in withdrawing, intimate to Weyler that Venezuela will hold Spain responsible for the outrage he is committing.

"Armed with such instructions, Consul Lara's third visit to the palace resulted in the release of the Caracas Mason. The big transatlantic transport had already weighed anchor when signalled to stop by orders from Gen. Weyler. A police boat put off and bore the Venezuelan ashore.

"Consul Lara was banqueted by the Venezuelan colony that night. Champaign glasses clinked merrily, and friends of the freed prisoner drank to the health of Gen. Joaquin Crespo, the plucky South American executive who had dared to call Weyler's hand and check Spain's arbitrary treatment of Cuba's foreign Masons."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—The strong intrenchment of Freemasonry is silence.

—Rev. John Harper, of Smithville, Ill., attended the convention here last week.

—Wm. J. Cubit, of Morning Sun, Ia., was in the city last week attending the Reform Convention.

—The warm sun prevails against the strongest, fiercest wind. It transforms a continent while the wind is blowing itself away.

—Rev. D. S. Faris, of Sparta, Ill., and Dr. H. H. George led the noon hour meeting at the Willard Hall convention last Thursday.

—Dr. D. McAllister, of Pittsburgh, and Dr. H. H. George, of Beaver Falls, Pa., led the Willard Hall noon meeting last Wednesday.

—Geo. M. Miller and Thos. H. Gault, two Chicago attorneys, made very able addresses at the Willard Hall convention last Thursday morning.

—Rev. Isaiah Faris, of Vernon, Wis., and Elder Wm. S. Turner, of Waukesha, represented Wisconsin at the Willard Hall convention last week.

—J. M. Stevenson, one of our veteran anti-secret workers of Washington, Ia., was a delegate to the National Reform Convention in this city last week.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard made a powerful address at the Willard Hall convention last Thursday afternoon on "How to Quicken the National Conscience."

—Rev. C. D. Trumbull, Rev. T. P. Robb, Rev. J. W. Dill and other veteran workers in the anti-secret cause were in attendance at the National Reform Convention in Willard Hall last week.

—Quite a number of the delegates to the Willard Hall convention last week visited our office; among whom were Dr. C. D. Trumbull, Dr. D.S. Faris, Rev. J. A. Black, Rev. T. P. Robb, Rev. John Harper, Wm. S. Turner and J. M. Stevenson.

—Your attention is called to the unique advertisement of Peach Trees, by Mr. Abner Branson, of New Sharon, Iowa, whose portrait appeared in the last week's Cynosure. We advise our readers that are interested in nursery stock to send for his catalogue.

—Mrs. Mary E. McKee, of Clarinda, Iowa, writes: "We have taken the Cynosure so long it is an old friend, and we feel as if we could not do without it. Hoping you will be very successful in the work, and the Cynosure will be continued long in its work against secret societies, the curse of our land.

—Miss Eva M. Shontz, the popular and talented W. C. T. U. elocutionist, made one of the finest addresses at the convention last week in Willard Hall. Mrs. Catherine Lente Stevenson, corresponding secretary of the national W. C. T. U., also gave an excellent address on "Fundamentals of Christian Citizenship."

—"Judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way." Romans 14:13. Such judgment might save a Christian from belonging to a lodge into which might come through confidence in him, one new member who would be kept away from Christ and the church by unfounded faith in the lodge.

—A Des Moines, Ia., daily says of Lawyer Curry's electrocution in the Elks lodge: "When it was seen that he would not rise of his own accord he was led away and it was found that his clothing had been burned away and his flesh slightly blistered. Nevertheless he made a good speech and lunched as merrily as anyone. The next day he went about his business as usual, and that night attended a performance by Joseph Jefferson, and it was not till the day after that he felt any ill effects from his experience. According to the statement, Mr. Curry's system was in such condition from the excitement of the campaign that any small hurt would have caused blood poisoning."

—Elder Rufus Smith, of Wheaton, opened the National Reform Convention with prayer and took an active part in the discussions. He has been appointed Field Secretary at large for the National Christian Citizenship League. He believes he is now where he can extend his life work by uniting in one grand army God's workers against the combined powers of evil.

—Moody recently said in a New York sermon: "I am afraid we are having a backsliding people. I am afraid, although I am not a pessimist, that the cause of God is going back among us. I hate te say this before all these reporters and have them send it out to the world. In 1,700 Congregational churches there were no members received during the past year on confession of faith. Now, that is a serious thing."

—Mary E. Mann, of Denison, Kan., has the editor's gratitude for a barrel of fine apples from her Kansas orchard. She says that her young people highly appreciate the article in the Cynosure every week on the Christian Endeavor topic. They find it the best they see in any paper. Like testimony we have often from our subscribers, not only in reference to the Christian Endeavor topic, but also in regard to the Sabbath-school lesson.

—The two widowed sisters, Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson, of Cambridge, England, who are celebrated for the discovery of Bibical manuscripts on Mount Sinia, have given a site and £20,000 for the Presbyterian College to be removed from Bloomsbury London, to Cambridge. It is this Mrs. Lewis whose article, entitled "What Language did Christ Speak?" is one of the most important contributions to the Christmas Century.

—Mr. Moody said to a New York audience recently: "Then look at the men who make an idol of money. Do you know there are as many idols in New York to-day as there ever were in Hong Kong? I wish Trinity church could be thrown open every day and some man do some good, earnest preaching every noon to these men who are grinding away their lives and the lives of their wives and children in the worship of Mammon. My friends, the golden calf that Moses smashed in Egypt has been set up again in Wall street."

—Miss Eliza Davis, Princeton, Ind., says: "Not long ago Ma sent a lot of anti-secret literature including the Cynosure, Lodge Lamp and tracts to Scotland. They wrote us that some of the literature we sent caused quite an excitement, the men burning it to get it out of the way. Our pastor not long ago in his sermon about Christians being the light of the world came down heavily on the lodge. He told us about Edward W. Curry, of Leon, Ia., who died at Des Moines from injuries received when he was initiated in a lodge of Elks."

—The Christian Conservator in speaking of the death of E. W. Curry at Des Moines, says: "When children play with fire they are likely to get their hands burnt, though they may be excused for playing with fire because they are children; but there can be no resonable excuse for grown up men, who combine themselves together under most solemn oaths for the practice of such foolish and dangerous pranks upon each other, simply for the sake of amusement. Shame on the Christian minister and the church member who can find no better use for their time."

—Last summer George W. Smalley, the famous correspondent and man of letters, went abroad in the interests of the Ladies' Home Journal. His commission was to write two articles: one on "The Personal Side of Bismarck," and the other on "The Personal Side of the Prince of Wales." Mr. Smalley personally knows both men, and he had no difficulty in getting into close touch with them, while other men would have found insurmountable barriers. The first of these articles will be printed in the January issue of the Journal. Unpublished portraits will illustrate the papers.

—Rev. N. R. Johnston, Oakland, Cal., writes: "In a late number of the "faithful witness" against the lodge system, you had an article in commendation of the President's proclamation. By some mishap you had in it a sentiment or sentence that was not in the official document. It was too good to be from a President's national pen yet a little. We are on the highway to the millennium, but it is not yet at the doors; and it will not begin at Washington until after the Christians of the United States get ashamed of electing Freemasons and such like to the Presidency. Men who have become accustomed to the lodges where the name of Jesus Christ is not named will not soon learn to honor it in their civil and public acts."

—The New York Evening Journal of Nov. 19, says: "If Edward W. Curry, of Des Moines, had been a freshman in a college and the gentlemen of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks a lot of sophomores, a howl of condemnation would go up all over the country. We should read tons of wise comment about the cowardice and unmanliness of hazing, and college presidents would be called upon to put down the evil with a stern hand. But here is a piece of deliberate hazing by grown men, who are not college students, and who therefore ought to know better. Societies and organizations which indulge in secret initiations ought to take this lesson to heart, not so much because a man has been injured, but rather because such revelations hold up secret societies to public ridicule. It is a little too much to expect the general public to take seriously organizations whose members invent ceremonials worthy of the childish fancies of a lot of school children."

—A Chicago daily says: "It is thought at the central police station that the Chinese Highbinders' feud, which has terrorized the Chinese quarter of San Francisco, has reached Chicago, and Inspector Fitzpatrick is taking action to promptly suppress any trouble that may arrise among the 1,800 subjects of the emperor of China who reside in this city. Several days ago a Chinaman named Soon Gee Wong secured a warrant for the arrest of Hoy Woy, whom, Soon alleged, had embezzled some money from him some years ago. When Woy was taken to the station he declared he was a victim of Highbinders. He said he left Chicago two years ago and went to Pittsburgh, where he opened a laundry. He made money, and a few days ago started to return to China to get married and live in comfort. The Highbinders, he claims, thought he knew to much of their methods to be allowed to tell them at home, especially as the emperor has threatened to decapitate all relatives of the Highbinders in Chicago. He therefore sent Soon to Chicago to have Woy arrested and thus prevent him from returning home."

—The Syracuse, N. Y., Standard says: "Receivers were appointed yesterday afternoon by Justice Hiscock for the Commercial Traveler's Life Insurance Association on the application from the office of the attorney general made by John W. Hogan. The Third National Bank and the Commercial Bank were named as the depositories. Mr. Hogan stated that the liabilities of the association were about $100,000 and the assets about $60,000. The Commercial Travelers' Life Association was conceived by a company of Commercial Travelers, who happened to get together on a New York Central train in 1870 or 1871. The discussion at that time centered on some means for providing a sick benefit. The result was that a meeting of Commercial Travelers from all over the State was held at the Globe Hotel in this city. This led to the organization, in 1872, of the association, its purpose being to provide bona fide Commercial Travelers with a co-operative life insurance at cost. An office was opened in J. W. Yale's block, where it remained for some years. In the early days of the association the annual meetings were occasions of great social importance, and members from neighboring cities attended in large numbers. Fine balls were held and sumptuous dinners were served, and a jolly good time was had. During the past twenty five years the association has paid out over $3,000,000 in benefits. And could the organizers have had the experience that they now have, the association would probably be doing business to-day. The difficulties experienced by the Commercial Travelers' Life Association were met by the American co-operative relief association two years ago, and by several other associations.

Today and Tomorrow.

Don't tell me of tomorrow.
Give me the man who'll say
That, when a good deed's to be done,
"Let's do the deed today."
We may all command the present
If we act and never wait,
But repentance is the phantom
Of the past that comes too late.

Don't tell me of tomorrow.
If we look upon the past,
How much that we have left to do
We cannot do at last!
Today! It is the only time
For all on this frail earth.
It takes an age to form a life.
A moment gives it birth.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Dec. 27.
Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—One spiritual truth I have learned this year.—Ps. xc, 1-17.

The Ninetieth Psalm is one of the most interesting of the Psalms. It is so because it is the most ancient of all, having been written by Moses. It is interesting also for its sublime character. It deals with the eternity of God and the mortality of man in this life. It suggests retrospection. "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts to wisdom" is its prayer, based on the fact that human life is short and uncertain.

The only way to read the future is by the past. As we stand at the close of the year and recall its successes and its failures, if we want to improve upon the past the best way is to be guided by what it teaches us. We should number our days. We should recall the past, that we may be wiser in days to come. The strong points of last year's life and character will be the strong points of the coming year's life and character. The weak places will be weak unless, recognizing them, we apply our hearts to wisdom and strengthen them.

Experience is the best of teachers. It is so because it is divine teaching. God is in human events. He controls all things. He speaks to us through experience, another name for His providences. Experience is also demonstration. Demonstration is always better than theory. Theories may be correct; facts must be. They are the indisputable things of life. No one can successfully dispute them. That which benefited us last year will under the same circumstances benefit us this year. That which hindered us will hinder us again. That which tempted us will tempt us again. That which overcame us will overcome us again unless we stand more strongly against it. Let us recall the past and learn the lessons which experience teaches us.

What lessons may be learned from one brief year! Each year is so much like each other year that the whole range of life is contained in one single year. What lessons on the attributes of God, His goodness, His justice, His mercy, His love. What lessons of faith and trust and hope based upon the unchanging character of God and His dealings with men. What lessons of warning—warnings against sin, against indifference, against neglect, against procrastination, against worldliness. What lessons on life—its brevity, the certainty of its end, the necessity of being prepared for its close at all times. No year but that teaches important lessons upon these all important subjects. Let us number our days. Let us apply our hearts to wisdom.

A Rounded Period Not Always True.

It is not true that "all is well that ends well." That is simply one of those catch phrases that delude people into sowing wild oats with the intention of some day burning up the wild harvest of such a sowing and sowing in the same field the good seed of truth and virtue. Character is often impaired beyond reparation, even though repentance comes late and is sincere and attempted atonement is made by the utmost self sacrifice. "Whoso breaketh a hedge a serpent shall bite him." The poison may be extracted, but the scar will ever remain.—Philadelphia Methodist.

The Little Circle In Which He Lives.

Each one of us is bound to make the little circle in which he lives better and happier. Each one of us is bound to see that out of that small circle the widest good may flow. Each one of us may have fixed in his mind the thought that out of a single household may flow the influences that shall stimulate the whole commonwealth and the whole civilized world.—Dean Stanley.

Swallow It Whole.

Many people are born crying, live complaining and die disappointed. They chew the bitter pill which they would not even know to be bitter if they had the sense to swallow it whole in a cup of patience and water.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Christian Endeavor Jottings.

Never were so many calls from mission boards upon their Endeavorers. It's a high honor. Make your bow so low that your pocketbook will fall out.

In South Wales and Monmouth, as reported at their recent Christian Endeavor convention, there are 212 Christian Endeavor societies, with more than 10,000 members.

SHE IS A COUNTY ATTORNEY

A Young Woman's Ability as a Lawyer Recognized In Nebraska.

Miss Estelle Mae Davisson, who was recently elected to the office of county attorney in Brown county, is one of the best and one of the brightest lawyers in northwestern Nebraska. One of the surprises in the political kaleidoscope of the counties in this section of the state was the election of a Populist over the Republicans. Brown county's normal Republican majority has been about 300. But this year the fair candidate for county attorney was elected without an effort, although pitted against a strong and popular gentleman on the Republican side. Miss Davisson is a native of Iowa and has not yet reached the age of 23. She imbibed her first notions of law on her father's knee. Miss Davisson is an able lawyer and a graduate of Michigan university. She attended the public schools of Sibley, Ia. In 1886 she came to Long Pine, Neb., her present home, and finished her secular education in the high school. In 1894 she entered the law department of the state university at Lincoln, and two years later came out of it a full fledged lawyer. She was nominated as a fusion candidate and won easily. Miss Davisson is the only woman in Nebraska—perhaps in the country—that has been elected to the position of county attorney.—Chadron (Neb.) Correspondence.

Antiseptic Handkerchiefs.

So much danger exists from contagion in the handling of infected clothing that for some time past an effort has been made to introduce handkerchiefs of paper and fiber. A substance composed of shredded fiber might be put into the form of paper pulp and run out into sheets, which would be soft, pliable, absorbent and inexpensive. Paper handkerchiefs might be made almost as cheap as toilet paper and would be found a most welcome addition to the equipment of invalids. Immediately upon being used they could be burned or otherwise destroyed, thereby avoiding the transmission of disease germs. Laundresses and others have frequently been inoculated with the bacilli of various maladies by contact in the washtub. A scratch or any irritated spot on the skin may become a lodging place for such organisms. For this and other reasons the paper handkerchief is strongly commended. If, in addition to the absorbent and inexpensive qualities, the pulp could be impregnated with some inodorous and efficacious antiseptic, the value of this new departure would be largely increased.—New York Ledger.

Colors That Reign.

Yellow in all its glory, in its varied tones and semitones, is to rage in dress and millinery this winter. Red the shade of the traditional British coat heads the list of fashionable colors in England just now. Czarina blue has broken out all over France, rivaling russian gray in general favor—the soft, becoming, refined gray in cloth and velvet that the young empress seemed to favor next to blue and cream white during her short, brilliant stay in Paris. Vivid green is beloved by the Emerald Islanders and popular this year the world over. All these various dyes have their admirers and electors, and technical journals announce the color chiefly favored by some particular country or noted personage, and therefore we are now in the first harmless stages of yellow fever, and no one is disposed to object to the epidemic.—New York Post.

Reciprocity.

College fraternalism recently found another pleasant illustration at Oberlin, O. When Oberlin, which was the first college to open its doors to women on an equal footing with men, was just starting in its work, in 1833, Mary Lyon was a teacher in Miss Grant's school, in Ipswich, Mass. The teachers of this school, with their pupils, immediately sent $450 to Oberlin to help it in its work. Of this sum Mary Lyon herself gave $150. Four years later she founded Mount Holyoke seminary. This fall the women teachers at Oberlin gathered a contribution of $450 for Mount Holyoke college and sent it as a Thanksgiving recognition by the Oberlin of today of the noble work done by Mary Lyon for the higher education of women.

Sun Plaiting.

"Sun plaiting" is a new Parisian fashion of widening and "fulling out" skirts. It is new and very stylish. Instead of accordion plaiting a skirt, the plaits are put in at the waist in tiny laps, widening out to the bottom until at the hem they are from 1 to 1½ inches wide. This holds the top skirt out beautifully.

A LITTLE HERO.

How Bennie Moran Rescued His Little Sister From a Burning House.

The saver of human life stands in the front rank of heroes. And the hero whose name is on every tongue in the city of Detroit is Bennie Moran, a little boy of 3 years, who is a hero at an age when most children are slumbering in their mothers' arms.

Bennie, however, like many another hero who has risked life and limb in efforts to rescue the helpless, takes the honors heaped upon him by admiring friends in a modest way and thinks that when he carried his little 2-year-old sister from his father's burning house he did little more than any other boy would do.

It took but a few short seconds for Bennie to perform this act that will bring him glory through all his days. It was on Tuesday, Nov. 17, late in the afternoon, when Mrs. Moran kissed her two babes as they lay playing upon the kitchen floor and started for a nearby store. The children were alone in the house, and what happened between the time Mrs. Moran left and the fire company dashed up to the blazing house in response to an alarm of fire was gleaned from the little hero bit by bit after the excitement had subsided.

Bennie, tired of playing on the kitchen floor, shortly after his mother left opened a door leading into the back yard, with the intention of going out there to play. A sudden puff of wind from the open door caught the curtains at a window near a lighted gasoline stove, and in an instant they were ignited. The frightened child looked back and in a moment saw the entire wall blazing with fire. He then remembered the oft repeated warnings from his father about fire and started for the side door with the intention of escaping into the street. The door was locked, but he quickly found the key, unlocked the door and run out into the street. And then, out in the clear air, free from the smoke and flame, he commenced to think. His little sister was in there, and the flames were creeping closer and closer.

He hesitated not an instant, but started to enter the house once more. He was met by a cloud of flame and smoke at the door. Not for a moment did he falter, but plunged in headlong, with only one thought in his mind, and that his little baby sister. He groped his way to the center of the room through the stifling air and found her sitting on the floor, crying softly in a frightened way. He placed his arms around her and, half carrying, half dragging, brought her to the door and then out into the open air and left her safe in the street.

He did not consider his duty performed yet, however, and started for a neighbor's house, crying at the top of his voice: "Fire! Fire! Papa's house is burning up!" The entire neighborhood was quickly aroused, and, with the aid of the fire company, which appeared on the scene shortly, the flames were extinguished. Had it not been for the little hero's presence of mind and his knowledge of just what to do first, not only would his baby sister have perished in the cruel flames, but his father's house would have been reduced to a smoldering heap of black and charred ruins.

Mr. Moran says this is Bennie's second experience. A little over a year ago his sister and mother, with Bennie, had a narrow escape from death by fire. They escaped only by the mother carrying them over a burning floor and down a stairway of flames.

The Misspelled Tale.

A little buoy said: "Mother, deer,
May Eye go out to play?
The son is bright, the heir is clear.
Owe, mother, don't say neigh!"

"Go fourth, my son," the mother said.
The ant said: "Take your slay—
Your gneiss knew sled, awl painted read,
But dew knot lose your weigh."

"Ah, know!" he cried and sought the street,
With hart sew full of glee.
The wether changed, and snow and sleet
And reign fell steadily.

Threw snowdrifts grate, threw watery pool
He flue with mite and mane.
Said he, "Though Eye would walk by rule,
Eye am not rite, 'tis plane.

"Eye'd like to meat sum kindly sole,
For hear gnu dangers weight,
And yonder stairs a treacherous whole.
Two sloe has been my gate.

"A peace of bred, a gneiss hot stake,
Eye'd chews if Eye were home.
This crewel fate my hart would brake.
Eye love not thus to Rome.

"Eye, week and pail, have missed my rode."
But hear a carte came passed.
He and his sled were safely toad
Back to his home at last.

CHILD INEBRIETY.

Thoughtless Parents Pave the Way For Future Wretchedness.

"Mamma, why can't I have a glass of wine?" This was the question asked by a bright eyed, 4-year-old youngster in one of the restaurants of Chicago not long since. My heart seemed to stand still waiting for what answer the mother would make.

The parents were apparently well to do, intelligent people, who upon taking their seats for luncheon had ordered beer for the father and wine for the mother. The lady sweetened the wine to suit her taste and placed the glass in front of the child, who sipped several teaspoonfuls, when the father remarked: "That is sufficient. That will give the little man an appetite for his luncheon." But the boy was not satisfied and gave the mother no peace until she had given him more, until at least a dozen teaspoonfuls had been taken, and when finally he was refused more he asked why he could not have a bottleful like papa. By this time the face, which had been sweet and rosy when he came in, was flushed and feverish, and the eyes, which shone with an innocent brightness when I first looked into them, were now dull and heavy.

The importance of educating mothers on the dangers and possibility of child inebriety was never more forcibly impressed upon me than by this incident. The thoughtlessness or ignorance of these parents was almost beyond conception, and the conviction that this young mother was sowing seed which would mature into a harvest of debauchery for her son and lifelong sorrow for herself made the noonday hour one of feverish dread for the future of the boy and regret that we seem so powerless to reach such a large majority of the women who are and will be the mothers of the coming generation.—Banner of Gold.

WINE DRINKING.

It Does Not Appear to Be Common In California, Where It Is Cheap.

Some years ago there was published in a popular magazine an essay entitled "Will the Coming Man Drink Wine?" which gave rise to a good deal of discussion on that subject. Since that article appeared the boy then in knee pants has arrived at manhood, and for the most part it must be acknowledged that he does drink wine in great variety and plenty of it.

In a country like California, where the grape will thrive almost upon the sands of the seashore, that the use of wine should be as general as that of tea or coffee would not be remarkable. But is it so? Is the young Californian, brought up, as it were, within the perfume of the vineyard, a drinker of wine, or have the ancient tastes of his ancestors, the hard cider drinkers of New England, the strong water drinkers of the Norse and Anglo-Saxon race and the beer drinkers of Germany, clashed with his appreciation of the wine of the country of his birth?

In a city club a few days ago this topic was discussed. There happened to be just 50 men sitting down to luncheon when the discussion arose, and a waiter was quietly instructed to count the bottles of wine on the tables. There were in all five quarts among those 50 men, not one of whom could not have afforded to pay for half a dozen bottles had he felt so disposed. Three were drinking Scotch whisky and soda, two had beer at their elbows, and with the exception of the wine drinkers the rest were satisfied with cold water. And this in a country where the cheapness of good wine is phenomenal!—San Francisco Chronicle.

Medical Ethics and Alcohol.

Apropos of the change in medical ethics regarding alcoholic prescriptions the bishop of Carlisle recently gave a bit from his own experience. He had consulted an eminent London doctor for a throat trouble, and just before he departed the doctor remarked, "Bishop, I think if I were you I would eschew all alcohol, and I would not indulge in tobacco in any form." To this the good bishop smilingly replied, "Well, doctor, I have been a teetotaler all my life and have never had a pipe in my mouth." "Oh, you are on the right lines then," responded the doctor. The bishop was rejoiced that this formula, "Abstain from all forms of alcohol and also smoking," has been adopted by the most learned practitioners, who make it a point to so advise their patients.—National Temperance Advocate.

Useless Citizens.

Each of the 13 "consulting hospitals" in Paris receives monthly 62 habitual drunkards in a hopeless condition, nearly as many women as men. This means that 10,000 inhabitants of Paris are rendered useless citizens each year by alcohol.

San Francisco's Saloons.

For its 300,000 population San Francisco has 3,260 licensed saloons besides other places where drink can be procured. It is not a matter of surprise, consequently, that there were 15,392 arrests last year for drunkenness.

Effects of Drink.

Eighty-five per cent of all the children admitted to Dr. Barnardo's home, according to his observation, owe their distresses directly or indirectly to the drinking habits of their parents, grandparents or other relatives.

Rum In a New Country.

When alcohol is first introduced into a new country not accustomed to drink, the result is disastrous. Rum killed more American Indians than bullets, and alcohol is today depleting Polynesia of its inhabitants. Were any of the African tribes supplied with beer and other liquors as the English and Germans now are, the tribes would soon vanish. In time, however, the continued inoculation of one generation after another would in a measure make such a tribe proof against it, and there would then be in Africa people not unlike the children of some old, old families, whose ancestors were the bottle heroes of the dinner table, able to carry off under their skins immense quantities of whisky without serious inconvenience. —Banner of Gold.

Strong Drink In France.

Strong drink is making such ravages in Paris that medical men are again raising their influential voices against spirituous liquors of all kinds. Dr. Magnan of the St. Ann's asylum has drawn a terrible picture of the evils of inebriety, and the result has been the foundation on English lines of a Young Men's Temperance association. Something like this has been tried before, but it did not succeed. The majority of the French people refuse to confine themselves to milk, coffee, water and sirups, and it will be a difficult task to induce them to believe that they can dispense with their white and red wines. More especially will it be difficult to convert the artisans and laborers to principles of total abstinence. The temperance advocates, however, think otherwise. They are under the impression that by dint of fulmination it will be possible to eradicate intemperance from the masses, and they are making strenuous efforts to bring about this desirable state of things.—London Telegraph.

Teetotalism Spreading.

America is becoming a nation of teetotalers. An observer says that if one does not believe it let him look at the list of states where the citizens have formally voted that way. We find this list quoted from the bill of fare of a Pullman dining car. A note on the card says: "Wines and liquors will not be sold in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Indian Territory, Kansas, Maine, Mississippi, New Jersey, Ohio, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas and Wyoming. No wines or liquors to be sold on Sunday in any states having the prohibitory Sunday laws."—Chicago Sunday Chronicle.

Chief Causes of Lunacy.

What are the chief causes of lunacy? They are two in number—heredity and drink. Some men and women are born to madness, others drink themselves into it. If we could eliminate these two causes, the population of the mad world would soon diminish.—London News.

Temperance and Total Abstinence.

Temperance is the moderate use of all things helpful and total abstinence from all things harmful.

Ruin.

'Tis only a glass of liquor
Standing on the bar.
'Tis only a mother's darling boy
Who begins his life to mar.

'Tis only a case of drunkenness,
"Carried home by a friend."
'Tis only a case of a bright young boy
Who begins too late to mend.

'Tis only a case of murder,
The trial begins at four.
But why go into details,
He's behind the prison door.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON I, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 3.

Text of the Lesson, Acts i, 1-14 — Memory Verses, 7-9—Golden Text, Luke xxiv, 51 — Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach." This associates the writer with the author of the third gospel (Luke i, 1-4). In that treatise he speaks of the doings and teachings of Jesus as things most surely believed, of which people knew the certainty. This is a record of the continuation of the doings and teachings of Jesus through His followers. Dr. Erdman calls it a mirror of the experience of all true and faithful witnesses till He come, its two themes being the "Great Redemption" and the "Coming Kingdom." Observe that the order is first doing and then teaching and compare Mark vi, 30; Ez. vii, 10.

2. "Until the day in which He was taken up." The gospel by Luke reaches to the ascension, with which also he begins this treatise (a word used only in verse 1, but the Greek word logos is used over 300 times, generally translated "word" and in John i, 1; I John i, 1, and Rev. xix, 13, applied to Christ Himself. As by the Holy Spirit He was born, baptized, led, cast out demons, offered Himself a sacrifice, rose from the dead, by the same spirit He gave His parting commands to His apostles.

3. "To whom also He shewed Himself alive after His passion" (or sufferings). His ten or more different appearances to the disciples during the 40 days between His resurrection and ascension were sufficient to prove to them that the risen Christ was the very same Jesus whom they had known and loved and had seen die on Calvary. They saw the marks of the nails in His hands and of the spear in His side, and yet there was a change, for His body was no longer flesh and blood, but "flesh and bones," in which He could eat and walk and talk and have fellowship. It was an immortal body, incorruptible, and ours shall be the same (Phil. iii, 21).

4. "Commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father." Compare Luke xxiv, 49, with John xiv, 16, 26; xv, 26; xvi, 7, 13. Although they had the very best of teachers and of teaching for two or three consecutive years, yet they were not qualified for service until they had received in a special sense the gift of the Spirit. It is not the mere knowledge of the truth that will suffice, but the truth set on fire by the Holy Spirit. The word is likened to water, but water must boil to make steam. May the fire cause the water to boil to make His name known (Isa. lxiv, 2).

5. "Ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost, not many days hence." John had said of Him, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Luke iii, 16). In our next lesson we shall see somewhat of the fire, but I expect that we will see more of the fire in connection with the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon Israel at His second coming. See Zech. xii, 10; xiii, 9. Since He who loved us enough to die for us is He who baptizeth with the Holy Ghost what hinders us to be baptized? Ask Him.

6. "Lord, wilt Thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" In all His teaching the prominent topic was "The Kingdom," as it was also during the 40 days before His ascension (verse 3). The only kingdom mentioned in the Old Testament as a kingdom to be joyfully expected was the kingdom promised to David, with a King upon His throne. The angel Gabriel, John the Baptist, the Lord Jesus, the twelve and the seventy, all preached it; but by the Jews' treatment of Christ it was postponed till He shall come again (Luke xix, 11, 12). The disciples had not understood it so, and hence their question because of their unbelief.

7. "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in His own power." He did not say that their thoughts of the kingdom were wrong or carnal, or that it was to be a spiritual kingdom in the heart and not a kingdom for Israel, as many say today, for He knew, and we ought to know, that the one thing in all Scripture which He had said that He would do with His whole heart was to place Israel in their own land to do them good (Jer. xxxii, 41). He did say that it was not for them to know the time.

8. "But ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me" (see margin). According to Luke xxiv, 49, He had previously said, "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." The great truth to which they were to bear witness was that He had risen from the dead. See verse 22, with chapters ii, 32; iii, 15; iv, 33, etc. By the resurrection from the dead He was with power declared to be the Son of God.

9. "'He was taken up, and a cloud received Him out of their sight.'" Doubtless He had many times ascended to His Father during those 40 days since His first ascension on the resurrection morning when on His way to the Father He met Mary Magdalene (John xx, 17), but now He was not to appear again till He shall come for His church. He must take His seat at the Father's right hand that the Holy Spirit may come to bear witness in the redeemed that Christ is alive forever more, having all power in heaven and earth.

10. "Behold two men stood by them in white apparel.'" In Luke ix, 30, two men, which were Moses and Elijah, were seen on the mount of transfiguration with Him. For aught I know these may have been the same two, and they may also be the two witnesses, yet to come, of Rev. xi, 3-12. But the chief thing concerning them, whoever they were, is that they were His witnesses, and they spake of Him.

11. "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven." This was their testimony, and it stands recorded by the Spirit of God and is sure of fulfillment. This explains how the disciples could return to Jerusalem with great joy (Luke xxiv, 52), and why in all their preaching they made so much of a Christ who was alive in heaven and would surely return.

12. "These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication." I think this is the last mention in Scripture of our Lord's mother. Where on earth could we better leave her than at such a place? Would it not be a good record of us to have some one say, "The last time I saw them was at a prayer meeting?" Let us watch and pray and not forsake the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is. Only 120 followers (verse 15) after those three years, and the Spirit added through Peter in one day 3,000 souls (ii, 41). Was this one of the greater works of John xiv. 12?

NATIONAL LEGISLATURE.

Synopsis of the Proceedings of the Law Makers.

Washington, Dec. 16. — The opening prayer in the senate was delivered yesterday by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage. The pension appropriation bill was reported. The resolution from the house to adjourn for the holidays Dec. 22 was agreed to. Morgan made a warm speech on the Cuban question in which he declared for war if the Spanish did not get out. Allen offered a resolution for a committee to investigate newspaper reports of the use of money in elections. The veto of the bill for a pension to Nancy Allabach was overriden and the bill passed over the veto. An executive session was held.

In the house Loud's bill to restrict second class mail matter at one cent a pound was debated without action, and the bill to reorganize the Atlantic and Pacific Railway company was passed. ad mckinley

Washington, Dec. 17. — Mitchell of Oregon introduced a bill in the senate giving veterans of the war preference on all government positions, if competent. The pension appropriation bill was passed as it came from the house. Vest precipitated a debate on tariff matters that occupied the balance of the session. An executive session was held.

In the house Bailey of Texas introduced a resolution for an investigation of what is the matter with the battleship Texas. Apropos of this Secretary Herbert says there is nothing the matter with the Texas; that the stories printed about her are false. The house put in the rest of the day principally to a clause in the army appropriation bill to abandon the military hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., without decisive action.

Washington, Dec. 18. — The senate's day's work consisted of the passage of the Lodge immigration bill, which now goes to conference. Its chief feature is the requirement that all immigrants must, before they are admitted into this country, read and write five lines of the United States constitution in and language they may prefer. If they fail the steamship company bringing them must take them back. An executive session was held. Adjourned to Monday.

The house passed the army bill and made good progress with the legislative, executive and judicial bill. Several resolutions relating to the inauguration of McKinley were passed. They refer to railway accomodations for visitors, decorations, etc.

Washington, Dec. 19.—The house put in yesterday on private bills, pension and otherwise. The bill to pay Flora A. Darling $5,683 was laid on the table. She is the widow of a Confederate officer and the money, which was in state bank notes, was taken from her in 1864. At the day and night sessions forty-nine pension bills were passed, one giving General John Gibbons' widow $100 a month, and another General W. A. Nichols' widow $50.

Washington, Dec. 21. — The house Saturday adopted a special order for taking up the Pacific railroad funding bill on Jan. 7, and for a debate of four days. The consideration of the Loud bill relating to second-class mail was set for Jan. 5, and 6, with a final vote on Jan. 6. Saturday was given to appropriations bills, the urgent deficiency being passed and the legislative, executive and judicial advanced to nearly completion. So many of the members of the house have already left the city that nothing will get through this week except on unanimous consent—one man can stop legislation. No work is expected in the senate.

Gompers Gets There Again.

Cincinnati, Dec. 19.—The Federation of Labor settled two matters yesterday —the election of officers and the place of next meeting. As to the first it goes without saying that Samuel Gompers was re-elected president. Nashville, Tenn., was named as the location of the next national gathering. A resolution demanding some important changes in the scheme of government of the United States was defeated, getting 21 votes against 44. This resolution was offered by Ashe, a delegate from Boston, and had its cause of existence principally in the arrest of Debs and others for contempt of the United States courts in 1894.

The twelfth annual issue of the Columbia Pad Calendar has made its appearance in more pleasing form than ever before, having scattered through its daily leaves many charming illustrations, with an appropriate thought or verse for each day in the year. Among the topics are bicycling, outdoor life, and good roads. The cycling fraternity, to say nothing of the general public, has acquired a decidedly friendly feeling for the Columbia Calendar, and its annual advent is always looked forward to with interest and pleasure.

The calendar can be obtained for five two cent stamps by addressing the Calendar Department of the Pope Manufacturing Company at Hartford, Conn.

THE PRAIRIE STATE.

ILLINOIS NEWS NOTES OF GENERAL INTEREST.

Summary of Important Events of the Past Few Days Reported by Telegraph for the Benefit of Our Readers—Items of Special Interest to Illinois People.

Chicago, Dec. 18.—The Republican state central committee yesterday held two meetings, one in the forenoon and another after dinner, without referring to the senatorship, or at least those of them around the hotel refused absolutely to indicate what they wanted done. Resolutions were adopted thanking Dr. Jamieson, and Chairman Hitch, and Secretary Van Cleave was presented with a magnificent silver loving cup. The afternoon session was devoted to the consideration of the inauguration of Captain Tanner, and the part the committee will play in it. It was proposed to leave the whole matter to a sub-committee composed of Alderman Bidwell, I. J. Copely and J. H. McKinney.

The only information gained was that Charlie Allen, of Vermillion county, was probably in the lead for speaker for the simple reason that he has the backing of the forces that have always contributed to make speakers in the past. Nevertheless Bryan, Schubert, Cochran, Selby and Needles were on hand all day to press their individual claims to the honor of wielding the gavel, and they are hopeful of being elected. Senator Evans was in a more cheerful mood than usual, and said that the combination against him for the organization of the senate was broken. The leaders of the combination strenuously denied that such was the case, and asserted that they were absolutely certain of winning.

INSPECTOR LOCKWOOD IS MISSING.

Connected with the Illinois Auditor's Office —Last Seen at Cairo.

Springfield, Ills., Dec. 19.—L. A. Lockwood, employed by the auditor of public accounts as building and loan association inspector, has been missing for several days, and the auditor has become anxious about him. He was last heard of at Cairo, Ills., Thursday morning, Dec. 10, when, it is said, he took a north-bound Illinois Central train. It is customary for inspectors to drop a card, furnished for the purpose, to the office each day. When these cards failed to come as usual the auditor wired to his last known address, the Halliday House, Cairo, and the information given above was received. The auditor has since made telegraphic inquiry of all places where there may be any chance of finding him, but has failed to gain any information whatever in regard to his movements since leaving Cairo, and much alarm is felt for his safety. Any information furnished the auditor's office will be thankfully received. Lockwood was formerly a citizen of Ottawa, Ills., where he was well-known.

Woman Burned to Death.

Monmouth, Ills., Dec. 16.—Mrs. D. M. Walker, aged 60 years, of Roseville, this county, died Tuesday, being a victim of kerosene oil. While filling a lamp which stood near a lighted one Mrs. Walker filled the bowl to overflowing in her haste. She struck and broke the burning lamp, igniting the oil and her clothing. She made the usual fatal mistake of running outside, and her clothing being heavy, her body was literally roasted.

Murder Over a Religious Question.

Cairo, Ills., Dec. 18.—Three men employed by the Illinois Central at Mounds —John Flynn, Michael Linzee and another whose name has not yet been ascertained—fatally assaulted Eric Parker in a saloon here Wednesday. The difficulty grew out of a religious discussion, Parker being a member of the A. P. A. After crushing Parker's skull the men escaped.

Hospital Superintendent Appointed.

Springfield, Ills., Dec. 21.—Governor Altgeld announces that the board of trustees of the new state hospital for the insane at Rock Island has appointed Dr. John A. Vincent, of this city, superintendent of the same. Dr. Vincent is a member of the state board of health and one of the best-known physician in the state.

Lockwood Heard from at Chicago.

Springfield, Ills., Dec. 21.—L. A. Lockwood. one of Auditor Gore's building and loan examiners, who has been missing for ten days, has been heard from. A Springfield man has wired Gore that he met him and exchanged greetings with him Friday on West Madison street, Chicago.

"O, Promise Me," Case Settled.

Oregon, Ills., Dec. 16.—The Bennett-Blough "O, Promise Me" breach of promise case has been definitely settled by the defendant promising to pay all costs in the case. The case was based on the feeling manner in which Mr. Bennett sang that song to Miss Blough.

Given a Life Sentence.

Clinton, Ills., Dec. 21.—Ed Polen, the double murderer, was sentenced here in Judge Herdman's court to life imprisonment at the Chester penitentiary. The jury agreed after nearly a twenty-hours' session.

All these tools are full-sized, practical, neat, and cheap; not mere toys. They enable any person to do his own half-soling, boot, shoe, rubber, harness, and tinware repairing.

This Outfit is the result of years of study, experiment, and correspondence in the manufacture of Iron Lasts and Repairing Outfits; and its practical advantages need only to be seen and tried to be appreciated.

Our Improved Iron Lasts and Standard are one of the handiest tools you can have about the place. The Lasts are four in number, smooth and solid, 4, 6, 8, and 10 inches long, thus enabling one to half-sole all sizes of foot-wear. The Standard is made with an iron base, which can be easily fastened to the bench. No method of half-soling is now used on common work, except that of iron last and wire clinch nails. The writer of this has been in the business 20 years, and has seen the changes from the old wooden lasts and pegs to the modern method, and knows it to be complete.

Our Improved Harness and Saw Clamp is an indispensable tool in sewing a harness or filing a saw. The jaws are thrown open mechanically by a coiled spring on the bolt.

The weight of this outfit is 18 lbs. Price, all complete, packed in a neat, strong box, only $3.00.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

SHREDDED FODDER.

Cost of Shredding—Benefits Divided—Storing the Fodder.

Since the invention of corn husking and fodder shredding machines there are some things to be learned by those who expect to try the new way of disposing of the corn crop. Farmers appreciate labor saving machinery, but they must be satisfied that the husker and shredder will save labor. Each farmer knows about all the time and labor involved when handling fodder in the usual way. Here is what an Ohioan tells about the new methods in a letter to The Practical Farmer. He says: I had a husker last winter that, with five men, husked 280 bushels in one day. We used three teams and sleds, each driver unloading his own load. One man assisted in the field and one attended the fodder in the mow. Rail pens were built at the side of the machine, into which the elevator dropped the fodder. The price paid for husking was 4 cents per bushel.

The analyses of corn and fodder at the experiment stations prove that there is as much solid food in fodder as in corn. The new way places the fodder in the best possible shape for feeding in racks or mangers, and it is much more pleasant to handle. A small mow will hold 75 per cent more shredded fodder than bundled. The work was all done in a day—something in favor of the women. A little extra help for one day is far better than to have men to board and do for the old way.

The main point is in storing the fodder so that it will come out of the mow or stack bright and clean. Fodder is the most difficult of all forage crops to cure in the mow. I have known bundled fodder to spoil in the mow. Shredded fodder should not be tramped or packed closely. Cut fodder will pack more closely than shredded and is therefore more likely to spoil or mold.

I have cured fodder in different ways. I took boards 8 inches wide and made square boxes, boring holes through every four feet, making them as long as the width of mow. After filling the mow four feet deep lay on several boxes, fill again, then a few more boxes, until the mow is full. The boxes let out the heat and moisture and let the air in, and it cannot spoil. If cut at proper time, it is equal to timothy hay for horses, if oats are fed with it. Cows like it, and sheep thrive on it. A good way to feed it, for cows especially, is to put it in a barrel with chop sprinkled through it and pour a kettle of hot water over it. Throw a cover over it to hold the steam in. None of it will be left in the feed trough.

Some ventilate by putting a layer of oats, straw or hay every few feet through the mow, making, like the Irishman's pig, "a strake of fat and a strake of lean." There are many cows in Ohio that would like such feed this winter and would thrive on it and pay for it in extra milk and butter.

In baling and shipping fodder it should be baled as soon as shredded and shipped direct to consumer, who should cut the wires and throw in a loose pile. If possible, ventilate with boards or rails. If the weather is dry and cold, there is not much danger. If it has gone through the sweat before baling, it may do to go on the market the same as hay and will be handled by our commission merchants who deal in hay, grain, etc. It will never be as safe a keeper, baled, as hay or straw, because of its liability to draw dampness.

Making Cider Vinegar.

First have a good, strong iron hooped barrel. Next have good apple cider. Cover the bunghole with mosquito netting or other material that will keep out flies. The bungs ought not to be put in, except temporarily, for at least a year. Keep the vinegar barrel in the garret or other place where the air is warm and sultry. The cellar is a bad place in which to make vinegar. To hasten fermentation occasionally turn the cider out of one barrel into another, thus exposing it more fully to the air, and by adding a gallon of strong vinegar or a little "mother" to each barrel. There are other methods by which the process may be hastened still more, such as trickling it through beech chips or shavings, but these are hardly to be recommended, for those who are content to wait on the natural process rarely fail to find themselves amply repaid through the higher value of their product.

A Word For Hedges.

Osage orange hedges are being discarded since the advent of the barbed wire fence. An Illinois correspondent of The Orange Judd Farmer thinks this is a mistake. He writes: It is my opinion that the hedge is much more desirable than the wire fence, since so much damage is annually done to live stock by the sharp barbs. With the frequent windstorms of recent years it was a satisfaction to know that the hedge fence could not be blown down. There are still many miles of hedge in this county, and if well kept it is ornamental and will last for many years. The cost of pruning is not very much and can be done when other work is not pressing. Severe windstorms are of frequent occurrence in the prairie states and damage almost any kind of fence except hedge.

Alfalfa For Butter Making.

The cheapest feed for butter making in the west is alfalfa. At least this is the conclusion arrived at at the Utah station at Logan. At $3.75 per ton cows which ate all they would of alfalfa, in connection with four to eight pounds per head daily of mixed grain, averaged over a pound of butter fat per cow daily at a cost for food of less than 9 cents per day. This is the average of a full winter's feeding test at the station, particulars of which are given in bulletin No. 43, sent free to all applicants. The cows which were the largest eaters per 1,000 pounds, live weight, were, without exception, the largest and most economic producers.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

CONGRESS DEFIED.

EXECUTIVE AT WAR WITH LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

Notifies the Law-Making Power That the President Will Veto the Cameron Cuban Resolutions, Holding That Recognition of a New Nation Is an Executive Function.

Washington, Dec. 21.—The statement made by Secretary Olney Saturday with reference to the senate Cuban resolution is a subject of earnest discussion. On some hands his position is fully sustained while on others it is admitted that perhaps from a purely technical statement of law the secretary's position is correct, but that certainly he violates the principle of the constitution. Those who make this contention reverse the circumstances. Supposing, they say, that the president declared that he intended to recognize a republic, and that congress should pass a resolution declaring it their judgment that no such action should be taken, would it be possible for the president in face of the position of both senate and house to use the executive prerogative and recognize a republic? This constitutional point has for the time being been supplanted in interest the resolution itself, and it is known that when the resolution is brought forward for discussion a debate of considerable interest and length will ensue on this subject. Olney's statement has stirred congress as it has not been stirred for years on a point of this kind. Senators and representatives who talk against Olney's position are indignant and astonished.

SECRETARY OF STATE OLNEY.

Pith of the Secretary's Statement.

The statement, as far as its material points are concerned is as follows: "The power to recognize the so-called republic of Cuba as an independent state rests exclusively with the executive. A resolution on the subject by the senate or by the house, or by both bodies or by one, whether concurrent or joint, is inoperative as legislation, and is important only as advice of great weight voluntarily tendered to the executive regarding the manner in which he shall exercise his constitutional functions. * * * * Unless the advice embodied in the resolution shall lead the executive to revise conclusions already reached and officially declared the resolution will be without effect and will leave unaltered the attitude of this government toward the two contending parties in Cuba."

Likely to Increase the Friction.

Another thing that will increase the friction comes by copyrighted Associated Press dispatch from Madrid where "the explicit announcement is made that Senor Dupuy de Lome, the Spanish minister at Washington, has telegraphed to his government here that he had a conference with Mr. Olney, the secretary of state, in the course of which the latter assured him that Spain might rest tranquill until March at least, since, despite the attitude of congress, President Cleveland would not recognize the independence of Cuba."

Resolutions That Are To Be Passed.

The resolutions are as follows, the words "republic of" in the first resolution were put there yesterday by the committee. In the second resolution the word "should" was changed to "will" "use friendly," etc.

"Resolved by the senate and house of representatives of the United States, in congress assembled, that the independence of the republic of Cuba be and the same is hereby acknowledged by the United States of America.

"That the United States use its friendly offices with the government of Spain to bring to a close the war between Spain and Cuba."

CULLOM'S VIEW OF THE CASE.

He Tells a Little Story to Illustrate How It Looks to Him.

The sentiment among the senators is well illustrated by the remarks made by Senator Cullom on the secretary's statement: "I have just read it," said he. "It seems to me a most extraordinary performance on his part. He says that if the resolution adopted by the senate committee on foreign affairs recognizing the independence of Cuba should be adopted by the senate, it could be regarded only as the opinion of the gentlemen voting for it. He makes the same remark as applicable to the house, if that body should pass it, and finally he says that if the joint resolution should be passed by a two-thirds vote over a veto by the president it would still be regarded as inoperative and taken as mere advice. To me this is a new doctrine.

"I am reminded by the course Mr. Olney has taken of a reading clerk in the house of representatives of our state legislature some years ago. I happened to be speaker of the house. Members were in their turn introducing bills. Finally a bill was introduced and the reading clerk was directed to read it a first time. He read a section or two of the bill, and suddenly turned around and said: 'Mr. Speaker, there is no use of reading that bill; it is unconstitutional.' Mr. Secretray Olney proposes to tell congress befor the bill has come to the senate that there is no use of considering the bill; that the president, who is now absent, would not regard the act if passed over his head, except as a little unasked advice. * * * * When congress passes an act either declaring war or for any other purpose, it is the constitutional duty of the executive to enforce it."

The argument of the men who are astonished and startled at the doctrine enunciated by Olney is based on the constitution. Particular attention is called to the paragraph of the eighth section of the first article of the constition, which declares that congress shall have power " to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this constitution in the government of the United States or in any department or office thereof."

Attention is also called to the fact that nowhere in the constitution is the president given any exclusive authority to deal with foreign nations, this being merely a custom which has grown up, his only authority according to the constitution being to appoint diplomatic and other officers, and then only by and with the consent and advice of the senate. On the other hand, congress is specifically given the authority to punish offenses against the laws of nations, to declare war, to raise and support armies and the navy, to make rules for the regulation of the land and naval forces, etc.

In reply to a question of a Cincinnati newspaper Senator Sherman wired: "There is no foundation for the statement that congress may not, if it will, recognize the independence of a new nation; nor do I think Mr. Olney contests it, but he thinks the matter ought to come from the president. If, however, congress should pass a resolution and the president should veto it, it can be passed by a two-thirds vote of each house and would become a law which the president must respect and obey."

Of the senators who commented on the Olney statement Chandler was most radical. He was sorry that there was not time this congress to impeach the president if he vetoes such a resolution. Impeachment talk, however, was quite general among the radicals on the Cuban question.

THOSE WHO AGREE WITH OLNEY.

They Quote Authorities in His Support—Ex-Judge Cooley's Views.

On the other hand those who agree with Secretary Olney quote precedent in his favor. For instance, here are some of the authortiies:

In Wharton International Law Digest is quoted Secretary Seward's letter to Mr. Dayton, our minister to France, April 7, 1864, as follows: "The question of recognition of foreign revolutionary or reactionary governments is one exclusively for the executive, and cannot be determined internationally by congressional action."

The following decision of the supreme court of the United States is also quoted: "In political matters the courts follow the department of government to which those matters may be committed, and will not recognize the existence of a new government till it has been recognized by the executive."

A telegram from Cincinnati says that Judge Thomas M. Cooley, of Michigan, has wired his opinion to a paper there as follows:

"The power to recognize belligerency and the lawfulness of action in defence of a government alleged to be de facto must devolve upon the executive power of the country, which can recognize no belligerent governments until the fact is clearly made known to it that there is in existence a government maintaining itself and enforcing its authority against any other.

"But the president's power is not complete and final. The sovereign legislative power must provide for final intercourse, and pass laws for the purpose: laws which the president would be impeachable if he should not join in executing. What he does in recognizing a new nation is clearly in part legislative, and the action taken, if taken by the president alone, would be so far defective as to be impossible of execution without being perfected now or in the future by the sovereign legislative power.

We wish all our readers a Happy New Year.

Washington Convention at Seattle, Jan. 18, 19.

The Missouri State Convention will be held at Kirksville about Feb. 4, 5.

Minnesota State Convention at Willmar, Feb. 23, 24.

Let us all pray more for the success of our reform.

Look at the date on your tab, and reflect on the words of Paul, "Owe no man anything."

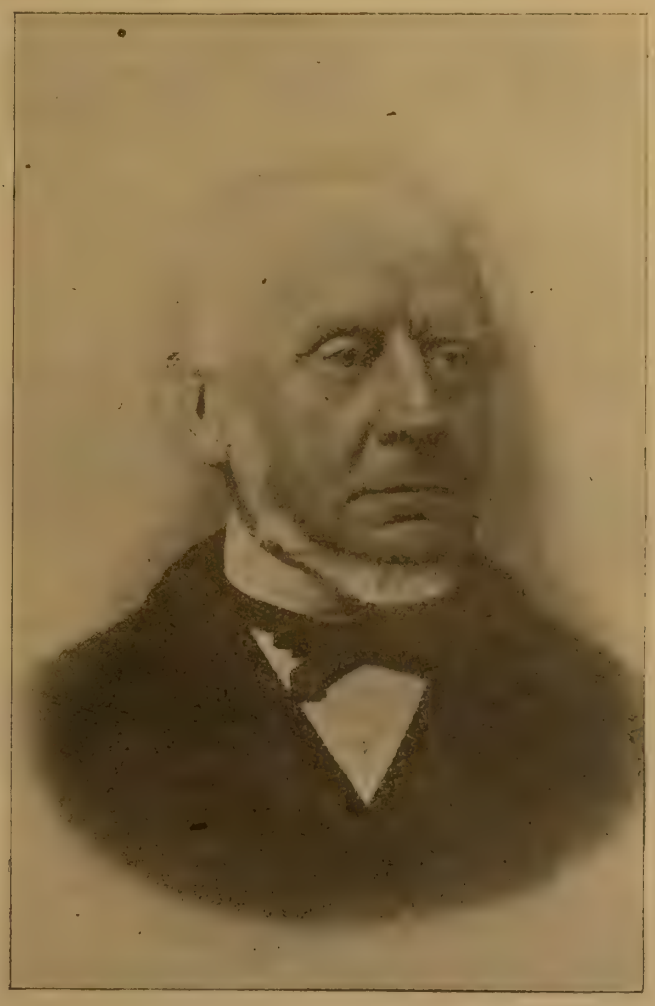
Where can you find better discussions of the Sabbath-school and Christian Endeavor topics than is found in this paper?

Read the program of the Washington State Convention on the ninth page, and the appeals to friends in Washington and Minnesota.

Remember that the Cynosure is the organ of communication and bond of union between widely distributed forces in the great battle for the overthrow of the greatest modern anti-Christ.

"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" is a prayer we should breathe daily. What better answer to this petition than a resolve to help on the movement against secret societies? And how can we better begin to do this than to subscribe for the Cynosure? Surely $1.50 is but a small amount to give to aid so good a cause.

You should at least contribute the price of the Cynosure to this cause, for the reason that its supporters are so few and far between. Other reforms, such as Prohibition and Sabbath reform do not encounter such opposition, and have enlisted hosts of followers. Remember it costs much to speak out on this question. The great publication boards of the popular churches dare not carry in their stock, books or literature on this subject. The great church papers scarcely ever touch on it. Even the press of most of the anti-secret churches only occasionally publish on it.



CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

This picture is of an American diplomatist who was an outspoken enemy of Freemasonry. In 1861 he was appointed minister to England, and represented our government during the crucial years of our civil war. His influence was powerful in preventing England from espousing the cause of the Southern Confederacy. The future historian will more and more recognize God's gracious providence in putting such men in control of American politics during those perilous years, when Jesuitry and Freemasonry were plotting the overthrow of the republic. If at that time our President and his cabinet, and our leading generals in the field, and minister to England had been Freemasons our republic would most probably have gone down to its grave.

Charles Francis Adams was the son of John Quincy Adams, and was born in Boston in 1807. He graduated at Harvard in 1825, and began the practice of law in 1828. He was a powerful enemy of slavery, and in 1848 was nominated for Vice President by the Free Soil Party. He served as member of Congress from 1858 to 1860. He returned from his ministry to England in 1868, and was appointed one of the arbitrators on the Alabama claims. He died in 1886. His views on the lodge question he has expressed as follows: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond, even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience, and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Current topics will be discussed in the Cynosure with greater care than ever before. We will endeavor to show the relation of passing events to the kingdom of Christ and to the secret lodge. An old minister was in the habit of saying, "I read my Bible to know what God is doing in the kingdom of grace, and my newspaper to learn what he is doing in the kingdom of providence."

The portraits and sketches of faithful workers in our reform will be continued on our first page, and will be as in the past a popular feature of the Cynosure. There is an inspiration in seeing the pictures and reading the lives of God's faithful witnesses, living or dead. There is no better way to embalm their memories and incite others to follow their example than by publishing a brief review of their lives, accompanied by their portraits.

The many features which have made the Cynosure so valuable in the past will be continued during 1897. With a growing list of able contributors, and the conflict with the lodge evil intensifying, and new workers enlisting and coming to the front, we confidently expect that the coming year will be the most interesting in the Cynosure's history. We trust every reader will make a greater effort to increase our circulation this year than ever before.

The Cynosure contributors are too numerous to name, and their writings are worthy of all praise. They have increased so that they represent nearly every branch of the Christian church. As writers and readers, where can you find a paper whose constituency in point of radicalism will compare with ours? The secret lodge system has become such a popular rock-bound iniquity that the men and women who will stand out boldly to confront it can be relied on in any reform battle.

Society is gaining self-consciousness, which marks one of the most important steps in the progress of the race. We are beginning to see that society is an organism which lives one vast life, of which every man is a part. We are gaining what Walter Besant calls "the sense of humanity." We are discovering that life is something larger and farther related than we had thought; and with this perception of wider and multiplied relations comes a new sense of social obligation, the perception of new social duties.

BE KIND TO EACH OTHER.

BY CHARLES SWAIN.

Be kind to each other;
The night's coming on,
When friend and when brother
Perchance may be gone.
Then 'midst our dejection,
How sweet to have earned
The blest recollection,
Of kindness—returned.

When day hath departed,
And memory keeps
Her watch, broken-hearted,
Where all she loved sleeps,
Let falsehood assail not,
Nor envy disprove—
Let trifles prevail not Against those ye love.

Nor change with to-morrow
Should fortune take wing;
But the deeper the sorrow,
The closer still cling.
Oh! be kind to each other,
The night's coming on,
When friend and when brother
Perchance may be gone.

BRO. STODDARD'S ANNUAL REPORT,

AS CORRESPONDING SECRETARY OF THE NEW ENGLAND CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—It is fitting that we should recognize, first of all, the good hand of our God upon the work of the New England Christian Association during the year 1896, and unite in thanksgiving to "the Giver of every good and perfect gift."

Death has not taken any of our active workers from the field, and few have been chastened by serious illness. Not one, so far as I know, has been broken upon the wheel of financial disaster, under which many have been crushed within the twelve months just ended. All financial responsibilities of the Association have been promptly met and honorably discharged and the credit of the society fully sustained. Receipts for current expenses have not been sufficient to wholly protect invested funds, but the year closes with an assured gain of over seven thousand dollars. The estate of the late Darwin Brooks has been settled, and Samuel A. Pratt put in possession of that legacy as trustee for the Association and also for the widow of the deceased who, by the conditions of the bequest, is to receive the income derived from the fund during her life.

It is known to your secretary that parties still living have made bequests which, when realized, will very materially add to the strength and efficiency of the Association's work. One hundred and seven thousand six hundred pages of tracts have been printed and in large part put in circulation during the year. An edition of 5,000 copies of "Danger Signals" No 2 has been issued and put on the market at a cost of $350. Like "Danger Signals" No. 1, this booklet of forty-eight pages contains the portraits of men and women of pronounced convictions and their brief testimonies against secret societies.

Fifty copies of "Danger Signals" No. 1 and 2 were sent to each of the following educational centers, viz.: Talladega, Miss.; Berea, Ky., Memphis, Tenn.; Tougaloo, Miss.; Atlanta, Ga.; Straight University, New Orleans, and Beloit, Ala. Through the liberality of Rev. E. Hildreth and Mrs. A. A. Cheney, executors of the will of the late Philo Carpenter, of Chicago, $200 were furnished by these parties from the same fund toward the expense of issuing the work. Material for this little volume had been mostly gathered during the year preceding, and materials for a similar booklet, "Danger Signals" No. 3, have been collected the present year and are in readiness for use should the Association deem it wise to add yet another volume of testimonies with a view to combining the whole in a single book.

Early in the year I was intrusted with the clerical work incident to an offer of $400 to be given in prizes for the best essays on "Secrecy and Citizenship," from the estate of the late Philo Carpenter. The time allotted to competitors was Jan. 1, 1897. Responses to circulars and advertisements indicate a degree of interest that is very encouraging; and while we must wait for final results until the judges announce their verdict, it is known that among competitors are some of the clearest thinkers, the most careful observers and logical writers of our time.

By direction of your Board I have attended such religious gatherings as were accessible, distributing literature, conversing with individuals or groups of men and giving addresses when opportunity could be obtained. My address before the Berkshire Congregational Association on the "Relation of the Church to Outside Organizations" received a liberal circulation through the Connecticut Valley Congregationalist where it appeared with slight but probably judicious modifications.

Among other meetings attended were Douglass campmeeting, Old Orchard, Ocean Grove, Springfield and Alton Bay. At Springfield I gave an address and preached four sermons, and at each of the other meetings I found friends and distributed literature among the people.

The rigid exclussion of any discussion of secret societies, which has prevailed in some quarters, is slowly giving place to a more liberal and Christian sentiment, and the omens are prophetic of a more apostolic method of proving all things before pronouncing condemnation. The procedures of the secret orders have done very much to produce this change in the attitude of thinking people, especially Christian people. The tragic death of Rev. J. W. Johnston while being inducted into the mysteries of the Royal Arch degree of Masonry at Huntington, W. Va., Jan. 10, 1890, was given a wide publicity by the press, and gave at least a glimpse of the "things that are done of them in secret."

The torture and branding with hot irons of F. A. Preble while beiug initiated into a lodge of Orangemen in Waltham, Mass., last July 20th, and the fines imposed by Judge Luce after a legal investigation upon his tormentors, establishing the facts beyond question, has produced a feeling of grave suspicion that such proceedings are un-American and inhuman, and that they ought not to be tolerated in a civilized community. While the brutal process of roasting E. W. Curry while seated in an iron chair, when being made an Elk, until he died of his injuries in Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 18th ult., is a chapter of horrors revolting to the last extreme.

Only granite walls of secrecy could make possible such a deed of heartless cruelty upon a prominent attorney in that State. Such instances of barbarity reveal the inhuman, diabolical spirit of the lodge system, and emphasizes its possibilities for the darkest crimes within tyled recesses. They revive the memory of the Morgan murder, of David Brownlee and other well-authenticated instances where men have been made victims of lodge vengeance.

Dr. Frederick C. Jackson's expulsion from Hartford Lodge No. 88, on Dec. 23, 1895, for a violation of his Masonic oath in testifying to the truth in a civil court against a brother Mason, has directed attention to the treasonable character of Masohic oaths and furnished the public with conclusive proof of the irrepressible conflict between justice and lodge partiality in civil affairs.

An attempt on the part of Masonic bodies in Worcester, Mass., to secure unprecedented power through the passage of an act in our legislature, authorizing the acquisition of an unlimited franchise for Masonic purposes, stands among the boldest acts of attempted usurpation recorded in the history of the secret empire.

Without prolonging the list of crimes attempted or actually perpetrated in strict conformity to the "ancient usages and established customs" of the secret empire, permit me to call your attention to the importance of our work in this connection. But for the sentiment created and the vigils of the National Christian Association, and our own New England ally, the above, and many similar and appalling facts, would never have been sifted, analyzed and given to the people. Like other, and perhaps darker deeds, they would have been strangled at their birth and locked up in the catacombs of lodge charity and midnight mysteries. Without disparaging the increasing liberality and fairness of the secular press in giving, as "news items," these startling facts to their readers, it is nevertheless true that the work of forestalling where possible, of warning against threatened danger from this source, of probing actual cases to the bottom and disclosing the sources whence they spring, of faithfully recording and widely proclaiming the mutilations and murders committed in these secret orders, has been done by the Christian Cynosure and its coadjutors in this movement, who have been on the alert for such instances as the Jackson outrage in Hartford, Conn., the announced feature of a Knight Templar pageant in the dedication of Tremont Temple and the attempted fraud upon the citizens of our commonwealth by a Masonic combination in the city of Worcester.

The course before us is onward! without taking council of obstacles, fears or enemies, to push the battle to the gates, aye, to the very heart of the citadel, making neither concession or compromise. An open Bible, a fearless ministry, incorruptible judges, a free press and a pure church, are what Jesuits, Freemasons and the whole brood of lodge devotees most dread. These must be sustained. The "Pole Star" and its shining constellation must be upheld by the prayers and patronage of their friends; and the work of preparing and scattering literature urged forward with all possible dispatch. This will require faith in God, self-denial, personal effort and money.

If after studying God's promises and noting what he has actually done in bringing to light the hidden things of dishonesty during the past quarter of a century, our faith is deficient, we shall be verily guilty. It would not be strange if the Master should pass by saying, "I can do no mighty works" with you "because of unbelief." If we are more thoughtful of propriety, reputation or of self than we are of his honor, of whom it was once said, "He hath a devil and is mad, why hear ye him?" he will surely redeem his own Word, "He that denieth me before men him will I deny before my Father in heaven." And if we are not willing to work and testify according to our ability and to give of our substance as we have been prospered, then indeed we are not worthy of the cause committed in sacred trust to our hands, and he will take from us even the one talent and bestow it where it will be used to some purpose.

The question of finance is important, not as an end, but as a means to the end we seek. Systematic giving we are often told is becoming more common then in former times. Be it so; but whether giving from principle and as to the Lord rather than to be seen of men is more popular than it was a half century ago, admits of reasonable doubt. The modern fashion tends towards "booms," "banquets," "entertainments" and some kind of a "jubilation" with attractive environments, fascinating music and soul-stirring appeals by gifted orators rather than to conscience and to duty. The lower element of self, and not the sublime obligation to God and our fellows, is too often thrust to the front. Confronted by this sad fact, friends of the anti-secrecy work may well consider what are God's claims upon them.

The cause greatly needs a properly equipped headquarters in New England, and the money to secure this is not to be had through channels of ordinary beneficence. We may as well accept the fact that our work is not popular among monopolists and money kings, and look to God and the common people for its support. Hitherto some have given liberally, but they have been comparatively few, while the chief reliance for support has been, and is likely to be for some time, upon bequests.

This is true of the parent society at Chicago as well as of our New England work. Friends ought to respond to the needs of this work as liberally as their circumstances will justify, and then make provision in legal form to have their principles represented by a portion, at least, of their means when they are gone. Marble monuments crumble and fall to earth, but hearts inscribed with "holiness to the Lord," through your beneficence, will perpetuate the memory of your good deeds before the throne forever. For the future I would council not only more general giving, but more aggressive work. The former will make possible the latter.

I would recommend that a petition be prepared and circulated for signatures and presented to our Legislature, asking for the withdrawal of all charters issued to Masonic lodges or other secret orders, and that the administration of extra-judicial oaths or pledges designed to have the force of an oath be prohibited by law. Also, that in view of the fact that special revival services are announced for our city in the near future, and the further fact that some active ministers, expected to participate in evangelistic work, are actual and adhering Freemasons, I earnestly recommend that a carefully prepared circular be issued and widely circulated, setting forth the initiatory rites, the oaths and anti-Christian character of those orders to which these professed servants of Christ give their allegience.

JAMES P. STODDARD, Secretary.
218 Columbus Ave., Boston.

DANGEROUS FACTOR IN POLITICS.

EXTRACT FROM AN ADDRESS BY REV. J M. FOSTER, OF BOSTON, BEFORE THE NEW ENGLAND ANTI-SECRET CONVENTION IN BOSTON TUESDAY EVENING, DEC. 1, 1896.

Is it possible that the Jesuits gave to Masonry this Christless religious mummery of pagan, deistic rites? Jesuitry is well known to have put on every shape, to have made use of every means that could promote the power and influence of the order. And we know that at this time they were by no means without hopes of re-establishing the dominion of the Church of Rome in England. Their services were not scrupled at by the distressed royalists, even such as were Protestant, while they were highly prized by the Sovereign.

But they took Freemasonry to France. The lodges in France naturally became the rendezvous of the adherents of the exiled king, and the means of carrying on a correspondence with their friends in England. At this time also the Jesuits took a more active part in Freemasonry than ever. They insinuated themselves into the English lodges, where they were caressed by the Catholics, who panted after the re-establishment of their faith and tolerated by the Protestant royalists, who thought no concession too great a compensation for their services. At this time changes were made in some of the Masonic symbols, particularly in the tracing of the lodge, which bear evident marks of the Jesuitcal interference. For instance, a seal was a lion wounded, lying at a cave with Masonic tools about him, evidently alluded to the exiled James II.

The French loved display. The Knights Templar and Knights of the Desert, and other orders were instituted. The idea of benevolence was attached to the order to make it more popular. This was made so prominent that the religious idea began to vanish, and by degrees it was converted into a school of skepticism and infidelity. Religion was called superstition. Civil government was tyranny. Cardinal Dubois and the Regent Orleans encouraged this. Universal brotherhood was preached. Reason was made the sole arbiter and guide of man. The church was cried down as an institution of superstition. Civil government was condemned as a wicked oppression; universal freedom and equality, without law or authority, without distinctions of wealth and family, was the ideal state.

Lodges were established all over France and in them these sentiments were industriously propagated by the Jesuits. "In short, we may assert with confidence that the Masonic lodges in France were the hot-beds where the seeds were sown and tenderly reared of all the pernicious doctrines, which soon after choked every moral and religious cultivation, and have made the society worse than a waste and have made it a noisome marsh of human corruption, filled with every rank and poisonous weed."

Masonry was carried from England to Germany in 1716 It grew rapidly under the hand of the Jesuits. In 1743 Baron Houde visited Paris and introduced an order of Knights Templar. He claimed it was an order which Philip the Fair had abolished. The members took refuge in Scotland, concealing themselves in caves, he alleges, From them he received the true secrets of Masonry. He also organized a few lodges in Germany. But when a deputation visited the highlands of Scotland and found no trace of his exiled French Knights, an estop was given to its growth. In 1782 Baron Knigge made a new departure. He proposed a convention that should devise a plan for uniting the lodges of all lands. It was to represent universal brotherhood. It was to embody world-wide benevolence. It was to secure a state of liberty and equality.

He called the convention at Willemetbad. Several eclectic lodges were organized. The Lodge Theodore was one. Dr. Adam Weishaupe, a professor of Canon Law in the university of Ingolstadt, was a member. He had been educated among the Jesuits. He, with six other professors, organized a new lodge and called it "The Illuminati." The order was said to abjure Christianity, and to refuse admission into the higher degrees to all who adhered to any of the three Confessions. Sensual pleasures were restored to the rank they held in the Epicurean philosophy. Self-murder was justified on stoical principles.

In the lodges death was declared to be an eternal sleep; patriotism and loyalty were called narrow-minded prejudices, and incompatible with universal benevolence; continual declamations were made on liberty and equality as the unalienable rights of man. The baneful influence of accumulated property was declared an unsurmountable obstacle to the happiness of any nation, whose chief laws were formed for its protection and increase.

Nothing was so frequently discoursed of as the propriety of employing, for a good purpose, the means which the wicked employed for evil purposes; and it was taught that the preponderance of good in the ultimate result consecrated every means employed; and that wisdom and virtue consisted in properly discriminating this balance. The Elector of Bavaria was alarmed and banished Knigge and two of his confederates, giving them a pension, however, which Knigge rejected but the others accepted.

SELLING SECRETS.

BY REV P. B WILLIAMS.

This seems to be a profitable business now, and that Masons and other secret orders invent and then sell their secrets is indisputable. Much of the larger number of the degrees are of recent date; and, of course, the secrets they contain are of recent invention.

The high Masonic dignitaries of the Grand United States and State lodges, as well as those of Europe, and particularly those in France, are even now, no doubt, engaged in this work and find it a very profitable business to manufacture degrees, and invent secrets for the credulous public. They sell readily, and the whole world is their market.

THE MASONIC AUCTION.

Secrets to sell, secrets to sell!
Secrets no human tongue dare tell!
Come pay the fees and gain the prize;
No fraud is seen by "hoodwinked" eyes.

Come march around this "sacred" hall,
And hearken to the "Master's call;"
From "west to east" your pathway lies,
In search of light with "hoodwinked eyes."

From "west to east, from east to west,"
The new "hoodwinked" Masonic guest,
Around, around in search of light,
Doth travel in a sorry plight.

Low he bows before the altar,
Cable towed with hempen halter;
Then swears upon his naked knee
To keep the things he cannot see.

And now to close this bargain dear
They bid the "hoodwinked" never fear;"
For soon from darkness into light
They will restore his blinded sight.

And now they form upon the square,
And with profanity they dare
To use the living words of God,
Not fearing his avenging rod.

The Master says, let there be light;
They clap and stamp with all their might,
And give the Grand Masonic shock,
Like blasting some tremendous rock.

And now the "hoodwinked" sees too late
The hardness of his fettered fate;
His money's gone, his conscience bound;
But not a secret has been found.

He sees at once he has been cheated;
All search for light has been defeated,
And find, to him, 'tis not so funny
Thus to be swindled of his money.

'Tis true, they say, your light is little,
And what you've paid is a mere tittle;
But mount the ladder higher still,
And you with light we then will fill.

He pays his fees and higher rises,
In search of all Masonic prizes,
Until his senses, steeped in night,
All darkness he imagines light.

And then he struts around the earth,
Proud of his new Masonic worth,
And hopes by his Masonic love,
To gain the blest Grand Lodge above.

And thus deluded on he goes,
Proud of the steps by which he rose,
Not knowing that those steps do end
Where hope and mercy never blend.

And when he stands in judgment great,
Filled with all his secret hate,
He will find in that convention
He's been sold at a mock auction.

Secrets to tell, secrets to tell!
Will then ring through the deepest hell.
And the shriek of utter despair,
Forever disclose the secrets there.

Secrets to tell, secrets to tell!
Resounding through the depths of hell;
We've paid the fees and gained the prize;
The "hoodwinked" soul forever dies.

THE THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION.

BY REV. N R JOHNSTON.

The last Presidential proclamation is by far the best that I remember to have seen, yet it is very defective. But we should not be censorious. Grover Cleveland is the President in a Christian land, but the government is not a Christian government. If it were it would not be so difficult to write a proclamation that would be worthy of a Christian ruler. But he is the chief executive in a government that does not recognize the supreme authority of God, but only the authority of the people; and he is President in a government that does not know or acknowledge the authority of Christ Jesus to whom all civil governments owe professed allegiance and to whose law all, in all civil relations, owe obedience. Of course, therefore, we would expect President Cleveland to write his proclamation to suit Jews and Unitarians and unbelieving officers and people as well as evangelical Christians. This may account for the cautious and compromising manner in which the proclamation is written. I refer especially to the third paragraph from the end.

It reads thus: "And let us, through the mediation of Him who has taught us how to pray, implore the foregiveness of our sins and a continuance of heavenly favor."

The close observer will readily see that there is no recognition of the divinity of Christ Jesus, nor of his power to forgive sins; nor of his mediatorial authority. Yet it does recognize his "mediation," and this is the best thing in the paragraph; but as the sentence is worded it is probable that both Jews and Unitarians of all kinds may give assent. Already leading Jewish Rabbis have publicly expressed their approval of it. Both classes or sects assent to the statement that Jesus taught his disciples to pray, and perhaps with an explanation they may accept what is meant by the word "mediation." It is manifest, however, that that paragraph was worded by the President or his pastor or his religious secretary in such a way as to give no offence to Jew or Gentile or to the church of God.

Who that loves our Saviour King does not heartily wish that our Christian Presidents could be under a Constitution that would distinctly recognize the divine authority of the Lord of nations, and place the government and nation under the dominion of Him to whom all power in heaven and in earth belongs.

ONLY TAKING A NOONDAY NAP.

A converted Roman Catholic professor, writing in the Converted Catholic upon "More Authentic History of the Papacy," tells of the bill of Pope Clement XIV. (1773) by which the troublesome order of the Jesuits was denounced and (technically) abolished, and then remarks:

"To those not of the Roman fold it is an amusing pastime to reflect on the fact that all this thunder and lightning, though at the time apparently effective, in the long run proves so much smoke, which blows over, leaving the society free to rise again from its temporary grave as strong and vigorous as though it had but been taking a noon-time nap."

But the same comment fully applies to the order of Freemasonry, which, since its exposure and merited discredit sixty years ago, comes well to the front, possesses itself of a large proportion of the chief political offices, and boastingly defies any further successful inquiry or attempt at dislodgment J. W. LEEDS.

THE PATRIOTS OF AMERICA.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

I have read with painful interest "The Patriot's Bulletin" for December, the official organ of the above order which adds one more to the swarm of secret conspiracies that are preying on public morals, the general welfare and the Christian religion. The able editor says: "The charge has been made against this order that it is a secret order." "We have a password and other means of making ourselves known throughout the nation. If this fact is a valid objection to our order, then the same objection can be made to Masonry, Odd-fellowship, and many other brotherhoods that have an exalted purpose."

Needless and pernicious as I think the forgoing and all other secret societies, my objections to the above order are not merely that it is secret. That its central idea is a false theory of finance, and that its practical influence will be to array class against class and prevent a spirit of anarchy, is but one of the many objections that might be urged in its disfavor. My objections are twofold.

1. That it is avowedly a secret political society, and as such is inconsistent with the fundamental idea of republican government, which is, that all measures affecting the public welfare shall have a free, full and open discussion, and shall, as far as possible, be removed from the controlling influence of any class, sect or order; and especially from an order whose members are under oath to conceal from the public their political methods, and the machinery by which they control elections.

Bad as I think Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship, and hurtful as I think their influence in political matters, they are not primarily political societies, and not liable to the above objections. The testimony of the past, both in our own and in other lands, is, that secret political societies, however commendable their purpose, always fail of any beneficent effect, and are always, sooner or later, regarded as conspiracies against society and destructive of its best and highest interests.

Jesuitism, nihilism, illuminism and knownothingism are but samples of the false methods of the friends of religion and civil liberty. They are utter failures to promote anything but political mischief, and their certainty to secure public reprobation. The evil element was not in their ends but in their methods, nor is there any reason to believe that the same methods will secure better results.

My second objection is that this order is a religious institution. Like its kindred orders, it has a religious basis. I quote at length what it says on religion:

> This order may be said to be a form of religion. We worship the principles of humanity. We are trying to work out the destiny of mankind by regulating like clock-work the social organism of civilization. We think civilization is a science, and that the proper study of that science is the laws of nations. When that science is once mastered and set to unselfish laws, we believe the human race will take its attention off of the vain and selfish things of the earth, and marvelous things will be discovered concerning the universe and the life, health and happiness of mankind.
> We think, and have a reason for thinking, that crime, suicides and insanity are largely, if not wholly, the product of a diseased civilization; and that, with the perfecting of a perfect civilization, crime, suicides and insanity will disappear.
> We also recognize that charity is the most exalted of religious virtues, and our membership is instructed to help a worthy brother or sister of our co-ordinate order, the Daughters of the Republic, in distress. But we believe there is a higher conception of charity than the giving of alms, and that is, by shaping our civilization so as to do away with the necessity for alms, where all will be able to make a living and none will be in need of charity.
> We have but one test as to the loyalty of our membership, and that is, fidelity to the principle that the unselfish judgment of a majority of our membership, working through our constitution, will lead us out of the wilderness and into the light of a new civilization. A man may lack any of the many virtues, and yet be a member of our order. If a man is a victim of a false civilization, there is no reason why he may not be earnestly interested in the emancipation of the human race, himself included. The criminal in prison would experience an intense feeling of pleasure if he were to learn that the people were practicing a plan of civilization that was taking away the incentive for crime. His face would show the delight with which he received each piece of news that told of the new order of things.
> And those who have not committed any punishable crime, but in whose closets one or more skeletons may be found, will as cheerfully take hold and give their support to a feasible plan for the emancipation of the human family as the most virtuous and purest of our citizenship. And it is reasonable to suppose that they would the more readily assist as they are the victims of the fiction produced by an illy regulated organism of society. They would remove the friction if they knew how. The fever of a distempered society is feeding upon victims, and the sufferers are the most anxious of all praying for a remedy.
> We are the members of a religion with a practical plan for bringing a millennium to the people of the earth.

Whatever may be true of Mr. Harvey's views of finance there can be no question among Christians that the theory of religion, as here set forth, is essentially false and misleading. It is virtual atheism, and may be expected to bear the fruits of atheism wherever it has been made the dominant idea, as it was in France in the Revolution that preceded the Empire of Napoleon.

Any religion that does not include the worship of a personal God, who is just and holy, which does not recognize the Lord Jesus Christ as the Divine Mediator and model for all human conduct, and which does not seek to transform the individual man into this likeness, will utterly fail to either bless the individual or to transform society. Mr. Harvey's plan for bringing in the millennium is an old one. It will inevitably fail.

REFORM NEWS.

SPECIAL APPEAL

TO THE FRIENDS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

We are planning for the largest convention against secret societies ever held on this coast. The place selected is Seattle, Wash. We hope to secure the Ranke Hall, one of the largest and best in the city. It will cost $25. There will be other expenses connected with the convention, such as printing the programs, advertising, etc. Will you help us a little in raising the amount needed, and thus share in the joy that follows the self-sacrifice required by this reform work?

Send any amount you can spare for this work to me here at Seattle, Wash. Your brother in the war against darkness,

PUSHING THE WORK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., Dec. 24, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am in the town that the historian will record as being the scene of the most terrible flood disaster in the United States. The city has been rebuilt and life moves on as happily as if nothing of the terrible had ever occurred. The city directory reports over one hundred lodges and less than half this number of churches. This is better than some of the cities. The comparison of lodges and churches in many of the cities is three and four to one.

I spoke three times in the German Baptist Brethren church, Rockton. The attendance at their meetings indicated a live interest. My home was with the pastor, Bro. Beer. The friends were kind in helping what they could and subscribing for the Cynosure.

There was a large attendance at my lecture given in the United Bretheran (Liberal) church near Wallaceton, Saturday evening. Sister Ella Reidy, superintendent of a department for the W. C. T. U., arranged for the meetings in this church. The people were not told what my subject would be, but was given the impression that a great speaker was coming. Their curiosity, no doubt, had something to do with the large attendance. When I hung up my chart and began to tell right out in meeting the precious (?) secrets of some who were present, they looked and acted as if they thought they were being tormented before their time. The pastor of the church said he did not know much about secret societies, and had too much to do to think much about them. As it requires much time and great effort for him to collect part of his salary, I concluded that perhaps his strength would be needed in that direction.

He announced at the close of the lecture a canvass was being made in the congregation for a church paper that was to be had for twenty-five cents a year. The canvasser had only secured three subscribers, but wanted more. Sister Reidy undertook the task of raising the collection. Eighty-seven cents was the result. This was thought an uncommonly large collection. I preached in the same church Sabbath morning to a smaller but very attentive audience. The lodge men, I was told, got enough the first night and stayed at home to swear about the speaker.

Sabbath evening, according to previous arrangement, I preached in the M. E. church in town. The pastor, Bro. Glover, did not belong to any secret society, and did not know whether any of his members did or not. He no doubt has learned by this time. I preached directly in opposition to the lodge, and very soon found some of the lodge men in the audience. They would have thought it imprudent to have invited me to preach had they been consulted. We don't naturally like to be told we are wrong. Mrs. Reidy is a good speaker and well informed regarding the lodge. Any friends in Clearfield county or vicinity desiring a strong lecture should invite her to speak.

I reached Johnstown Monday afternoon and found, owing to a misunderstanding, that arrangements were not made for my lectures as expected. There will be many doors open here later. I have canvassed some through the country and neighboring towns and find some Cynosure readers. Many wish to hear lectures. A plan occupying a week or more of my time is being made.

On Tuesday evening I listened to a Mr. Williams who is giving lectures in this section against the Catholics. The meeting was begun, continued and ended without prayer. The subject of the evening was purgatory. The absurdity of this institution was shown and some desirable information given. Much that the speaker said was calculated to educate. The spirit of the meeting was not the best. There were many stories of a ridiculous nature. The story of a poor Irish woman who took in washing to raise $500 to pay the priest to get her husband out of purgatory was told in such a manner as to provoke laughter. Such a thing to the serious thinking mind should produce the opposite feeling. Many statements were made that were not correct.

Mr. Williams claimed that Mr. McKinley was elected by the A. P. A.'s, and that this organization was destined to down the Catholic church in this country. When questioned, he had no proof that the A. P. A.'s elected McKinley. I showed that the presumption was all the other way. No organization opposed the nomination of Mr. McKinley more than the A. P. A. When the evidence shows he was probably elected in spite of them, the wind is let out of this lodge bubble.

I suggested to this friend that it would be better to open his meeting with prayer and manifest more of the spirit of Christ. To introduce one evil in trying to destroy another is to be as foolish as the man who secured large fleas to eat little fleas.

I am to speak in the Mennonite church, Tub, Pa., Saturday evening and Sabbath. Meetings are probably arranged at Myersdale and other points near. How much the light is needed everywhere. Every child of the day should be at work. W. B. STODDARD.

Since the secret orders are becoming more bold and aggressive, every citizen should understand their nature and history, and the character of the men who invent and manage them. How can you get this information better than by subscribing for the Cynosure?

CORRESPONDENCE.

SHOULD CHRIST'S AUTHORITY BE LIMITED?

ESTHER, Pa., Dec. 15, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The following objections were urged by Dr. Ballantine against recognizing Christ's kingly authority and that of the Bible in the United States Constitution, in a debate I recently had with him in my church.

1. That the Bible in no instance recognized Christ as possessing authority over nations, or his law as designed for or suitable to nations under the New Testament. I quoted about twenty passages from the Bible showing that Christ was called "King of kings," "Lord of lords," "Prince of the kings of the earth," "Governor among the nations," and that "all power in heaven and on earth and under the earth had been given him." That this authority and power had been given to him to reward him for his suffering on our behalf, and to qualify him to accomplish the salvation of his people.

To this he replied that it was a misunderstanding of the meaning of these expressions, and an attempt to prove Christ guilty of falsehood, who had said his "Kingdom was not of this world." I answered that his view of the last passage would deny him a kingdom in this world or over it even in the hearts of his people or in the church. It only meant that his kingdom was not of earthly origin or character, but of heaven in both. He admitted that Christ had a kingdom in this world and over men and the church, and that God should be acknowledged.

His second objection was that if one thing was acknowledged then everything else would follow, and then the state would control baptism and all the ordinances of religion. I answered, that if God was acknowledged, as he conceded he should be, then should Christ be acknowledged, as he was the only one by whom God was known or approached or honored; and the Bible, too, as the only way to know God's will. But it did not follow that ecclesiastical affairs should be controlled by the magistrate, for these were not in his sphere, and the Bible itself forbids the magistrate to use these functions as Saul attempted to do and was reproved and rejected.

His third objection was that it was a denominational dogma, and no denomination should be recognized in their views. I answered that it was not properly an ecclesiastical tenet but a matter of political philosophy; and that while Covenanters had early discovered and adopted it, it was by no means confined to them. That it was held by nearly all evangelical bodies and leading thinkers in both church and state. The National Reform Association was composed of many of the ablest men in all the church and by many eminent statesmen.

His fourth objection was that it was a foolish attempt to make God's law more perfect and obligatory, which could not be done. I replied it was a wise and proper attempt to have a perfect law better respected, and one already obligatory upon all, obeyed and enforced.

His fifth objection was that it would lead to papal supremacy, and be a sword of prosecution in their hands against Protestants, and he read to show how powerful and grasping the Pope was already. I answered, the Bible was the best book in the world to prevent or arrest papal doctrine and supremacy, and that it always had been the sword of the Lord's deliverance from papal persecution. It was our secular and unscriptural policy that had developed and was exalting popery in our land at present.

His sixth objection was that civil government was a natural ordinance and must be governed by natural law. I answered that though constituted in nature, the sin of man had destroyed its moral character and rendered it necessary to be put under law to Christ. Man's natural moral capacity was not now sufficient to constitute a healthy, moral ordinance, and that no other foundation but Christ, "the chief corner-stone," could support a moral edifice. As natural men and families need Christ and his law, so do the state.

His seventh objection was that it would constitute the magistrate, instead of the church, the interpreter of the higher law. I answered, that the state by its judiciary had a right to interpret God's law for itself as well as the church through its courts for itself. The divine law for the regulation of civil affairs was not difficult to understand in the light of the Scripture history of nations and of the nation of Israel.

His eighth objection was that while the motives of national reformers were good, that the scheme would fail. Justice Taney had decided that negroes had no rights in this government to be respected, and that God's law would be perverted. I answered that prophecy clearly revealed that the kingdoms of this world would become kingdoms of Christ. Justice Taney was a Catholic, and interpreted the Constitution of the United States truly in that regard, but not the divine law; that he should have known better. At any rate it was safer and better to adopt the divine law than to allow nations to make and interpret their own laws, as the history of nations showed.

The debate lasted two nights, and I had six speeches of thirty minutes and he five speeches. Dr. Ballentine is a man of considerable ability, and is quite conscious of it, and depends largely on his own authority. Yours for Christ and his crown, J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

HOPE FOR THE INDIANS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 23, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The last meeting of the Washington Auxiliary of the Woman's National Indian Association, originally organized by the first wife of Senator Hawley, was made especially interesting by a talk about Indians by Mr. Frank R. Cushing, now connected with the United States Bureau of Ethnology, who spent some years as an adopted member of a tribe of Zuni Indians. Mr. Cushing said that the Indian is the most spiritual-minded being on earth; that he is like a wild flower that by careful cultivation can be made to become a flower of fragrance and beauty; that the Indian's peculiar interpretation of things that he cannot see makes him intensely emotional and religious in his temperament, and closed by declaring that he had yet to meet one person who has lived among them who has not been impressed with the fact that the Indian is like other people, possessing the same longings and passions and ambitions that will make him as good as any other civilized human being, if only the civilization be brought about in the proper way. Miss Cook, of the Indian Bureau, also talked interestingly about Indian legislation, social and domestic affairs.

At a meeting of the Sabbath League of the District of Columbia, held at the Church of the Covenant, addresses were delivered by Bishop Satterlee, Bishop Hurst and Dr. Witman, president of Columbia University, congratulating the ladies of the league on the work they have already done, and urging the necessity for constant and systematic prayer on behalf of the crusade against Sabbath breaking. Declarations of the principles of the league are to be distributed among the congregations of all the churches, and an effort made to increase its membership and influence.

In accordance with its annual custom the District of Columbia W. C. T. U. held a mass meeting at Foundry M. E. church and adopted the following resolutions: "Resolved, That we most earnestly request of each one, to whom this appeal may reach, that they refrain from offering intoxicants of any kind to any one during the coming holidays, and especially upon New Year's day; thus removing temptation from the way of many, and helping to relieve our blessed holiday season from the blight of intoxication." No harm will be done if each of your readers take this as a personal appeal to them. C. A. S.

PRES. BLANCHARD AT NEW ALEXANDRIA.

NEW ALEXANDRIA, Pa., Dec. 19, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—On Monday night, Dec. 14, Miller's Hall, New Alexandria, Pa., was filled with a large audience of intelligent Pennsylvanians who were interested in reform work, and came out to listen to Pres. C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Ill., discuss the lodge question. There were but two days in which to announce the lecture, Sabbath and Monday, but that was enough. The doctor is well known here, and a large audience of the best people in this part of Westmoreland county came out to hear him.

The soil in this part of the country seems to lack that depraved element that develops lodges rather than churches, and an orderly class of people were out who are active in Christian work. We have no lodges in New Alexandria; morality runs high and the lodge spirit runs low; therefore the people gave Pres. Blanchard a full house and a royal welcome, and he gave them a most inspiring lecture. The speaker first presented the power of the Holy Spirit as necessary to every department of the Christian life. With the operations of the Holy Spirit were contrasted the various workings of the lodge spirit; how in every instance its "charity," "morality," "fellowship" and "religion" antagonize the Holy Spirit, and what the Christian's duty is in relation to the lodge.

In his powerful manner of presenting truth, Pres. Blanchard resembles the late Dr. A. M. Milligan, who was once pastor of the Covenanter congregation in this village, whose memory is venerated throughout this whole community. Being dead he yet speaks, and the influence that survives his work had much to do in gathering the large audience in the hall to hear Pres. Blanchard speak on a subject that was ever dear to Dr. Milligan. For he was a foe to the immorality, selfishness and pagan religion of the lodge.

R. J. GAULT.

THE LODGE AND THE SALOON.

FOURTEENTH LETTER.

BLANCHARD, Ia., Dec. 21, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This is the last letter with regard to our battle with the lodge-saloon in this place. We do not mean by this that we have reached the close of the war; we only mean that nothing of special importance has happened since the events related in the last letter. We realize that "eternal vigilance" is the price of liberty here as well as elsewhere, and in other reforms. I expect this to be true even in millennium times.

Some people are looking for a millennium where all evil and temptation shall be removed so far from us that all we will have to do will be to eat and drink and sleep and shout halleluiah between times. But I am looking for a millennium where people shall be so actively engaged in doing good and defending right that no evil will be able to lift its head without having it crushed; yea, "all evil shall as ashamed hide its head."

Let us sum up the results of the battle thus far:

1. As to losses, in money, property and time, they have been about equal on both sides. As we have already intimated it would take some thousands of dollars to cover the losses in these respects. But this covers all the loss on the side of temperance, while our lodge druggist has lost his business, his good name and the respect of the community, and even his high standing in his lodge He has not been seen in our community since the insurance trial. The lodge also has lost some of its grip, although it is struggling hard, with the aid of the M. E pastor, to hold up its head. We are satisfied that a little more union effort on the part of the good people along all the lines on which they could unite would cause the lodge almost to hide its head.

2. As to gains: (a.) The greatest gain I think has been in knowledge and experience on the part of the good people. They have learned of the awful character of the lodge and saloon as never before. They have learned that there is nothing too vile or terrible for them to do if they can thereby accomplish their ends. (b.) We have a temperance town, notwithstanding the fact that it is situated on the line between Missouri and Iowa, and there is a good chance to smuggle in intoxicants. Drinking and drunkenness are reduced to a minimum on our streets. Even our livery barn, which was once the very center of debauchery, has passed into the hands of a young man who has character and daring enough to drive away the liquor fiend. Many of the old drinkers have left our town. One of them told me that the town was too dry and dead for him. (c.) We have comparative peace and quiet in our community, and we know whence it comes. When I began to write these letters the lodge men raised a howl, and tried to pose as the good respectable guardians of our peace and quiet; but a single, brief reply led them to adopt their old tactics of silence. There is one line in which lodge men seem to be extremely foolish. They seem to imagine that because they belong to a secret lodge, all their evil is hidden away, and they insist that it can't be seen or known nor even revealed without perjury; while all their good is made heavenly bright. But the world even knows that they are but men; yea, the best of them are but weak, deluded men, tickled with the claptrap of a lodge, in comparison with which a baby's rattle would be a hundred times more honorable.

In closing let me thank all the friends who have taken an interest in my story. I trust that it has helped them to be on their guard against the lodge, for if we ever lose our liberties in this land it will be at the hands of the lodge. If ever fire and sword sweep over this land it will be at the hands of lodge men. There isn't an evil passion of the human heart that is not matured in the lodge.

If I read history aright the lodge principle has taken the lead in all the evils that have cursed our race. The single individual has not succeeded in doing much evil, but evil men banded together by secret oaths have been the terror of mankind. On the other hand the single good man has done much for his fellowmen, and in open honorable organization much good has been accomplished, while no good has ever come from secret works of darkness. J. R. WYLIE.

MICHIGAN GREETS NEW YORK.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 7, 1896.

W. I. PHILLIPS, GEN. SEC.:—I write you a few lines to inform you where I am and what I am doing. I left Michigan, Nov. 18th, to come here to see my daughter and work for the Lord. I have made calls on the pastors and others with our books and papers. I have found preachers here that are Freemasons, and they do not care to have anything said against secret societies, but God helps me to hold their attention to the evil while I show them that the responsibility rests on them as to where they are leading the people. I had a sharp debate with one Rev. Albertson, the most popular M. E. preacher of Buffalo. [This pastor while at Jamestown visited Buffalo, with a number of his neighbors, to take higher degrees and enjoy a wine banquet; his eloquence at the banquet is said to have insured his call to Buffalo. He returned to Jamestown on Sabbath morning to fill his pulpit appointment.—Editor.] The Masons had held him up before me as a good as well as great man and Freemason, so I took pains to hunt him out.

I first tried to get him to take the Cynosure; he quickly answered, no. I then tried the Lodge Lamp, but received the same answer. I then told him what Stephen Merritt, the great evangelist of New York City, had said, but he did not seem to think that Bro. Merritt was a very good guide. I then showed up the books which I had on different orders. When he found out that I had been a Freemason he said he did not wish to converse with me longer. I then asked him if he thought God would have him obligate himself in the way that he had done, but he said his time was too important to talk with me. I still held his attention, and told him that it was the thought that the preachers were Masons that had led me to become one, and I told him how strong and zealous a Mason I was, and how God required me to give it up before he would pardon my sins and give me peace. He said his time was too precious to talk to me. I then told him that Stephen Merritt said that it was the good men and preachers who were making it a delusion and snare to others. I feel that God blesses my soul as I walk in the light that he gave me when he took the hoodwink off from my eyes. Bless God, oh my soul.

I have sold some books, but not many. The people complain of hard times. I have a few names for the Lodge Lamp. I went to Monroe Co. last Monday from which place I moved forty-two years ago to Michigan. At my old home I gave a talk at the Free Methodist church and had a very good attendance. I took the opportunity to tell the people what God had saved me from, and what he had done for my soul since I left this place so many years ago. I took one subscription for the Cynosure and a few for the Lodge Lamp.

Here in Buffalo I had an opportunity to speak in the old people's Bible class, and the subject was that of Solomon's sins and his being unequally yoked together with unbelievers. I told them how I used to look on Christian people who were lodge members with me, and it opened their eyes as well as ears to here me tell what we went through with in the lodge. I showed them that the religion of Freemasonry was a false one. One woman said that she had thought of joining them; another said her husband was a Knight Templar, and that he had heard of me and wanted to talk with me. His wife is a good Christian woman. I am to go with my daughter to-morrow night to see them, and I pray God to open his eyes so that he may have the peace of God. I shall soon work toward home.

JASPER J. TUCKER.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

J. C. YOUNG, Nov. 14, '96, DE GOLIA, PA.—The next thing to having with you the bodily presence of another hater of all shams and wickedness is to know that at the time of your convention you will have his prayers and sincere sympathy. I am greatful to God that my heart is with you as you deliberate and plan for the many who are now blindly living double lives, the apparent lives of freemen, but whose secret oaths and obligations bind them to a master with fetters strong as iron, causing them, when brothers (?) put them to the test, to be aliens to our laws, perjurers to their oaths as jurors, untrue to their families and to their church covenants.

If you are not already conversant with us as a people, our worthy secretary can tell you what lodgery and its jacks have done to us. I would to God our country had a hundred and fifty Stoddards, each having your ability, force and fearlessness. I think many places could then be found where a latent force awaits a leader to enliven and enthuse for God in this special branch of the work. I would be glad to help you bear your expenses, but every dime in that direction means a dime diverted from our worthy pastor, whose whole salary for the past conference year was only $180. I asked our last Annual Conference to appropriate $25 of missionary money to one of our ministers who has a wife and children and had only received $65 for a year's work. But it was refused because $65 was above the average salary received, and our missionary treasury did not have money enough to give to the others.

I think we have brethren that know what opposition to lodgery costs them; and yet, thank God, they are still at it; their motto being "No compromise with the god of this world." Brethren, while you beseech the Throne of Grace, please mention ths United Brethren in Christ; we are with you in this anti-secrecy war. May the time soon come when multitudes will know there is a force in the land striking at the root of this lodge incubus, and that they have courage to come to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

REV. CHARLES E. TEMPLE, Nov. 13, '96, BROOKWAYVILLE, PA.—I have a great desire to meet with and enjoy the company and fellowship of the witnesses of Jesus in their conflict with the power of darkness. We wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. The church is corrupted and paralyzed by secret societies. Ministers and members are ensnared and entrapped into unholy and Christless alliance with secret fraternities. The attempt to serve God and Mammon is made in the church. In the sacred desk are those who have fellowship and communion with infidels, atheists, Jews, the ungodly, the worldling, the unbeliever and the scoffer; disregarding the admonition, "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing."

No wonder there is coldness and deadness in the church, and the voice of testimony in many pulpits of our land is never heard. "Iniquity abounds and the love of many waxes cold. Truth has fallen in our streets and equity cannot enter." Courts are corrupted; our civil offices are filled almost entirely by Masons and Odd-fellows; and unless the signs and grips can be given by the candidate he has no chance of election, and need not start in the race.

This is so patent that young men flock into the secret fraternities, and turn their backs on the church of Christ. They make a religion of lodge ceremonies until the church is made up largely of women and old men. It may be truly said of almost every town in our land, they are lodge cursed, as a good M. E. brother minister was wont to say of this town in years gone by. Their name is legion for they are many. Stealthy and persistent in their efforts to secure office and place for each other, until both church and state are well nigh under their control. Doctors of divinity, bishops, elders and members are deluded and seduced. Souls are endangered and ruined The foundations of society are felt to be shaken. Thanks be unto God, a voice of testimony is heard. God has reserved to himself seven thousand who have not bowed the knee to Baal nor kissed his image.

My prayer shall be that the presence of God may be felt in the convention; that your hands may be strengthened and your hearts encouraged; that the spirit of the living God may be poured out on those who assemble and the trumpet may give a certain sound, and that the people of God prepare themselves for the coming conflict. Be valiant for the truth upon the earth looking to the God of truth for victory. I feel that we are nearing a great crisis. The dragon has great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time. Christ was manifest to destroy the works of the devil; the issue is not doubtful.

JOHN S. WHITE, Nov. 13, '96, STEELTON, PA.—I not only sympathize heartily with the Pennsylvania Anti-secret Convention, but my heart yearns to be with you, to get instruction and inspiration from the men of God who will throw the X rays of God's eternal truth through the body of lodgery to discover the spinal chord ingeniously constructed by the arch enemy of souls. It contains elders and unbelievers, deacons and sorcerers, Sunday-school teachers and liars, deceivers with a hollow prayer book to make it all look right. One of their claims is to keep the Bible from being destroyed. Jesus says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away but my words shall not pass away." Peter says, "The Word of God liveth, abideth and endureth forever." John says, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God." They have a higher work than the church or even angels in taking care of God.

One would suppose that when God directed those two cows with their calves shut up at home (1 Sam. 6-10) to draw the new cart on which was placed the ark of the covenant and to take the exact road from the Philistines' country to Israel, he never thought that in the nineteenth century men would have to organize to take care of him. These American orders follow their Bibles so closely that they must reject all foreign born, no matter how much they love our Saviour. God says in Lev. 19: 33,34: "And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him. But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God." Jesus says, "I was a stranger and ye took me in." How unfortunate Jesus would be if here now in the flesh. Being born away off in Bethlehem of Judea he would not be able to join in such a good Bible work. How much Paul must have been mistaken when he told the Ephesians, "Now, therefore, ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God." How un-American he was to tell the Colossians that "there is neither Greek nor Jew, barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all and in all."

Peter should surely be turned down for saying, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." And God himself should be censured for saying, in Deut. 11:12, that he cared for the land of Israel, and that his eyes are always upon it from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year, and for not paying special attention to America.

A very wicked Odd-fellow told me they were rehearsing the actions of Jonathan and David. I suppose if the Lord rejects him at the gate of heaven he will get Jonathan and David to use their influence to get him in. The Redmen are busy making Indians out of Americans; and if their Bible is right, a petition should be circulated and presented to President Cleveland to use his influence to stop the government work at Carlisle of civilizing and Amercanizing Indians.

ENGRAVED DIAMONDS.

How to Obtain Satisfactory Results—Some Notable Samples.

It was long believed that the diamond could not be engraved with safety or satisfactory results, but a contemporary says that a few stones roughly engraved were found in India and a diamond was exhibited at the Paris exposition of 1878 on which a portrait of the king of Holland was scratched. But the work was very imperfect. Some of the finest examples of engraving on diamonds are the work of a Paris jeweler. One is a certain scarfpin, representing a yataghan, of which the blade is a slender diamond and the handle is a ruby. Another is a large circular stone on which a pansy, with its foliage, is engraved, and in a third case the design is a knife made with two diamonds. An elaborate piece of work is a bicycle, of which the wheels are two circular diamonds. The spokes are represented by lines engraved on the diamonds. A small hole is pierced at each angle. Another diamond is carved like a fish. A handsome brooch is a scarabæus surrounded by sapphires and brilliants. The most remarkable is a ring made of one diamond, the interior surface being polished and the exterior elaborately engraved. It is said that there is nothing similar to this in existence. Other examples are brooches representing flies of which the wings are thin, engraved diamonds, two diamonds engraved with armorial bearings, the imperial arms of Russia, being used in one instance on shirt and cuff buttons. Formerly it was only possible to produce the polish on flat surfaces, but M. Bodinet has been able to do this on concave portions, as on the body and tail of the fish and the interior of the ring. His tools produce not only straight lines, as in the wheels, the racket and the flies' wings, but a free modeling, as in the pansy, the Russian arms and the scarabæus. He has invented these tools himself and intends that his son alone shall have the use of them. They are exceedingly delicate and difficult to handle. He has spent 25 years bringing them to perfection.

How to Make Chocolate Tartlets.

Make some small pastry cases and fill with the following pastry cream: Mix the yolks of three eggs with a spoonful of sifted flour; then add gradually three-quarters of a pint of boiling milk and a little salt. Stir all together over the fire until it begins to thicken and sticks to the spoon. Heat and skim well 2 ounces of fresh butter, stirring till it ceases to hiss; then leave it to color a little. Stir it into the custard with 2 ounces of grated chocolate, an ounce sifted sugar and 2 ounces of crushed macaroons. This may be used either hot or cold.

How to Care For the Children's Hair.

If mothers would give more thought to the welfare of their children's hair than to its beauty for the moment, our daughters would have luxuriant hair at an age when the majority of the sex are mourning over the loss of it. It is best to keep girls with short hair like a boy's till the age of 10 or 12; then it should grow naturally. If it be straight, let it remain so, being only confined into one loose plait at night unspoiled by curling. On the score of cleanliness, too, it is good to keep a child's hair short, thus enabling it to receive a thorough and constant washing. Besides the other reasons for keeping the hair short, much pain is saved, as there are no tangled tresses to be combed out constantly. There was a large family of sisters who were very strong and active, but who had very little hair, with one exception. Upon inquiring the cause, it was found that they had been very free of the usual childish ailments, etc., and they had, as children, all had good heads of hair except one, who had worn hers like a boy till the age of 13 years. It is needless to tell you that the present possessor of good hair is the one sister who had it kept short for so long.

How to Make a Savory Dish.

Make square boxes with note paper, or they may be bought at the confectioner's, put a small lump of butter and a little chopped parsley in each, place them on a hot tin plate, break an egg in each, sprinkle over the top grated cheese and bread crumbs, with pepper and salt to taste. Bake in a hot oven for three minutes or until the eggs are set. Grated cheese alone cooked and served in this manner is very popular and highly savory.

How to Tell a Horse's Age.

"The popular idea that the age of a horse can always be told by looking at his teeth," said a veterinary surgeon, "is not entirely correct. After the eighth year the horse has no more new teeth, so that the tooth method is useless for telling the age of a horse which is more than 8 years old. As soon as the set of teeth is complete, however, a wrinkle begins to appear on the upper edge of the lower eyelid, and a new wrinkle is added each year, so that to get at the age of a horse more than 8 years old you must figure the teeth plus the wrinkles."

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1896.

WHAT THE LODGE COSTS THE PEOPLE.

In addition to the millions imposed by secret lodges in the shape of initiation fees, dues, fraudulent insurance, tinsel and display, there is a large additional expense as the result of the favoritism of the lodge in manipulating public works whose cost rests upon the people. An illustration of this is the case of the erection of a public school building in Philadelphia.

The Public Ledger of that city gives in its issue of Dec. 16, the testimony of Frederick J. Amweg, a builder, who testified before the Senate Building Committee that Superintendent Binder, of the Branford Granite Company, of Maine, gave him to understand that, unless he agreed to use Branford stone, he would not get the contract for building the annex to the Central High School. He did not so agree, and, although he was the lowest bidder, another was given the contract. Another witness testified that Binder had been offered $1,000 to leave the city so as not to appear before the committee. When called to the stand Binder said he was under a "Masonic obligation" not to say anything relating to the subject.

The facts are brought out in a lengthy report in the Ledger that the State Building Committee was controled by Freemasons, and were determined to award the contract for supplying the stone to a Masonic firm known as the Branford Granite Co., of Maine. The committee had in charge the erection of a number of public school buildings, and were in the habit of awarding the contracts, not to the lowest bidder but to the one who would bind himself to get the material from the Masonic company. Mr. Amweg in one case said his bid was the lowest by $7,200, but before the award was made Supt. Binder, of the Branford Granite Co., of Maine, called upon him and gave him to understand that unless he agreed to use Branford granite he would not get the contract.

The matter was tried before a Senatorial Investigating Committee, and a part of Supt. Binder's testimony was as follows:

"Is it not true that you told two persons that you had been offered $1,000 not to testify before this committee?"

"I positively decline to answer that question. It would imply a breach of confidence."

"Confidence between you and whom?"

"Between myself and another party. I am under a solemn obligation as binding as anything we hold sacred. I mean a Masonic obligation."

"You decline to answer whether or not you said that?"

"If I answer at all I will say that I did not say so."

"Was it or not a fact that some one did offer you $1,000 not to testify?"

"If I should answer the question I should lie."

Mr. Pettit did not press the matter any further, and the witness was allowed to withdraw.

MASONRY AS IT IS.

Freemasons bind themselves under the most horrible oaths to do certain things. If they fail to do these things they by oath bind themselves to inflict, or have inflicted upon themselves, death penalties in the most horrible manner known in the history of the world. How can such conduct be possible in this age of the world? It is a shock to civilization. If there be an utterance of antagonism, there will come a whispered hush, it is dangerous.

If Masons hear of your antagonism they are sworn to injure you in every conceivable way. The wife will say to the husband, you will injure our children in the public schools, for the directors are Masons and the principal is a Mason, and they will discriminate against our children. They are under a horrible oath connecting them, and binding them to do certain things in the exclusive interest of Masons and to injure those who may oppose them for conscience sake. Can there be a more deplorable state of affairs than this?

This is a literal presentation of the truth. No intelligent and conscientious person who knows anything about Freemasonry dare call it in question. It is the very vehicle of secret slander. It is the hiding-place for the seducer. The place for keeping secret murder and treason when committed by a certain class. How can such an infamy be sufficiently anathematized? Is there not some chosen curse, red with uncommon wrath, to blast the fearful monster? Is not truth with the drawn sword of justice pledged to exterminate such an insolent and wicked lie?

Is not the host of righteousness marshaled for a final onslaught upon this hyrda-headed monster which is as heartless as Nero and as cruel as death? It is absolutely beyond the pale of human charity and civil compassion. It is not entitled to any permanent place in civilization. If you intimate to a Freemason that he is bound by his oath, he will try to have you understand that he is not.

If you say to him he is not bound by his oath in morals or civil jurisprudence he will try to have you believe that you are the criminal for intimating that he is not bound by his oath morally or civilly. What must be the conscience of the man claiming that he is morally and civilly bound by his Masonic oaths? Freemasonry, known just as it is, is a most horrible depravity and should be exterminated.

AN ATTEMPT TO BREAK A WILL.

MANY MASONIC INTERESTS AT STAKE.

The Boston Advertiser, of Dec. 1st, says an attempt will be made to break the will of the late J. H. Collamore, which will interest, not only his friends, but the Masonic fraternity at large. J. H. Collamore died Nov. 3, leaving a large fortune. This he distributed by will to certain members of his immediate family, and to various Masonic bodies.

He was one of the foremost Masons in New England. His interest in Masonry had been marked for many years, and he had attained the summit of Masonic advancement, the 33d degree.

His gifts to Masonic enterprises and charities had always been liberal, many of his beneficences taking the form of burial lots, and monuments for the various bodies in whom he was interested. The will of Mr. Collamore provides briefly that, after several minor bequests, $500 each shall be given to Masonic bodies; that $50,000 shall be given as a trust fund for Masonic education and charity.

Besides these bodies there is interested the Masonic Education and Charity Trust, which is the custodian of the $50,000 J. H. Collamore trust fund. The persons who are interested in the attempt to break the will are the children of G. W. Collamore, a brother of J. H. Collamore, who are cut off by the will with a $5 note each.

LET THE AGITATION GO ON.

The lodge question is being more and more discussed by ministerial associations and others, as the following from the Syracuse (N. Y.) Standard will illustrate:

"A paper read by Rev. Herbert A. Manchester on 'The Christian Minister and Fraternal and Benevolent Societies' at the meeting of the Ministerial Association, Dec. 14th, provoked a rather warm discussion among the ministers. Mr. Manchester considered that the attitude of the secret orders to the Christian church and ministers was that of respect.

"At the close of Mr. Manchester's paper, Rev. Jeremiah Zimmerman, in a brief address, commended the paper and told of the great amount of charitable work which the secret orders do. He said that fraternal organizations helped to destroy bigotry. 'I have been a Mason for several years,' said he, 'and have found that the teachings and practices of the order are not at all opposed to the Christian religion, as is popularly supposed.'

"At this point Rev. J. W. Knappenberger took occasion to disagree with the expressions of Mr. Zimmerman. He objected to the Masons because there was no religion in the order. 'Why, in the Blue Lodge,' said Mr. Knappenberger, 'they won't allow you to mention the name of Christ in prayer.'

"'When a man takes the first degree in Masonry,' continued Mr. Zimmerman, 'he is taught that henceforth the Bible must be his guide and authority. There is nothing in the oath he takes which conflicts with his duty to his family, his country and his God. I have never heard a suggestion or an implication in Masonry that the members were to aid a Mason opposed to somebody else.'

"Mr. Knappenberger found fault with the funeral services of the Masons and designated them as a hollow mockery. Rev. J. B. Kenyon said that he had attended Masonic funerals and at a certain point had been asked to step aside. He considered this as a 'belittlement.' There was a short general discussion of the subject which was called to a halt by the president and no decided action was taken."

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

The Evangelical Alliance for the United States has been in existence for many years. It represents the spiritual oneness of believers, cultivates fellowship and co-operation between different churches, defends liberty of conscience and pleads for applied Christianity.

One excellent feature, and the best feature of its work, has been to unite Christians in meetings during the week of prayer, which is the first full week of January. It occurs next on Jan. 4-9, 1897, and will begin next Monday evening. The subjects of special prayer prescribed for each evening are as follows:

Monday, Jan. 4, Humiliation and Thanksgiving.
Tuesday, Jan. 5, The Church Universal.
Wednesday, Jan. 6, Nations and their Rulers.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. H. D. Whitcomb of Bloomington called at our office Monday.

—Prof. J. M. Coleman, of Geneva College, Pa., was a welcome caller at our office last week.

—Gen. Secretary W. I. Phillips is in Georgia this week on N. C. A. business. He will visit various points South before returning.

—Director J. M. Hitchcock called at the Cynosure office last week. His family had been quarantined on account of diphtheria, but all have recovered.

—Rev. J. B. Galloway, of Poynette, Wis., writes: "The weekly visits of the Cynosure are like letters from a good friend—an inspiration to faithful effort on all lines of Gospel work."

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard writes: "When I do not criticise the Cynosure please consider it a compliment to the editor, and an assurance that I think it is holding its own and steadily improving."

—Rev. N. R. Johnston, of Oakland, writes: "I commend you and the Cynosure that you are making a power for good to the favor of Him who promises, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."

—Rev. Chas. E. Temple, Brockwayville, Pa., writes: "I would like very much to see a convention held in Brookville, our county-seat, next year. Some friends of truth are in that vicinity whose hands would be strengthened, and some inroad might be made on Satan's empire."

—Bro. M. N. Butler is pouring some very wholesome truth on the secret society question into the ear of the Catholic church through the medium of a series of valuable letters he is writink in the Kansas City Catholic. They are written in Bro. Butler's clearest and most demonstrative style.

—Rev. Sam'l F. Porter, who is spending the winter at Oberlin, Ohio, has been quite busy circulating literature sent him by the N. C. A. He has secured the co-operation of a number of the theological students and seniors in Oberlin College in putting this literature into the hands of students and others.

—Mrs. C. K. Wood, of Rhodes, Ia., in sending her renewal for the Cynosure and for some anti-secret literature, adds: "There are some strong anti-secret people here who will not pay a secret society minister. Oh, that the time was come when the people would not elect any member of a secret society to civil office. How sad that we have elected a President who is a member of so many secret societies. I send my paper, after reading, to others who will read it."

—Rev. P. B. Williams in a late note from Seattle says: "I think our convention will be held in the Ranke Hall. Pray for me that this may be what I am anticipating, the very best convention yet held on the coast. I spoke last night in the Swedish Lutheran church, and to-night I speak in the Reformed Presbyterian."

—An exchange says: "If a rat has any human nature about it, the first thing it does when caught in a trap is to extol the cheese on the bait to its kin outside." There is a great deal of this human nature about Freemasonry. Outsiders are invited into the lodge trap not only by words, but also by its display of feathers and processions. Misery likes company.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard says in a private note from Johnstown, Pa.: "Picture to yourself a man in a blinding snow-storm, two miles from town, on foot, with a heavy valise slipping down on the side hill occasionally, and you have my photo Tuesday afternoon. I am still here alive and well. Surely I should thank God and take courage. There is a splendid field here. Many waiting to be led to the promised land."

—A movement that promises very much for Chicago is a monthly noon-hour meeting in Willard Hall on the first Monday of each month in the interests of the Christian Citizenship League. The first meeting will be next Monday, Jan. 4th, at the noon hour. It will be opened by some prominent leader of the movement, after which there will be a free parliament for the discussion of Christian politics. Let all who can, plan to attend.

—Rev. W. O. Dinius, one of our directors, is making his home at Huntington, Ind., for the winter. He writes: "We are in the midst of a good revival. About a score are saved and twelve have united with us in church fellowship. I find quite a strong sentiment here in favor of 'divine healing,' a number having been healed by faith in Jesus. I believe I am the only minister who preaches it, although we have plenty of churches and about 13,000 inhabitants."

—Prof. Lewis Johnston, principal of the Mary Allen Institute at Pine Bluff, Ark., is the author of a 130-page booklet of pretty poems entitled, "Words of Consolation." They were written during the author's busy life as student, missionary and teacher; most of them, as the title indicates, were designed to cheer and comfort the afflicted and bereaved. The book demands a reading because of its true poetic merit, besides being embellished with fine cuts of the author, his wife, father and mother.

—Mrs. Emma B. Ross, of East Longmeadow, Mass., writes: "I am interested in this work and wish I were able to help in some way more than I can, but I have circulated many tracts and papers, and my prayers are for the success of the N. C. A. I am an interested reader of the Cynosure and Lodge Lamp, and I do praise the Lord that there are so many fearless exponents of the truth. May the Lord protect all of the workers from the wrath of the enemy. We have a mighty foe, but "Greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world."

—Mrs. Daniel Powers of the Beacon Light, 1231 W. Dauphin St., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "Our last meeting was addressed for two hours by a seceding Royal Arch Mason of this city. He worked the Blue Lodge and chapter degrees to the merriment and amazement of an appreciative audience. He was awakened and delivered from lodge bondage through reading the Cynosure in the Y. M. C. A. reading rooms. He said the testimony of such Bible scholars as Pres. Blanchard, Pres. Finney, Bro. Ronayne and Joseph Cook convicted him and convinced him of his error. He would give the wealth of a Vanderbilt if he had never joined the lodge, and wishes he could blot the whole business from his memory."

—Mrs. Sarah T. Reed, of White Creek, Wis., in her seventy-seventh year, writes us this testimony: "In sending my subscription for the Cynosure I will say we have read it ever since its first publication, and have taken a deep interest in the cause it advocates. My childhood home was in Livingstone county, N. Y. I remember the excitement caused by the taking off of Morgan. My husband, Calvin E. Reed, died the ninth of May, 1895, after a long and painful sickness. I should have sent a notice to the Cynosure ere this. I am the only person here who takes any interest in the anti-secret cause. Secret societies are increasing and flourishing. There is only one minister in the place and he goes with the lodge. During the forty years we have been residents here we never knew Christianity to be so feeble. We had years ago some anti-secret lectures here, but I do not think it would be safe for anyone to lecture here now on that subject. Unless we can have a revival of true Christianity, which we are earnestly praying for, our country is doomed."

ATTENTION, MINNESOTA!

The date of your annual State convention in the interests of the anti-secret movement is Feb. 23, 24. It will meet at Willmar, the Kandiyohi county seat, about 100 miles west of Minneapolis. Will not every friend of the cause in the State work for the success of this convention?

1. Try to have a collection taken up in your church and send the amount to Treasurer W. I. Phillips, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. He will see that it all goes to aid your State agent, Rev. Wm. Fenton.

2. Write to Rev. Wm. Fenton, 74 S. Robert St., St. Paul, Minn., telling him of your sympathy for the cause and the condition of the work in your vicinity.

3. Pray earnestly that this convention may be a powerful testimony for the truth.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON.

BY REV. J. B. GALLOWAY.

TEXT—"In My Name," John 16:24.

In the study of the Word, we must take into account the dispensation to which it belongs. In this case the change of dispensation was about to take place. The rotary, changeable priesthood was about to give way to the permanent, unchangeable priesthood of Jesus the Christ. "Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; be asking and ye shall receive."

"In my name." This we may say is the keystone of the arch of orthodox worship. There is one God and one Mediator between God and men; the man Christ Jesus, between God and nations as well. "No man or nation cometh unto the Father but by me." In this lies the controversy of the ages. This is the contention between the true church of Christ and all other forms of religion, Unitarian, Mohammedan, Jewish or Masonic, which are alike persistent in denying the necessity of the only Mediator.

On this principle Jews and others are finding fault with Pres. Cleveland's Thanksgiving Proclamation. On the part of Jews, at least, this is a glaring inconsistency; for they have always been taught the principle of Mediatorship. What was their High Priest but a Mediator for the nation as he entered the Most Holy Place once a year, not without blood for his own sins and the sins of the people.

1. Then this is a most important text, with regard to the testimony we are called to bear; for, when we insist that all acceptable prayer or worship must be in the name of Jesus the Christ, we are confronted with the argument that Old Testament prayers, and even the Lord's Prayer, is Christless. We do not need to argue this point, though we might successfully do so; for in reality no one can call God Father but through Christ. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus."

But aside from this we have in our text the direct teaching of Christ on this all-important subject, a final word that should silence all cavil.

2. This leads us to notice that when the fullness of time was come, there was a remodeling of the law in regard to ordinances. The Lord's Supper was instituted to take the place of the Passover till the Lord comes; Christ was about to be enthroned as Mediator. The old priesthood with its ceremonial laws was now to pass away. The one offering, by which we are sanctified forever, was about to be made, and all power in heaven and earth given to the triumphant Lord.

The dispensations overlap each other. In reality the old continued until Christ died and rose. He lived under it and observed all its ordinances even to the last Passover in absolute perfectness. The Lord's Prayer, therefore, belonged to the former dispensation; and this accounts for this name not being distinctly in it. We are now to walk in the light and power of our risen Lord.

3. His name is mighty. It is all prevailing. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my nome he will give it you." His name must be recognized. Everything depends upon it. Prayer is virtually a contract, and a contract must be drawn according to law, and the law is "In my name." For what is a contract worth without the names of the contracting parties?

A contract or note may be ever so beautiful and perfect, but without the names of the contracting parties it is simply a worthless blank. Just so with our prayers; they may be long and beautiful, but if the triune God and the sincere petitioner is not in them, they are worthless blanks. No wonder that so many prayers are not answered.

In the departments at Washington, it is the duty of officers to see that all employes pay their debts. During Jackson's administration there was a certain clerk who failed to pay his board bills. He would give his note, but his name was not good and these notes were always protested. His landlady in her perplexity went to the President. He heard her story and his eyes began to snap and he said, "Your cause is just and the bill should be paid. I will tell you what to do. Go to him and get a note for the full amount, then come to me." She had no trouble in getting the note, which she brought to him. He looked at it, then taking his pen wrote in the proper place the name Andrew Jackson. "Now," he said, "we shall see who will pay you the money, he, or I." It is needless to say that the note was paid, and the clerk came and apologized to the President for his conduct.

But the name of our Intercessor is greater than that of any President.

"All kings before Him down shall fall;
All nations shall his laws obey.
His name forever shall endure;
Last like the sun it shall.
Men shall be blessed in him
And blessed all nations shall him call."

Brethren, in his name we shall conquer. All the opposing powers of darkness shall wither before the brightness of his presence, and fly before the great storms that shall be round about him. Let us be asking and working in his name, that we may receive and our joy be full.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

A YOUNG SOUTHERN GIRL WHO WRITES CLEVER VERSE.

Woman's Responsibilities — Don't Muffle the Throat — The Woman Drummer. Black Trimmed Lingerie — Miss Ellen Key—Hints In Season.

It seems to me the most graceful sentiment expressed in poetry for the past few years by an American girl has come from the charmed pen of Miss Jean Wright of Louisville. Her verse has been frequently set to music, and I have had several requests of late for knowledge as to her personality.

She is a southern girl, born in Louisville, where she still lives. She has been writing in verse since childhood, and her talent has improved each year. Aside from the original ideas which find expression in her poems she has an unusual faculty of translation, and, while this part of her work is not sufficiently numerous to speak finally of her eventual success in this ambition, several of her translations are considered exceedingly clever.

All of Miss Wright's work is noticeable for a lack of the amateurish and is surprisingly marked by a certain moderation and finish one would only expect in an older writer. She combines all a true southerner's love for the beauty in nature with a girl's natural touch of lightness and fancy, clearly suggested in a "June Song," a part of which is:

Oh, lovely June, thy ripening fields and woods,
Thy birds and butterflies and bees,
Thy sunny mornings and thy starry nights,
The secret south wind in thy trees,
Bring to me only vague regret.
Oh, lovely June, could I forget!

Last winter Miss Wright spent much time in translating several selections from Heine that were to be set to music by a clever young composer of Louisville, John Ford Barbour. He died before the manuscript had been published but, fortunately, it was in a finished state, and a Chicago publisher will bring out the five songs.

Miss Wright inherits much of her literary taste from General William Butler, her great-uncle, who was one of Kentucky's early soldier poets. Her father is General J. M. Wright, one of the brilliant officers of the civil war and now marshal of the United States supreme court. Her mother is a daughter of Dr. Ewing. She is surrounded by all the delights of a happy home life, and so far none of the cynical thoughts common to young poets has crept into her writing, which makes it singularly refreshing.

As a translator from the French Miss Wright shows a facile pen, and as she speaks this as well as several other languages fluently she may be counted among the few feminine linguists America owns. All comes naturally to her, for, while she works the usual number of hours, she is a devotee of social life and one of the favorites of the gay set of Louisville. She knows something of music and loves it next to her own talent of writing. In fact, she is just the ordinary lovable southern girl, with an unusual allowance of the intellectual. She is petite in figure, with brown eyes and short, curly hair, clear complexion and a bright, happy disposition. She is pretty, according to the general verdict, but she is even more interesting than that.—Cor. Chicago Times-Herald.

Woman's Responsibilities.

Mrs. Jean Brooks Greenleaf of Rochester was seen by a reporter recently, and, asked for her opinion on woman's responsibilities at the present time, she replied:

"That citizens of a republic have devolving upon them duties of greater moment than those which devolve upon people of a different form of government none will deny. Under an absolute monarchy submission to law only is required and the exercise of a restricted franchise, in addition to submission, if the monarchy be limited. In a true republic, on the other hand, the governing force is in the people themselves, who must choose for and from themselves the rulers who they decide will best understand and carry out their wishes. The people, therefore, are responsible, individually and collectively, for good or bad governmental conditions. How important, then, that the franchise should be exercised in a thoughtful, intelligent manner; that the well being of all classes of citizens should be considered; that the conditions most favorable for the formative period of the rising generation should be closely studied; that the citizens of the future should be fitted in their turn to assume the grand responsibilities of self government.

"Under these circumstances can one portion of the people decide what is best for another portion of the people who have no voice or participation in the selection of rulers or the formation of the laws under which they live and yet have the government express the will of the people? Is it not wrong to style such a government republican or democratic in this country, where, while both sexes are accounted citizens and are such in a sense, to only one sex, the male, has the right of franchise been accorded, except in a limited degree and in favored localities?

"The effect is that the dominant sex is often unwittingly unjust to the subservient class and overlooks its needs, not understanding them. The sex dominated either submits hopelessly to injustice, seeks to win its way by finesse, cherishes a bitter but repressed sort of insubordination or openly seeks to change existing conditions. Any one of the first three methods is degrading to the self respect and dignity of woman, while the last puts her in a position of seeming antagonism to the sex with whom she should be in accord. As home makers and keepers, as largely the trainers of the youth of the land in mental, moral and physical development, as wage earners, taxpayers, actors on nearly every stage occupied by men, have women no responsibility in the upbuilding and evolution of this republic? Do they owe no duty to themselves and it? Their present position is most degrading. The mothers and daughters of the nation are political nonentities, peers only of the mentally unsound, corrupt and aliens. Does this ennoble the race? No. A race cannot rise to its full stature until motherhood and fatherhood are equally honored, and a republic of the people can never be so in fact until both sexes have full expression at its ballot box. Woman needs to feel her share of the responsibilities of citizenship, and the republic needs her power."—New York Tribune.

Don't Muffle the Throat.

While connoisseurs of feminine beauty rave over the perfection of a swanlike throat, the fact remains that many extremely beautiful women have extremely short necks, to which no amount of care can add an inch. But whether a woman's throat is swanlike or otherwise matters but little in these days of chill winds. The possessors of all sorts of necks are confronted with the necessity of protecting themselves against colds or personal discomfort. Many are tempted to muffle up their throats in the becoming furs that make almost any face distingue, but the best advice that could be given to the ones who want lovely throats is—don't.

The neck, like the face, thrives best under Mother Nature's care, and high collars, feather boas and fur collars cannot help but create a tenderness that is disastrous to beauty.

But these things are fashionable just now, and after all it is worth some sacrifice to be just in style, and the only thing to do until the low collars come in again is to take such care of the throat that almost no damage will be done. In the first place, the neck should never be washed in warm water without a dash of cold, pure water to follow it, and on general principles the cold bath is decidedly the best.

Again, it will be found that a gentle massage of the upper chest and the neck before retiring will be followed by a toning up of lax muscles and a general improvement in the curves of the throat. When high collars are worn, if they are large enough to allow freedom of movement, the chances are that the skin under them will keep soft and healthy, and if, when the fur collar or boa is taken off the tissues are found to be moist and overheated, a thorough rubbing with a soft towel is kept up for a few minutes the reaction will restore the weakened muscles.—New York Advertiser.

The Woman Drummer.

"No, I wouldn't advise any young woman to take up the profession of a drummer, although I have followed it with some success for the past seven years," said Miss May Gerson, a bright little lady who travels for a big Cleveland firm, to a reporter at the Metropolitan.

"I don't think that the life of a commercial traveler is suitable for women, which is evidenced by the fact that so few of them have adopted it. In my career on the road I have met with only one real woman drummer. I often tell people I am the only one in the world. The fatal objection to the business viewed from the female standpoint is that it takes away the home. Home means much more to us than to men. A man can manage to get along with periodical visits to his family and gets hardened to hotel existence. That sort of life wasn't intended for his sisters or daughters.

"I am not at all soured or disappointed, but am taking a common sense view of the subject. My own life is full of pleasant spots. I live well and get a comfortable salary, having gone right up from a beginning of $7 a week. People treat me nicely, and there isn't a town in half a dozen states where I haven't a lot of friends. Personally I have nothing to weep over, but I reiterate my advice to all women who may contemplate entering on the life of a drummer—don't."—Washington Post.

Black Trimmed Lingerie.

New underwear has a decidedly funereal tinge. Pure white linen garments, lace and ribbon trimmed, are no longer fashionable. To be quite up to date the dainty skirt or corset cover must have a wide edge of black embroidery. This is a French idea, but it was quickly adopted by American women, many of whose wardrobes have now a decidedly half mourning air.

The embroidery used is very wide and usually very fine. A tiny sample of it is sufficiently dismal, but the new garments have rows upon rows of it, the craze for deep, overlapping flounces being at a climax. At intervals the sober effect is accentuated by a broad black ribbon bow, and the scheme is even carried out so far as to have each garment fastened by tiny black buttons.

A very striking petticoat which was made recently for a New York woman was finished by several deep flounces of the black embroidery and adorned by numberless black bows. The addition of the black is supposed to give a very chic effect, and in some of the daintiest underwear the gloomy effect is possibly not so manifest. At all events it is characteristically a French fancy, and has been taken up by New York women with all the enthusiasm which anything Parisian evokes.—New York World.

Miss Ellen Key.

Miss Ellen Key, a Swedish lady, has attracted much attention in her native land by her efforts to ameliorate the condition of workingmen. Jointly with Dr. Anton Nystrom, she founded the Workingmen's institute of Sweden, which now owns a handsome building in Stockholm and branch establishments in all the provincial towns. It has courses of lectures by the most distinguished literary and scientific authorities of the country, on historical, philosophical, scientific and literary subjects, adapted to the comprehension of laboring men, who attend in large numbers.

Swedish literature is the topic treated by Miss Key, who, in addition to her philanthropic labors, has done literary work, publishing books, chiefly on sociological themes. One is a biography of Anne Charlotte Leffler, duchess of Caianello, who is widely known through her sketch of the life of Sophie Kovalevsky. Miss Key is a sort of lay confessor of the working classes, who come in crowds every Sunday to her modest lodging to consult her on every possible question, from family tiffs to controversies about wages. She is a believer in socialism for Sweden, but only as a transitional means to larger ends. She desires the enfranchisement of women.—Woman's Journal.

Condemned Petticoats.

In Berlin, at the recent international congress of women, the petticoat was condemned as a "ridiculous invention of the sixteenth century." The clothing of men was approved from a practical and sensible point of view. The costume worn by Queen Louise of Prussia, mother of Emperor William I, was decidedly favored, and a motion was made to adopt it.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 3. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—What prayer should do for the Christian.—I Kings viii, 22-40. (A meeting of preparation for the week of prayer.)

The illustration of prayer placed before us in our topical reference is an inspiring one. It is a part of Solomon's prayer at the dedication of his temple. The occasion is inspiring. The royal character of him who offered the prayer is inspiring. So also is God's attitude toward it. God answered it. This is proof that it was a true prayer and may be used therefore to guide us in our meditation upon the subject what prayer should do for the Christian, or, better perhaps, what prayer actually does do for the Christian. The benefits of prayer to the Christian are innumerable. If they were better understood and appreciated, there would be more praying on the part of Christian people. The importance of prayer cannot be overestimated. Prayer moves the arm of God. The arm of God moves the world. What possibilities, therefore, in effectual, fervent prayer! What the church needs today is more praying. Not simply a week of prayer, but a constant union with God in prayer, every week of the year a week of prayer.

1. Prayer should bring the Christian closer to God. Prayer is communion with God. It is conversation with Him, as friend talks to friend, child with parent.

2. Prayer should inspire us with a burning desire to be more like God. Communions with God cannot but awaken admiration for God. This admiration should lead to imitation. The more we have to do with one who is kind and true and noble and loving the more we admire him and desire to be like him. Prayer brings us close to God. The eyes of faith are opened. We see Him as we never see Him at any other time. To see God should give us but one desire—the desire to be like God.

3. Prayer should increase and strengthen all Christian graces. It should increase our faith. When doubting, we should pray, "Lord I believe; help Thou my unbelief." It should increase our love for God. When sick, we pray, and He heals and comforts us. When in temptation, we pray, and He delivers us. Our gratitude for these blessings should increase our love and not only it, but also our zeal in the cause of God.

We should prove our faith and love by our works.

God does answer prayer. God does bless us in prayer. He comes close to us as we draw close to Him and gives us sweet assurances of His love and His goodness. Let us spend much time alone with God in prayer.

Bible Readings.—II Chron. vii, 1-16; Ps. iv, 1; v, 1-3; xvii, 1-8; xxxix, 12, 13; lxv, 1, 2; lxxii, 12-15; cix, 1-4; Math. xxi, 22; Mark ix, 14-29; Luke vi, 12; Acts vi, 1-4; Phil. iv, 6; Jas. v, 13-16; I Pet. iv, 7; I John v, 14-16.

Divine Religion.

Muller, the famous German historian, made the following remarkable confession to a friend: "How shall I describe to you what I found in the New Testament? I had not read it for many years, and was prejudiced against it before I took it in hand. The light which struck Paul with blindness on his way to Damascus was not more strange, more surprising to him than it was to me when I suddenly discovered the fulfillment of all hopes, the highest perfection of philosophy, the explanation of all revelations, the key to all the seeming contradictions of the physical and moral world. I saw religion appear at the moment most favorable to its appearance, and in a manner most adapted to its acceptance.

"The whole world seemed to be ordered for the sole purpose of furthering the religion of the Redeemer, and if this religion is not divine I understand nothing at all. I have read no books on the subject, but in all my studies of the ancient times I have always felt the want of something, and it was not till I knew our Lord that all was clear to me. With Him there is nothing I am not able to solve."

These thoughtful words are commended to those who make light of the Bible and who despise Christianity. The wisest men of today honor the blessed book and its religion. They have found that God and the gospel are keys to unlock the mysteries of the universe. No man is wise who scoffs at religion. —Golden Rule.

A Religious Life at Home.

Dews and showers and sunlight accomplish in the natural world what the grace of God does in the religious life of the family and home. It is a great blessing in favor of a child when the Lord plants it in the bosom of a pious household. A religious family is a blessing to itself and all its members, and its reflex influence reaches far abroad. The world and the church are benefited when the power of the Christian religion rules in the home life of the family.—Reformed Church Messenger.

Finds It Easier.

Times are so hard that some men out of employment find it easier to bear the expense of a $3 drunk than to pay a $1 grocer's bill.—Religious Telescope.

Christian Endeavor Notes.

Have you appointed that information committee yet?

A centenarian Christian Endeavorer is reported. He is 100 years young truly.

The famous Grace Baptist temple of Philadelphia, the Rev. Russell H. Conwell's church, contains 11 Christian Endeavor societies.

"The Tenth legion" of the New York City Christian Endeavor union comprises all the local Endeavorers who give a tenth of their income to God.

Each of the more than 1,000 prisoners in Iowa prisons receives at the holiday season a written greeting and a bunch of flowers from the Christian Endeavor societies of the state.

High collars have much to answer, but do not, as you prize your beauty, wear them too tight, else you may expect to have not only a discolored neck, but a red nose and headaches.

It is not known that rats cannot resist sunflower seeds. A trap baited with these seeds is the most effectual method of catching them.

DEADLY FIRST GLASS

IT USUALLY PROVES TO BE A GLASS TOO MUCH.

In the Case of Reformed Drinkers It Awakens the Dormant Appetite—How a Young Man Resisted Temptation—A Soul Saved by Good Example.

Millions of men who have not feared the temptation have found the temptation too strong for them in the long run, and on their deathbeds cursed the hour when they took their first glass of wine. The very first glass is a glass too much. Man does not, in his natural state, need stimulants of any kind any more than the dog or the horse, but when he has once begun to use them the havoc which they play with his system makes him regard them as necessaries of life. If it is no sin to do a thing which may have, and which, in myriads of cases, has had, the effect of destroying the souls and bodies of men and of ruining the happiness of whole families, then it may be true that it is not a sin to drink wine.

Dr. Samuel Johnson said that he could practice abstinence, but not temperance, and he therefore was a total abstainer, although his companions indulged freely in the use of liquor. Men who had formerly acquired the liquor habit have been known to abstain entirely for many years, and then, when persuaded to take a single glass of wine, have lost all self control and died a drunkard's death. Mr. Fielden Thorp of York, England, in a paper read before the fifth international congress for the prevention of the abuse of spirituous liquors, held at Basel, Switzerland, in August, 1895, related the two following anecdotes, which bear upon this question:

A good many years ago a young man who had yielded to the seductions of the society of drinking men resolved to tear himself away from his danger by leaving the paternal mansion and taking the position of a clerk in a distant city. He thought he could conquer his appetite if he did not have at the same time to resist the importunities and ridicule of his comrades. A short time after his arrival in the city of his adoption he was invited to dine with a gentleman who knew his family. He reflected a moment, and, knowing that this gentleman was a member of a temperance society, thought that he could accept without danger.

However, on his arrival he found that his hostess did not share her husband's views. She placed wine and beer on the table, begged him not to imitate her husband's abstinence, as she thought it too ascetic, and at last, as he continued to decline, poured him out a glass of beer with her own hands. The poor young man, feeling that he could only resist by flight, rose from the table abruptly, muttering a few words of excuse, and left the house.

He afterward wrote a note of apology to the lady, explaining the reason of his conduct, and this induced the good woman to follow her husband's example and to sign the pledge of total abstinence, precisely on the Christian principle of which we have just been speaking. Would she not have reproached herself bitterly if the young visitor had had less firmness, and if, yielding to her solicitations, he had relapsed into drunkenness? And yet she had not the slightest idea that he was in any danger.

A young lady in society had signed the pledge under the influence of an excellent pastor. Some time afterward she applied to him to release her from her pledge and to accept her resignation. She declared that she did not care at all for the wine, but she found it extremely annoying to have to explain why she drank none and to be compelled to endure the ridicule of her acquaintances. "And, besides," she added, "it does no good. No one refuses to drink on my account."

The worthy pastor entreated her to stand firm, assuring her that she could not estimate the effects of her example. One night while she was in the midst of a numerous company a gentleman approached her with the words, "What wine may I have the honor to offer you?" "Thank you," she replied, "I will take a glass of water."

Later in the evening a young stranger said to her, "Allow me to thank you from the bottom of my heart for what you have done for me."

In surprise she asked him for an explanation, which he immediately gave her: "You have saved me, soul and body, tonight. I have been a drinking man. I have been for a long time resisting the inclination, contending at the same time against the fatal appetite and the solicitations of my friends. The ordeal has been terrible, and I came here with the conviction that I must yield if I was asked to drink; that I could not refuse. But when I heard you say, 'I will take a glass of water,' I took courage. I gained strength to imitate you and to say, 'I will take a glass of water too.'" —Union Signal.

The Czar Frowns on Drunkards.

Drunkenness in the Russian army, when it comes to the knowledge of the present czar, is severely punished. Some officers of a Russian regiment recently became disgracefully drunk and attacked a citizen. The police interfered to save his life, and the czar, hearing of the occurrence, dismissed one from the service in disgrace and reduced the rest to the ranks—a great degradation in the Russian service.—Exchange.

Facts About Alcohol.

Alcohol is a poison.

Is not assimilated, but is thrown off unchanged.

Disturbs physiological processes and lays the foundation for disease.

Does not stimulate or strengthen, but depresses and weakens.

As it is not assimilated, it cannot be a food.

Disturbs every physiological process; cannot be a medicine.

There is no disease that cannot be better treated without than with it.—Journal of the American Medical Association.

The way in which most drunkards pay taxes is through the license of the liquor seller.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON II, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 10.

Text of the Lesson, Acts ii, 1-13—Memory Verses, 1-4—Golden Text, Acts ii, 4—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place." The waiting days of prayer between Ascension and Pentecost were marked by one event, the choosing of Matthias, which may have been of God or may have been due to Peter's restless spirit, which, as on other occasions, found it difficult to wait quietly without doing something. The word "pentecost" is only found elsewhere in Acts xx, 16; I Cor. xvi, 8; but "pentekosta" is the Greek for "fifty," and the law said that 50 days after the day after passover Sabbath Israel was to offer a new meat offering unto the Lord (Lev. xxiii, 16). This meat offering, typical of the gathering of the thousands to Christ at Pentecost, was baked with leaven, suggestive of the evil still in the believer which is met only by the sacrifice.

2. "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting." There had been nothing unusual during those waiting days, but just a quiet continuance in prayer and a waiting for the fulfillment of the promise. How He would come—I mean the promised Comforter—or when, they had not been told, and whether any of them thought of the Levitical fiftieth day or not we are not told. They were to pray, to wait and to expect with unwavering faith in their absent Lord.

3. "And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them." John had said, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire" (Luke iii, 16), and here was a fulfillment. On Christ the Spirit came as a dove (Luke iii, 22), for in Him was no sin nor dross needing purifying fire. We do not read that He came again as fire nor did they again need to wait, but as they prayed or spoke the Spirit filled them (Acts iv, 31; x, 44-46). The Spirit having come, there is no need to wait for Him as at Pentecost, but if we really desire to be filled with the Spirit for God's glory, He will quickly do it. Yet we may need to wait to be made ready.

4. "And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost and began to speak with other tongues as the Spirit gave them utterance." What a contrast is here to Babel (Gen. xi), where there was but one language and the people were gathered together against God! Here they are with one accord for God and are enabled in a moment to speak all languages. There is no credit whatever due to them, nor is it through one particle of skill on their part, but the Holy Spirit takes possession of them and speaks through them the words of God concerning the works of God (verse 11, chapters iv, 31; x, 46).

5. "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." From all the world they had come to worship God according to their law—to keep the Passover and the feast of weeks, or of the fiftieth day. The time will come again when Jews from all nations shall be gathered to their own land, the Spirit of the Lord shall be poured upon them, and then with Paul-like devotion to Jesus of Nazareth will they tell to all nations the joyful tidings (Ezek. xxxvi, 24-28; Isa. xxvii, 6; Ps. lxvii, 1, 2, 7).

6. "Now, when this was noised abroad, the multitude came together and were confounded, because that every man heard them speak in his own language." The revised version says, "When this sound was heard." In some way it was soon made known throughout the city, and the people came together. The disciples had no difficulty in getting a congregation, as many have today. They did not advertise, nor even blow a trumpet as the law permitted them to do (Num. x, 7). This was wholly the work of God and of His Holy Spirit.

7, 8. "And they were all amazed and marveled, saying one to another, Behold, are not all these which speak Galileans? And how hear we every man in our own tongue, wherein we were born?" The two men at the ascension addressed them as "Ye men of Galilee" (i, 11). They were country people, not citizens of Jerusalem, the holy city. They were not from any of the schools or the centers of human wisdom. They were very common people in the eyes of the world, and yet they are heard speaking all the languages under heaven. This was truly an unheard of thing, and well might the people say, "We never saw it on this fashion." The One who is perfect in knowledge (Job xxxvi, 4) had entered into them, and being familiar with all languages He spoke through them any language with equal ease. Something like this He does sometimes even now.

9-11. "We do hear them speak in our tongues the wonderful works of God." Here are at least twice seven different nationalities listening to humble Galileans speaking with ease all their various languages. Well may we say, "Who teacheth like Him?" (Job xxxvi, 22.) This selfsame Spirit still lives, and He lives in every believer, dividing to every man severally as He will (I Cor. xii, 11). But who can tell what we might even today have from God to lay out for God if He saw that we were whole hearted for Him and had no ambition but to make His name glorious?

12. "And they were all amazed and were in doubt, saying one to another, What meaneth this?" The men of Athens said to Paul: "Thou bringest certain strange things to our ears. We would know, therefore, what these things mean" (Acts xvii, 20). This they said because he preached unto them Jesus and the resurrection, and in our next lesson we shall find Peter explaining this strange occurrence by preaching Jesus and the resurrection. Some of them knew that a very long time ago, about 1,400 years or more, their God had done some wonderful things through Moses—even unheard of things—and that some of their ancestors had even heard the very voice of God speaking out of the fire on Mount Sinai, but that was so very, very long ago, and would never occur again. As to supernatural things in their own time, well, there were some rumors of such, but they were not to be believed, and the blasphemer who wrought them had been crucified, and so that was the end of them.

13. "Others, mocking, said, These men are full of new wine." So at Athens some mocked, and others said, We will hear thee again of this matter. And at Rome some believed and some believed not (Acts xvii, 32; xxviii, 24). It would seem from Eph. v, 18, that being filled with the Spirit produces in the believer some results which are not unlike those produced by wine in the natural man—among others cheerful or hilarious giving (II Cor. ix, 7).

BOSTON STRIKE DECLARED OFF.

Supreme Council of the Union Takes the Bit in Its Teeth.

Boston, Dec. 26.—The great strike on the West End street railroad has been officially declared off. This action came like a bombshell at 12:39 Christmas morning. The following is the statement made by the supreme council to the public explaining its position. It is addressed "To the public":

"The supreme council was given power to negotiate for an agreement with the management of the West End road. The council performed its duty, and in doing so found the president lacking authority to make any settlement without consulting his board of directors. He asked for further time, which was granted. The men repudiated this act, and we, as honorable men, have had to do one of two things—sanction the repudiation of the men and thus violate our agreement with the president, or refuse to be a silent party to a continuance of the strike. We chose the latter and will keep our agreement with President Little as gentlemen at all hazards."

Kankakee, Ills., Dec. 24.—Kankakee is discussing the unusual discovery of a twenty-seven-year-old unpaid school bond for $2,500 among some musty and worthless papers belonging to James McGrew, of this city. The bond has been presented to the board of education for collection, and that body is much in doubt regarding what action to take. The bond is dated 1867 and mateured in six years, calling for 10 per cent. interest.

It had been overlooked by Mr. McGrew in a bundle of papers stored until recently in a bank vault and was discovered by accident. Mr. McGrew was a very wealthy and busy man in 1867, and as he had no bookkeeper is not surprising he should have forgotten the bond. He thought but little of $2,500 at that time, although since then he has lost the greater part of his fortunte.

EXPRESS CAR LOOTED

SOME MISSOURI DESPERADOES DO A BOLD JOB.

For the Fourth Time a Train Is Held Up in Blue Cut — The Safe Robbed of a Large but Unknown Sum of Money—Passengers Not Molested.

Kansas City, Dec. 24.—Blue Cut, made historic through the operations there of the James and Younger bands when they were pioneers in the train robbing industry, was the scene last night of its fourth hold-up by road agents. At 9:20 o'clock the St. Louis and Chicago express, which left Kansas City at 8:45, was flagged at Blue Cut and came to a standstill. Masked men immediately covered the engineer and fireman and compelled them to get down from their cab. At the same time another member of the bandit gang uncoupled the express car from the rest of the train. The robbers quickly climbed aboard the locomotive and the express car, and before the surprised train men had had time to collect their wits the bandits were speeding down the steep grade beyond Blue Cut with the engine and the express coach, and Express Messenger A. J. Frier, of St. Louis, was a prisoner in the express car.

Car Was Loaded with Christmas Gifts.

Kansas City officials of the United States Express state that the train carried very little cash, but that the car was filled with an enormous amount of miscellaneous express of great vaule. Christmas boxes made up a considerable amount of the treasure. When the robbery became known at Independence a posse of county officials set out for the scene of the hold-up, and at midnight County Marshal Keshlear started out a force of officers from Kansas City. At 1 o'clock this morning a telephone message was received from Glendale stating that Engineer E. D. Meade and his fireman, had arrived there. Immediately after the robbery they set out towards Glendale in search of their locomotive. They found their engine dead in a cut a mile east of Glendale, with the express car.

Thugs "Divide" with the Conductor.

Conductor Nichols has been heard from. He is at Independence and in an interview stated that when the train was brought to a standstill at the cut he stepped out upon the rear platform, only to have a pistol thrust under his nose.

"Just keep your mouth shut—I don't want to hurt anybody," was what the road agent said to him. He had nothing to say. A moment later the bandit said: "Look here, young fellow, have you got any of the company's money?"

The conductor dug up $4 and displayed them in front of the robber. The robber took $2, with the remark: "Well I'll just divide it with you."

BANDITS ACQUIRE MUCH WEALTH.

Express Messenger Gets the Two Dollars Taken from the Conductor.

At 2:30 this morning the express car was brought back to Independence and Express Messenger J. A. Frier told the story of the robbery. About five minutes after his car was detached from the train, he said, he heard a rap at the side door, and thinking it was the brakeman opened it. A man with a shotgun compelled him to retreat into the car, while two others followed with revolvers and ordered him to throw up his hands. The men then pulled him from the car and asked him if he had any money. He was too excited to answer. They then picked him up and threw him bodily back into the car, and one of the men climbed in.

Two men held guns at Frier's head, while the third one proceeded coolly to break open the safe. Frier told the man who was at work on the large safe that it was useless for him to blow it open as there was no money in it. He refused to give up the keys for the small safe, and they took them from him. They then opened the small safe and took from it a number of packages of money, and after securing this again attempted to open the large one. A small hole was made in the large safe and two sticks of dynamite put in.

Frier again talked to them, telling them they were wasting time, as there was not a penny in the large safe. This time they desisted from their attempt to open it and prepared to leave. Before they went away one of the men walked over to Frier, and taking a $2 bill from his pocket, said: "Here, help yourself to a Christmas present; we made a good haul." It is known that a large amount was secured. They then started to leave the car and when they left they closed the door, telling him at the same time to remain there on peril of his life. He was badly frightened.

The robbers then boarded the engine and went at a high rate of speed about two miles, where it was abandoned. None of the passengers were molested, but the greatest confusion prevailed aboard the train when it became known that they were in the hands of robbers. There was a wild scramble to hide valuables.

QUARTER OF A MILLION FOR STURM.

Report in the Case of Sturm vs. F. A. Boker and Others.

Indianapolis, Dec. 25.—Judge C. A. Korbly has filed in the United States court a report as special master in the celebrated suit of General Herman Sturm against F. A. Boker, and others, of New York, showing Sturm entitled to $67,358.38, with interest since 1867, making a total of about $250,000. This is a part of the long litigation that grew out of the contract made by Sturm and Boker with the Mexican government in 1867, to furnish arms and ammunition for the revolution against Maximilian. Boker invested $40,000 in the venture, and Sturm $153,000. Both ships upon which arms were shipped to New York foundered, and but a portion of the cargo of one of them was saved. Long litigation with the marine insurance companies followed, and after it was settled Sturm and the Bokers fell into litigation among themselves.

All these tools are full-sized, practical, neat, and cheap; not mere toys. They enable any person to do his own half-soling, boot, shoe, rubber, harness, and tinware repairing.

This Outfit is the result of years of study, experiment, and correspondence in the manufacture of Iron Lasts and Repairing Outfits; and its practical advantages need only to be seen and tried to be appreciated.

Our Improved Iron Lasts and Standard are one of the handiest tools you can have about the place. The Lasts are four in number, smooth and solid, 4, 6, 8, and 10 inches long, thus enabling one to half-sole all sizes of foot-wear. The Standard is made with an iron base, which can be easily fastened to the bench. No method of half-soling is now used on common work, except that of iron last and wire clinch nails. The writer of this has been in the business 20 years, and has seen the changes from the old wooden lasts and pegs to the modern method, and knows it to be complete.

Our Improved Harness and Saw Clamp is an indispensable tool in sewing a harness or filing a saw. The jaws are thrown open mechanically by a coiled spring on the bolt.

The weight of this outfit is 18 lbs. Price, all complete, packed in a neat, strong box, only $3.00.

The Home Repairing Outfit No. 2.

FARM·FIELD AND GARDEN

THE COW STABLE.

Advantages Derived From Concrete Floors. Suggestions About Ventilation.

Waldo F. Brown, a practical Ohio farmer, writing to the New York Tribune, says:

I formerly used wooden platforms for the cows to stand on, but six years ago I took out all the wood floors and put in cement, and I like it very much better, not only because of its permanency, but because there is no place for rats to breed and no boards to become saturated with urine to cause a rank smell, for cement is entirely impervious to urine, and when the stable is cleaned daily and freshly bedded, if the ventilation is good, there will be no perceptible odor. My cow stable is 28½ feet long in the clear, and the floor on which the cows stand is 5 feet long, the ditch 2 feet wide and the walk 2, and as the ditch is 8 inches deep and the sides plastered it is equivalent to a floor a little over 10 feet wide. It took a little less than three barrels of portland cement to lay it, and this cost me $2.50 per barrel at the factory and 40 cents per barrel freight, the total cost of the cement being about $8. This floor is laid with four inches of concrete and one-half inch of topping. It would have taken about 800 feet of planking and joist to lay the floor, and this would have cost me not less than $2 per 100, and the best floor I could lay would rot out in less than ten years, and the urine would penetrate the cracks and not only be wasted, but cause a strong odor all the time.

In keeping a cow stable clean fine bedding is preferable. Sawdust is good, but I prefer corn chaff from the sheller to any other material I have ever used, and when I can get it I always use it. When that is not to be had we can often get clover chaff and sometimes oats or wheat chaff. We empty the ditch every morning and at once bed the floor and ditch thoroughly. I have a room floored with cement directly behind the cows in which to store bedding. In cleaning the manure ditch we use first a six tined fork and follow with a coal shovel with a blade 14 inches wide. With these tools the manure and soiled bedding can be quickly removed.

Ventilation is a matter of greater importance in the cow stable than many farmers realize, and as the ceilings are usually low, every stable should be well ventilated. A window at one end and a door at the other will answer in good weather, but in cold weather, when the stables must be shut, some other way must be provided. The best way I have ever found is an opening over the manger, and I make this wide enough to be used as a hay shoot. It should be 2½ feet wide and as long as the manger. I use a manger six feet wide, also floored with cement (to prevent rats from harboring under it) and have a row of cattle each side.

Artesian Wells.

The object of the bill to appropriate $100,000 for sinking artesian wells in the eastern part of Colorado, introduced in congress by Mr. Shafroth, is to test the strength of the underflow of water which exists in the eastern portion of Colorado. It seems to be the opinion of many of those who have given the subject considerable study that the force and amount of the underflow that drains the Rocky mountains would be sufficient to irrigate the arid land east of the mountains. The experiment with artesian wells in the city of Denver has been very successful, and if the theory above referred to is found to be true the necessity for the further construction of large irrigating canals will be obviated. If these wells prove successful, the problem of irrigation will be solved, so far as eastern Colorado is concerned, and millions of dollars will be thereby saved which otherwise will have to be put in large ditches and reservoirs. The arid lands in Colorado are exceedingly fertile and ultimately will be reclaimed. But, says The Orange Judd Farmer, if artesian wells can produce this result the time of reclamation will be advanced 50 years. The matter is also of deep interest in western Kansas, Nebraska, Texas and Oklahoma.

Apples In Barrels.

S. D. Willard, writing to Rural New Yorker, says:

My experience is entirely in favor of heading up barrels of apples, as stored away in the cellar, and thus, as far as possible, excluding the air from them. Some varieties are inclined to shrivel more or less and will be found to retain their crisp, fresh condition far better when thus handled, while all varieties, in my experience, will suffer less shrinkage and be found in better condition if thus cared for up to the time of maturity. Barrels should in all cases, where circumstances will permit, be stored upon the side rather than stand on end.

Plant Growth and Electricity.

Professor C. D. Warren of the Amherst experiment station has experimented with electric currents sent through the earth. Several inches below the surface of the earth he caused a large number of wires to be strung. They extended from side to side of the garden, and, in fact, before burial looked like the strings of an immense piano. Seeds were planted in the earth above the wire, and the current was constantly exerted from a nearby power house. Strange results were obtained. Many seeds sprouted before their time. Roots of vegetables were found to be greatly enlarged.

Verdict of the Ohio Station.

Our tests, as a whole, indicate that, while a fertilizer containing only phosphoric acid and nitrogen may be expected generally to produce an increase of crop, that increase may be relied on more certainly if potash be added.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;

INTO A FEARFUL CHASM.

Thirty or More Persons Plunge with a Bridge.

TERRIBLE DISASTER IN ALABAMA.

Twenty-One Meet Death in the Crash and in the Flames That Follow.

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 28.—A special to The Commercial-Appeal from Birmingham, Ala., says: Fiends in human form wrecked Birmingham Mineral passenger train No. 40 at Cahaba bridge, twenty-seven miles from here, at 7:50 o'clock yesterday morning, and twenty-one lives were lost. That number of bodies have been recovered from the wreck, and further search may swell the list of the dead.

Conductor A. P. Connell, who probably new better than anybody else as to how many passengers were aboard, is dead. It is thought, however, that there were not exceeding twenty-five or thirty. The train consisted of an engine, a baggage car and two coaches. Six miles south of Guernee is the Cahaba river, a shallow mountain stream which has a depth at this time of only about three or four feet. This river is spanned by an iron bridge with wooden trestles on each side. Its entire length is 800 feet and the length of the main span where the wreck occurred is 110 feet. The bridge was built only four years ago. The main span and the span just beyond it, both made of iron, gave way and precipitated the entire train into the river. The engine landed on its side almost at right angles with the track. The cars piled upon each other through the main span. The entire wreck took fire soon afterward, and was rapidly burned to the water's edge.

Charred Corpses in the Wreck.

Nine persons escaped alive of those who went down, and several of them will probably die. As soon as the crash occurred a few country people gathered at the scene to render what aid they could, but it was too late to do much.

The railroad company furnishes the following as the list of dead: James Bolling, of Guthrie, Ky., Southern express messenger; Frank White, of Birmingham, engineer; A. P. Connell, of Helena, conductor; George Carney, of Birmingham, flagman; R. Webb, of Birmingham; Bruce Phillips, of Blocton; L. W. Martin, of Brookwood, Ala.; Mrs. Henry Handbury and two children, of Birmingham; R. H. Bloant, of Birmingham, colored minister: Miss Ada Powers, of Blocton; Dr. L. N. Powers, of Blocton Mrs. Emma Powers and two children, of Blocton; Mrs. R. Little, of Blocton; Mr. Gardner, of Blocton; Mrs. Gardner, of Blocton; Miss Gardner, of Blocton; one unidentified body, supposed to be Tom Struther, a colored porter. Tis makes twenty-one killed.

The following are the injured; Henry Handbury, of Birmingham, a Louisville and Nashville conductor, seriously; E. E. Eckels, of Helena, slightly; Sam Spencer, fireman, arm broken; Asdrew Bryson, of Blocton, fatally; Miss Booth, of Blocton, slightly; Mrs. Powers' child, from Blocton, slightly: Mrs. Walker slightly. Mrs. Walker's three children escaped practically uninjured. The relief train from the scene of the wreck at Cahaba river reached Birmingham at 9 o'clock last night, bringing ten corpses and three injured persons. Ten other dead bodies were left at Blocton, where the deceased resided, and one at Brookwood.

MINE GAS HAS SEVEN VICTIMS.

Terrible Explosion in a Coal Pit at Princeton, Ind.—Six Wounded.

Princeton, Ind., Dec. 28.—The terrible mine disaster of Saturday has cast a pall of gloom over this city. Despite the bright sunshine and ideal weather evidences of the sad dispensation of Providence are to be seen on every hand. The results of Princeton's first mine horror are appalling enough but are not so disastrous in regard to loss of life as at first reported. The first four men brought up alive were William Grill, Frank Turbie, Thomas Trice (colored), and William Booker. They said the others were all dead. Then the rescuers brought up the bodies of James Reil, Theodore Faber, John Holmes, Carl Poneylite and John Ernst. These bodies were mutilated beyond recognition. The next trip down the rescuers reported that they could hear groans. This was joyful news, and hope again revived in the hearts of relatives of men in the mine. The crowd waited in breathless suspense while the bucket came up.

It contained the almost lifeless bodies of James Turner, David Nolan (white) and Arthur Colgate and James Crush (colored). The first two were only slightly burned, while the others were more seriously injured, sustaining several broken bones besides their severe burns. They can give no account of the explosion, and can not account for their escape while others were killed. The body of Robert Maule, son of President Maule and treasurer of the coal company, was found lying in the sump at the foot of the shaft, with a 10 by 15 beam across his breast, his skull crushed and numerous bones broken. One other man was known to have been in the mine. This was Robert Poneyliee, head blacksmith. Rescuers could not work long at a time on account of gas and foul air, and search for Poneylite which continued all yesterday under direction of State Mine Inspector Fisher was of no avail. The body is supposed to be buried under debris. The injuries of some of the rescued men are very serious, but unless complications arise all will ultimately recover.

FIRST BATTLE ON THE SEA.

Key West Report That a Cuban Filibuster Whipped a Spanish Gunboat.

New York, Dec. 25.—The World has a Key West, Fla., special giving an account of a fight at sea, off Cuba, between the filibuster Three Friends and a Spanish gunboat, in which the filibuster is said to have whipped the gunboat and scared off a coaster. The story is that a coaster 40 feet long attacked the filibuster, which opened fire with shrapnel and drove it off.

The next thing they met was a big gunboat, and after a short engagement the filibuster put a shot into her hull and she had enough. The filibuster then steamed away and after landing her cargo of arms and men started to return when she was chased by a cruiser, from which she ran away, and got safely off.

Cincinnati, Dec. 26.—A special to The Commercial-Tribune from Key West says: Much comment was made yesterday in Havana over the report cabled from New York that the filibustering steamer Three Friends had been fired on by Spanish cruisers and that the steamer had disabled a Spanish gunboat. This report is positively denied in official circles, who affirm that nothing of the kind occurred, but that the story is made from whole cloth. It is admitted that the steamer landed on the south side of the island, but it is alleged that there was no fighting. It is furthermore stated that only a part of the cargo was secured by Gomez, the Spanish coast guards having captured a good portion.

The Three Friends is here, lying under the guns of the Raleigh. Captain Lewis refuses to say anything about his trip, save that he had been after derelicts. As to the story of a fight he professes ignorance. None of the crew can be induced to speak of the affair. The vessel does not bear any marks of conflict, and the report is doubted here.

Havana advices are that Gomez' advance guard has captured the town of Las Passega, in Santa Clara province, taking the entire garrison and all their stores. A battalion of fresh troops was sent to Matanzas yesterday morning from Havana to be sent to the front. Great exertions are being made to get a strong force to oppose General Gomez, and three lines are being formed to get the Cubans entangled in between them and crushed.

SUICIDE OF BANKER WASMANSDORFF.

Terrible Result of One of the Recent Failures at Chicago.

Chicago, Dec. 28.—Suffering from depression caused by financial reverses, Otto Wasmansdorff, a well-known banker of this city, yesterday fired a bullet into his brain and died almost instantly. The banker killed himself in the front hall bed room of his home on Cleveland avenue. His sons William G. and Otto, Jr., who were in the parlor beneath the bed room, heard the report of the revolver and rushed up stairs and were horrified to behold their father lying on the bed dying. Wasmandorff was a member of the private banking firm of Wasmansdorff & Heinnemann, which failed a week ago as the result of the failure of the National Bank of Illinois.

The failure of his bank had a crushing effect upon Wasmansdorff, and also seriously affected his wife, who is ill. The banker for several days was unable to either eat or sleep. The criticisms of unfortunate depositors weighed him down. Yesterday morning the banker appeared brighter and less troubled than upon any day since the failure. At the time of the failure the assets of Wasmansdorff's bank were given at $550,000; liabilities, $415,000.

PANIC IN A DEPARTMENT STORE.

Fire Costs Rockford $175,000—No One Seriously Hurt.

Rockford, Ills., Dec. 26.—Fire Thursday gutted the Huffman hotel building—loss $85,000, insurance $40,000, and Potter Bros.' department store—loss $90,000, insurance $60,000. The store was filled with Christmas shoppers when the flames broke out. They spread rapidly, creating a panic, but no one was seriously burned. The flames were under control and confined to the hotel at midnight. Several other firms are losers for smaller amounts.

MISSOURI STATESMAN DEAD.

Ex-Representative Hatch Passes to the World of Rest.

Hannibal, Mo., Dec. 24.—Ex-Representative W. H. Hattch died at 9 o'clock last night of a complication of troubles resulting from Bright's disease. He was stricken early in the week, and since Monday his case has been considered hopeless.

Fatal Accident to a Bridge.

Wheeling, Dec. 23.—At Littleton, Wetzel county, a wire suspension bridge over a creek broke down while crowded with people returning home from a church entertainment, and about thirty or forty people were precipitated into the bed of the stream. The victims are: Wilbert Hammond, killed; Miss Artie Brown and Harry Anderson, seriously hurt: Miss Cora Murphy, Simmons Fox, Wiliam Mays and son and Newton Carman, injured.

Will Go into Liquidation.

Chicago, Dec. 28.—It was announced last night that the Atlas National bank will go into voluntary liquidation and retire from business. This action is not considered as a failure in any sense, and as the bank's business was a comparatively small one it is not anticipated that any flurry in the banking circles of Chicago will result. Two

Two Children Burned to Death.

Portsmouth, O., Dec. 23.—Two children of Mrs. Christine Carlisle at Wakefield, Tommy, aged 2, and Ruth, aged 4, were burned to death. The mother had locked them in the house and had gone to a neighbor's to visit, and the house caught fire in her absence.

Indiana Auditors Get no Fees.

Indianapolis, Dec. 25.—The supreme court has affirmed the decision of the circuit court of Vanderburgh county refusing to allow the claim of the auditor of that county for services under the provisions of the fee and salary law of 1879. The court holds that the fee and salary law of 1895, which provides that county officials shall receive a fixed salary without fees, is constitutional and valid.

The Missouri State Convention will be held at Kirksville about Feb. 4, 5.

Masonry deliberately dishonors Christ, and this is reason enough why it should not be lauded and courted by Christian ministers, and glorified in Christian churches.

The friends in Washington will not forget the date of their State convention at Seattle, Jan. 18,19. They should give earnest heed to the appeal of their agent, Bro. P. B. Williams, on another page.

Let every friend of the cause in Minnesota work and pray for the success of their coming State convention at Willmar, Feb. 23,24. Write at once to your State secretary, Rev. Wm. Fenton, 74 S. Robert St., St. Paul, Minn.

There is much encouragement in the fact that the license money from saloons in Chicago has decreased last year $360,667. Last year there was a loss of $149,000 over 1895. The Record assigns the business depression as the cause.

"Ye that are strong ought to roll your burdens upon the weak;" and "Bear ye not one another's burdens and so do not fulfill the law of Christ," is the way our government, in most cases, practically carries out the commands of Christ. Through the legalized liquor traffic and monopolies and combines and secret lodges, the burdens of society are largely imposed upon the defenseless and weak.

Rev. C. Nelson, a Danish Baptist missionary at Kifua, S. W. Africa, is now visiting this country and is spending a few months with friends in Chicago. He visited the Cynosure office recently to get a supply of literature. He tells us that secret societies are the great curse of Africa, and a terrible obstacle to mission work. All interested in Christianizing the Dark Continent should feel the vital importance of sustaining the anti secret work.

ROBERT MACKLIN.

We show our readers here the portrait of one of Christ's faithful witnesses who passed to glory Dec. 14, 1896. Many years ago when in the reform lecture field we found at his Waterman, Ill., home rest and inspiration and liberal contributions and co-operation. Last summer he made us a cheering visit at the Cynosure office, and afterward sent a generous contribution for the anti-secret cause. He was a devoted reader of the Cynosure and deeply interested in its circulation. "For Christ's crown and covenant" was the motto engraved on his heart. He scarcely once missed having family worship in his home from the age of twenty till his death, a period of sixty years. He invariably sang in praise to God the inspired Bible Psalms, and because the United States Constitution refused to recognize Christ's authority and law, he all his life declined to vote or hold office under it.

Robert Macklin was born in Ireland in 1809 After moving to America he resided for twenty years in Washington Co., N. Y. He then removed to Waterman, De Kalb Co., where he lived till his death. It was after visiting some of his faith that Jonathan Blanchard once wrote, "I more and more admire the Scotch Presbyterians, especially the Covenanters. Their fathers knelt down by a tombstone-table, in Grey Friars churchyard, and signed a solemn 'league and covenant' to stand for Christ's crown rights against king, priest and pope. They stood squarely against the crushing power of the British crown, and when crushed, hid in wild moors and worshiped in caves and glens. And when they got to this country they stood and still stand aloof from the United States Constitution, because it recognizes no God but the people, and puts the religion of the Bible on a level with a Hottentot's worship of a monkey, or a Chinaman's worskip of a cock, or a devil supposed to be represented by one."

No better idea can be obtained of the financial depression into which our country is sinking than the fact that statistics just compiled by State Labor Commissioner Rueherwein, of Ohio, from 1,388 industrial establishments in forty-six States and Territories, show that 52,448 less hands were employed in those establishments in July, 1896, than in July, 1892, and that $19,214,448 less is paid out annually in wages.

Since the National Reform Convention in this city, a few weeks ago, the Christian Citizenship movement has been getting down to business as never before. At the noon hour last Monday they held a rousing meeting in Willard Hall, presided over by the president of the national organization, Edwin D. Wheelock, and addressed by Dr. Crane and Dr. J. Q. A. Henry. They severely roasted the municipal authorities of the city, and were applauded to the echo by a large audience. Dr. Henson addressed a Christian Citizenship Convention in Willard Hall Monday afternoon. The noon meetings are hereafter to be conducted by the Christian Citizenship League.

A universal cry against excessive taxation is going up from every land. There was a large meeting in Dublin, Dec. 28, the lord-mayor presiding, to protest against the over taxation of Ireland, as disclosed by the royal commission on the financial relations between England and Ireland. The report showed that Ireland is now overtaxed to the amount of $13,750,000 annually. The meeting was attended by the Catholic and Protestant archbishops, John Dillon, T. M. Healy, the president of the Chamber of Commerce and the leading merchants of this city. Resolutions were passed demanding that the government remedy the injustice done to Ireland in the matter of taxation.

The spawn of lodgery, often called the "minor" secret orders, demand more and more attention. The Cynosure will show by indisputable fact and argument that they form part of a great system of Babylonian pride and Egyptian darkness. If Masonry and Odd-fellowship have felt severely the attacks upon their strongholds, they are making good all losses by training up an army of young men whose convictions are paralyzed in respect to secretism by the swarms of orders which cover the hook of lodgery with the bait of temperance, insurance, patriotism, good fellowship, business aid, etc. The people should understand the nature and effect of these orders—how they are putting the "mark of the beast" in every man's forehead and in his hand, and yoking him to a system that will enslave his conscience, weaken his faith, squander his means and alienate his household.

A THANKSGIVING REMINISCENCE.

BY C. A. S. TEMPLE.

The following soul-stirring hymn appeared in one of the singing books (I think, "The Village Harmony") of "ye olden tyme"—just after the close of the American Revolution. It was set and sung to the grand old tune of "Easter." (In some other books it was called "Chester.") Probably it "woke the echoes" in many a New England worshipping, Thanksgiving assembly. As a Thanksgiving reminiscence and as a reminder of the piety and patriotism of the men of that great epoch in our nation's history, it deserves an honorable place in every patriotic journal, and especially in every "Hymn and Tune Book," throughout our land.

Let tyrants shake their iron rod,
And slavery clank her galling chains,
We fear them not; we trust in God;
New England's God forever reigns.

Howe and Burgoyne and Clinton too,
With Prescott and Cornwallis joined,
Together plot our overthrow
In one infernal league combined.

When God inspired us for the fight,
Their ranks were broke, their lines were forced,
Their ships were shattered in our sight,
Or swiftly driven from our coast.

What grateful offering shall we bring?
What shall we render to the Lord?
Loud hallelujahs let us sing,
And praise his name on every chord.

CHRISTIANITY AND FREEMASONRY COMPARED.

BY REV. P. B. WILLIAMS.

Let any one compare the two institutions of Christianity and Masonry, as the former stands revealed in the Bible, and he cannot fail to see the immeasurable distance there is between them. Masonry, according to Mr. Cross, was born in Egyptian darkness and cradled among the ancient rites and ceremonies of Polytheism. Christianity was founded by Christ, the Lord from heaven.

Masonry locks up its light, its truths and important precepts and conceals them from the world. Christianity raises its lofty standard in the midst of the darkness of this world, and, like the sun in midheaven, throws its rays broadcast over the earth. Its truths are commanded to be preached in all the world, and its precepts are proclaimed from the mountaintops. Christianity is founded on the Rock of Ages, and the gates of hell will not prevail against it. Operative Masonry is founded on Geometry; "speculative" or "Freemasonry" upon "ancient mystic forms," "rites," ceremonies" and "symbols."

Christianity has its laws, its simple ordinances and its glorious promises of life and immortality. Masonry has its ceremonies of initiation, borrowed from the darkness of remote ages, and has no well founded hope of eternal life. Christianity has the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come. The Church of God, like Solomon's Temple of old, is filled with his presence—the Holy Spirit. What spirit fills the Masonic temple?

The Church of God has the ordinances of the Lord pure and simple in their character. What has Masonry? The members of the body of Christ meet to worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness. For what purpose do Masons meet? Christians meet to sing praises to God and to call upon his holy name. Masons meet to sing "Odes to Masonry" and to repeat prayers in which the name of Christ as the great Mediator between God and man is not found. And even the quotations from the New Testament, as used in their forms, are pronounced "Americanisms."

Let it now be noted, that no living man can approach God acceptably except in the name of Jesus Christ. In the light of this truth, what avail all the prayers offered by Masons? And can any intelligent Christian suppose for a moment that any system, to say nothing of its members, in whose forms of prayer and praise the very name of Christ is ignored, can be acceptable to God? The reader may not have observed the fact, that in all the proclamations made by Presidents and Governors of States for days of fasting and prayer or thanksgiving and praise, the name of Christ never occurs. And it is a rare thing for his name to be found in any public prayer offered by chaplains or other "clergymen," at the opening of public assemblies, conventions, etc., of a civil or political character. Why is this? Is it not the leaven of Masonry?

Nearly all the politicians, statesmen and clergymen who follow in their wake are Freemasons. It is high time to sound an alarm. Editors and preachers, who are not Masons, have been afraid to say anything on the subject. They seem to have stood in awe of the mysterious system called Masonry. They have looked into their "charts" and "monitors" and gazed at the mysterious figures and pictures, the swords, coffins, etc., until they have quailed before the mysterious thing.

But the Christian has nothing to fear in this investigation. While he experimentally knows nothing of, and cares nothing for the mystic forms, rites and ceremonies of the order, he can take up their charts and monitors, and comparing these with the Word of God, expose the antagonism between Masonry and Christianity.

This I have done in this review. I have only touched on a few points, and have by no means exhausted the subject. I may sometime add to what I have written here.

I cannot close what I have to say without beseeching Christians everywhere to consider this subject well before uniting with the Masonic order. And to those professing Christians who already belong to the Masonic fraternity let me say, that if you have assumed obligations which you are told you cannot throw off, you are mistaken. God's Word, Lev. 5: 4,5, requires it of you. It is your only way out of the dilemma.

Taking your view of it, you can at least cease to be active members of the order and give all your influence to the Church of God, that church which the Lord has "purchased with his own blood, that he might present it to himself a glorious church having neither spot nor wrinkle nor any such thing." The Lord is jealous of his honor and his glory, and will not divide them with another. Christianity is enough. We need nothing more to make us "perfect in Christ Jesus," to fit us for usefulness here, and for glory, honor and immortality hereafter.

Let us, then, divorce ourselves from all else and devote our time, or talents, our heads, our hearts, our hands and all our means to the "Church of the Living God." Amen.

FRIENDLY CRITICS.

BY REV. J P. STODDARD.

Prohibitionists are charged by temperance Republicans and Democrats with being narrow, short-sighted, impracticable and extreme in their methods. They mean well but lack common sense. Abolitionists in their day were dubbed bigots, fanatics and disturbers of the peace. Slavery was a crime per se. It was local and lawful, and not to be obtruded into the prayer meeting or sacred desk. Harsh words and, above all, personalities were inexcusable when dealing with a time honored constitutional institution. Broad-minded statesmen like Webster, Chote and Hains should be treated with becoming deference for their high positions, and no censure was too severe for the Abolitionist who dared lay his hand upon the approved minister of the churches.

Garrison, Phillips, Finney and Colver never could please everybody, and frequently shocked the delicate sensibilities of their friends. Pioneers in all reforms become familiar with objections honestly urged by their friends. Those who expose the secret orders with any vigor have not escaped the chastening rod. Rarely have reformers been more severely criticised than Blanchard, Finney, Crooks, Edwards, Levington and Barlow, who have ceased from their labors; or Baird, Ronayne, McIntire and Fenton, who are spared to wield the Damascus blade of truth.

Possibly the new "Century" dictionary may supply epithets with which these men have not been decorated by their enemies, but the old catalogue of invectives was exhausted years ago, and it cannot be denied that true friends have sometimes echoed those anathemas. While no one claims absolute perfection to suggest that among their critics are some to whom even an approach to their record would be worthy of their best efforts. They were in earnest and gave expression to their convictions in language that made others think and feel, whether they agreed with them or not. It is to such men that the reform owes its existence.

They saw the shadow of a hideous rival coming over the church of Christ as the lodges rose out of the superstition, priestcraft and mysteries of Babylon, Egypt and pagan Rome. They felt the throbings of a mighty engine wearing away the foundation of our civil and religious liberties, and worse than all, they found men rejecting Christ and insanely clinging to the hope of salvation through the deistic worship of a vapid ritualism, and no marvel if they were stirred to seemingly intemperate utterance at times. After stating and arguing so important a case fairly, and challenging opponents to an honorable discussion without avail, is it any wonder that capable men use strong language? When discussion is refused and pacific measures are unavailing, what remains but the lancet, the harpoon or the spear? It comes to the experiment of the boy with the turtle; other methods failing a live coal on the back brought the head and claws from under their horny rind.

There are times when forbearance ceases to be a virtue. When Moses must put the test, "who is on the Lord's side;" when Nathan must say to David, "Thou art the man." Times when reformers are compelled to be personal. Progress is impossible without it. Principles ought to be discussed. Evils should have no quarters. The facts of history have their place in settling present issues, but to be forever discussing becomes monotonous. Abstract evils are mythical until embodied in something tangible. Ransacking history when the fight is on would be like going for a ghost hunt in a graveyard, when the future of a nation was pending in bloody struggle at the gates of Richmond.

These men knew that a harpoon driven into the flesh of a living man would do more to advance the cause they championed those pounding on the coffin of a dead Morgan, or hurling projectiles against impersonal schemes. So like the brave boys at the "bloody angle," they lowered their guns, picked their men and fired. Call that personal if you like, or even severe, but don't forget that it was exactly that kind of personality on the part of Garrison, Phillips and the brave boys with repeating-rifles that abolished slavery and saved the Union.

I would like to say more but this article is already too long. I must add this one word of advice. Let those disposed to criticise be sure that their lives are made as worthy the gratitude of posterity as those of the men to whom, and in no unkind spirit they take exceptions.

THE CHURCH OR LODGE—WHICH?

Masonic morality like its charity is limited to members, and its benefits do not extend beyond the lodge. It follows that some Masons may be guilty of every crime, and bad citizens, and men according to the judgment of others, and still be tolerated by the order.

Formerly, most churches excluded Masons on account of their immorality; but some have removed the prohibition to increase their revenues. The consequence is that some, like the old gentleman in Cooperstown, N. Y., mentioned by J. P. Stoddard in an October number of the Cynosure, think that the churches are no better than the lodges, because the same men are in each and both are credited with the same practices. And for the same reason that lodge members are admitted, their acts are disregarded or defended in the face of criticism and exposure. They are only expelled under the direst necessity. Passing events prove this and it is self-evident.

In demonstration the plainest proof is afforded by illustration and induction. Masonic writers are fond of citing instances of rescues from pirates and robbers by Masonic signs and assistance to prove that Masonry is both powerful and indispensable. In like manner the most effective weapon against Masonry is an incident which illustrates its evil character and principles. Some think we should not cite Masonic misdeeds because they are personalities. But all history is personality to some one, and Masonry should not be promoted by the precedents of partisans, and protected from the precedents of opponents from diffidence and sentiment.

It is enough to suppress names and use misdeeds for the benefit of mankind, for every example is the property of the country and an asset of the world to correct evil. Masonic power and aggressiveness and the danger and welfare of the public require it. Masonry is corrupting morals by its teaching and example, and destroying government by interference and prostitution. By the first it is warring against Christianity, and by the last against the republic.

Mr. Moody, in a recent sermon in New York, said that he was in a church when a member entered and took a seat before a family of the same church whom he had ruined, but the minister would not preach the Gospel to him, and all the Gospel that man wanted was, "I'll ruin my neighbor's daughter, but if a man ruins my daughter I'll shoot him."

An instance, equally pertinent, recently occurred in a not very remote part of New York. A Mason and Universalist disturbed the domestic peace of a neighbor, who threatened to shoot him. His housekeeper also threatened to leave unless the neighbor's wife discontinued her visits. At this juncture a prominent Mason, fearing for his lodge brother, begged an Anti-mason to expostulate with him to prevent a catastrophy. This the latter refused to do; but an easier way was found out of the dilemma. He was made acquainted with an heiress, who was temporarily stopping at the house of a lodge brother, and presumably with lodge aid effected a matrimonial alliance that secured both ease and safety.

Before marriage the intended wife supplied money to pay debts and purchased the farm which he had occupied as tenant, and he now retires to town or city life. His father aptly remarked that he had always been involved and in search of indorsers at the bank, but had now secured plenty for the future.

His brethren had previously procured him a minor office in which he had been incompetent or negligent in keeping or rendering his account. It will, therefore, be seen that the interests of the public, as well as of widows and orphans, are sacrificed by the fraternity to bolster weak or incompetent lodge brothers, and ensure payment of debts to themselves.

The neighbor whose peace had been broken was not a Mason, and he had not, therefore, violated Masonic law or forfeited the aid and countenance of the lodge. As the minister and every sixth or eighth and the most prominent members of the Universalist church were Masons, he cannot be judged or disciplined by the rules or standard of the church, but by those of the lodge. He must be defended by the former from compulsion as well as for revenues, and, as on similar occasions, its frowns, abuse and vituperation awaits the person who attempts reproof. The lodge abets and the church connives, and it is difficult to see where the one differs much from the other in guilt, responsibility or morals. The old gentleman's opinion of the church was, therefore, correct in this if not in all cases.

The church can be improved or justified only by separation from the lodge, and, like Christian, casting away this burden of sin. It cannot exist in a connection with the lodge as intimate as that of the Siamese twins without imbibing its corruption and perishing with its sin or disease.

VERITAS.

WOULD CHRIST VOTE IN THIS COUNTRY UNDER PRESENT CONDITIONS?

BY REV. A. J. M'FARLAND, D. D.

It is an encouraging sign of the times, that, when there is contention as to where the path of rectitude lies, there is such a disposition, as this question indicates, to settle it by inquiring "what Christ would do" in the circumstances. This general willingness to make human policy and conduct conform to Christ's perfect law and blameless life, is clear proof that many have come to realize the imperfection of other standards, and the inability to secure the best results under them. This disposition to determine truth and duty by an appeal to Christ, as Judge Supreme, encourages the hope that the "night" of willing bondage under sin "is far spent," and the "day" of the joyous liberty of the children of God "is at hand."

The question we have placed at the head of this article will, by most Christians, be answered in the affirmative. But their promptness and unhesitancy may be the result of limited, rather than thorough, investigation. A position taken after superficial reasoning, or accepted under the influence of a heavy bias upon the judgment, will very probably have to be given up when its weak supports are more closely examined, and a new position taken which will bear the keenest scrutiny, because it is in harmony with all the facts connected with the case. There is an increasing number of intelligent, earnest, patriotic Christian citizens in this country who would give a decided negative answer to the above question. The reasoning in part which leads to this judgment will, we trust, not only interest your readers, but will at the same time help them to a clearer and fuller apprehension of the meaning of the much-abused phrase "Christian Citizenship."

And first, let us ask another but similar question: "Would Abraham Lincoln, had he been granted the privilege, have voted in the Southern Confederacy in 1861, under the conditions which then and there existed?" The proper and obvious answer to this question is a decided negative, because the Southern Confederacy had, in the territory of the United States, organized a new government on the basis of a new Constitution, which ignored the authority of the government of the Union. The condition of incorporation with that rebellious government was the swearing to support its disloyal Constitution. Abraham Lincoln could not have complied with that condition without becoming basely disloyal to the Union. He could not, therefore, have voted or held office in the Southern Confederacy, and at the same time maintained his loyalty to the Union. And what would have been impossible for him, would have been equally impossible for any loyal union man. This is a short process of reasoning, but it will be accepted as perfectly satisfactory and conclusive.

Now, in determining the proper answer to the question, Would Christ vote under present conditions in this country? we should pursue the same course of reasoning. The parties are different, but the facts in the case are of the same kind and relation. The nation called the United States has in the territory of the Lord Jesus Christ organized a government on the basis of a Constitution in which the royal claims of Christ, the Saviour-king, are designedly ignored. The one most important, indispensable condition of incorporation with this government is the swearing to support its Christ-dishonoring Constitution. This is a prominent requirement of the alien when he is naturalized. It is the unavoidable condition under which all representative officers must come when qualifying for their official positions. The officer does this as the representative agent of the voter. Every voter, therefore, takes this oath through his representative.

Christ could not take an oath to support a Constitution that will fully disregard his rightful claims as the Governor among the nations. To do this would be the surrendering of his crown, and the acknowledgment of the authority of the devil, the prince of the world powers. It follows then that Christ would not vote in this country under the present conditions. And what he could not do because of the sinful condition it involved, no one of his loyal followers could consistently do.

FRAMING MISCHIEF BY A LAW.

We live for the long to-morrow,
With its triumph but begun,
When truth shall drop its shackles,
And the goal of hope be won.

Upon the removal of Sec. Stanton as acting governor, John W. Denver became acting governor, taking the oath of office on Dec. 21, 1857. On this same day the election to ratify the odious constitution took place. A vote against it not being admissible, the Free State party did not vote, and yet fraud was so plain that the Pro-slavery authorities voluntarily threw out nearly half the votes cast, leaving but little over 3,000 votes for the Lecompton constitution with slavery, and a few hundred for it without slavery.

From the smallness of the legal vote at this election, and the results of the October election, it was now evident that the Free State party could beat them on their own ground, and to this end leaders of the party began at once to agitate the advisability of voting at the next January election under the odious constitution. Far-seeing statesmen in the East had advised this method as the only possible peaceful solution of the Kansas question. Hence the Free State convention of Dec. 2d re-convened immediately after the ratification election of Dec. 21st, to try and unite the party on this plan of defeating the enemy, especially since the Free State majority in the legislature—now that the constitution was adopted—would become effective at the January session.

After a long, tedious effort on the part of the peace-party leaders, the most of the convention waived their objections to voting under the Pro-slavery constitution and were willing to advocate the proposed plan. But just as the objections were nearly all removed and the convention about to unite on the plan, a messenger, purporting to be from Lane, eighty miles away, dismounted from a foaming steed and rushing into the assembly declared that he had ridden all that distance without food or sleep to call the people of Kansas to arms, as there was a dreadful encounter about to take place between Lane's forces and the United States troops.

At this the convention went wild and moved an adjournment, declaring there was no use to try to settle the Kansas question peaceably. Thomas Ewing, Jr., mounted a table at this juncture and loudly denounced it as a trick to defeat the purpose of the convention and the best interests of the people. Ewing succeeded in holding about half of the members who met that evening to complete the work of the convention. But the war element, coming in on them unawares, put out the lights and broke up the meeting.

Then G. W. Brown, editor of the Herald of Freedom, announced that they would immediately meet at his place and finish the business of the convention. But by some means only thirteen of the original convention got together there. These, however, proceeded to nominate a Free State ticket to be voted for at the January election under the constitution, and an extra issue of the Herald of Freedom was struck off, abounding in arguments in favor of the course decided upon. Though only about a week intervened till election, runners were employed to carry this issue through every Free State settlement at an expense of over $2,000, nearly half of which, it is said, was borne by Thomas Ewing, Jr.

To a great degree it had its desired effect, but not without a little civil war on election day between the peace and war elements in the Free State party. Lane, John Brown and Montgomery hated the Lecompton constitution so much that they could not be reconciled to this course. The legislature met a few days before the election and made provision for a vote against the constitution on the day of the election of officers, but to be a separate election, to all intents, so as to not invalidate the election of officers under the instrument.

The election occurred on Jan. 8, 1858, and the Montgomery and Lane party prevented an election in several precincts, and broke it up in three places after half the votes were cast, scattering the ballots to the four winds. Free State men were stationed at the border precincts to watch fraudulent voting, and were threatened with death by the border ruffian element of repeaters. But they stood their ground long enough to get sufficient evidence of fraud.

By provision of the constitution the returns were sent to Calhoun, at Lecompton, who counted the vote and proceeded to make his announcement in border ruffian style, giving the entire Pro-slavery ticket a majority. As his return was final, whether correct or not, the Lane faction had some ground for their course in opposing any compromise or concession. But the die was cast and the game apparently lost to the Free State party. In a few days after the election Calhoun left for Washington to have the result officially presented to Congress, and Kansas ushered into the Union, constitution, slavery and all.

L. A. McLean, Calhoun's chief clerk, was interviewed as to what Calhoun did with the ballots after counting them. McLean said he took them to Washington with him, of course. But this was doubted. This was the darkest hour in the history of the Free State party, and its doom seemed to be sealed for war or subjugation.

THE BIBLE AND ITS CRITICS.

In spite of the criticism to which the Bible has been subjected, it engages the attention of mankind far more than any other book ever written. And judging by the past, the efforts of present-day infidels will be as futile as were those of Celsus and other unbelievers in the past. The Bible is here to stay; and as the years go by, new translations and editions are made, and its influence is day by day becoming greater. Referring to this characteristic of the Bible, H. L. Hastings, the noted "anti-infidel" of Boston, uses the following unique language in his pamphlet on "The Inspiration of the Bible":

"The Bible is a book which has been refuted, demolished, overthrown and exploded more times than any other book you have ever heard of. Every little while somebody starts up and upsets this book; and it is like upsetting a solid cube of granite. It is just as big one way as the other; and when you have upset it, it is right side up, and when you overturn it again it is right side up still. Every little while somebody blows up the Bible; but when it comes down it always lights on its feet, and runs faster than ever through the world. They overthrew the Bible a century ago, in Voltaire's time—entirely demolished the whole thing. In less than a hundred years, said Voltaire, Christianity will have been swept from existence and will have passed into history. Infidelity ran riot through France, red-handed and impious. France still feels the curse and blight of its influence.

"The century has passed away. Voltaire has 'passed into history,' and not very respectable history either. Few infidels would care to read publicly Voltaire's biography as written by a fellow infidel; but the Word of God 'liveth and abideth forever.' Thomas Paine demolished the Bible; but after he had crawled despairingly into a drunkard's grave in 1809, the book took such a leap that since that time more than twenty times as many Bibles have been made and scattered through the world as ever were made before since the creation of man. Up to the year 1800, from four to six million copies of the Scriptures, in some thirty different languages, comprised all that had been produced since the world began. Eighty years later, in 1880, the statistics of eighty different Bible societies which are now in existence, with their unnumbered agencies and auxiliaries, report more than 165,000,000 Bibles, Testaments, and portions of Scripture, with two hundred and six new translations, distributed by Bible societies alone since 1804; to say nothing of the unknown millions of Bibles and Testaments which have been issued and circulated by private publishers throughout the world. For a book that has been exploded so many times, this book still shows signs of considerable life."

OBSERVER.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To R S Thompson, of the Springfield (Ohio) "New Era."

DEAR SIR:—I had the pleasure of listening to the speeches of yourself and chairman Logan at Hygia Hall, this city, on New Year's eve, and was gratified at the noble sentiments of yourself and compatriots there assembled. You certainly have the right on the currency question, the monopoly question, the suffrage question, the l'quor question and the initiation and referendum. In all these you have the ethical sanction, and I believe that providence will ultimately vindicate the propriety of their adoption. Nevertheless (Rev. 2:4) it was not pleasant to hear you allude to the Prohibition party as cowardly because they do not take up all these questions at once, but unite against the drink evil, that being the most pressing just now.

But are you sure that the National party is as brave, devoted and self-denying as you claim a "reform party" should be? Are you not skulking and dodging an evil? and does not your party phiz perceptibly elongate at the mention of a system which threatens our civilization more than any you mentioned, with the possible exception of the liquor traffic? We refer to the secret oath-bound lodge system which now threatens, caricatures and usurps the functions of both church and state. Is it safe to ignore the fact that we have just elected a President who owes first allegiance to this dark empire, and that it can but hold a high hand in the next administration? Where stands the "brave party" whose chairman held up those who "bow down for popularity" to scorn? Know you not that those opposed to this imperium in imperio have waived their contest in this matter in favor of the anti-saloon cause, not because of its minor importance, but in hope of a union of reformers? These men certainly have a right to a recognition by you, which if you refuse, we hereby brand you as belonging to those who "bow down for popularity," as Chairman Logan said. Please let us hear from you on this and oblige. Yours truly,

H. D. WHITCOMB.

REFORM NEWS.

SPECIAL APPEAL

TO THE FRIENDS ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

We are planning for the largest convention against secret societies ever held on this coast. The place selected is Seattle, Wash. We hope to secure the Ranke Hall, one of the largest and best in the city. It will cost $25. There will be other expenses connected with the convention, such as printing the programs, advertising, etc. Will you help us a little in raising the amount needed, and thus share in the joy that follows the self-sacrifice required by this reform work?

Send any amount you can spare for this work to me here at Seattle, Wash. Your brother in the war against darkness,

P. B WILLIAMS,
Room 51, Hotel York, Seattle, Wash.

PROSPECTS FOR A GOOD CONVENTION.

AT SEATTLE, WASH , JAN. 18, 19.

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 25, 1896.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The friends here are joining me in the hope of a grand convention. Everybody whose name appears on the program so far as heard from are taking hold to make it a success. I have spoken since last writing at Third Street Mission, the Volunteers Meeting a number of times, Commercial Street Mission, First Free Methodist church, the Seattle Seminary and at the Swedish Lutheran and Reformed Presbyterian churches.

At each of these meetings there were fair congregations, a good interest manifested and some good accomplished I am sure. Quite a number of souls have been saved at some of the meetings where I have spoken. Nine made a start for heaven at one meeting. I may say here, that at each of these places the lodge evil is freely discussed. They call things by their right names. These are centers from which radiates true reform doctrines and Christian principles.

I am sorry to say we have not yet fixed on the place for holding the convention. The Ranke Hall costs $25. We have not the amount raised yet. There will be a few other expenses, such as printing programs and such. It is due to say, we have the offer of the United Presbyterian, Reformed Presbyterian, Swedish Lutheran and Free Methodist churches. But we want a more central place if possible to obtain it.

I have twelve engagements outside of the city between now and Jan. 8th, at the following places: Arlington, Everett, Snohomish, Marysville, Preston, Fall City, Snoqualmie and North Bend. I hope to speak at a number of other points in the city before the 18th, and thus prepare the way for the grand rally when the convention opens. Pray for us here. P. B. WILLIAMS.

HUMBUGGING THE PREACHERS.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Dec. 5, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—All the so-called great preachers seem to be saying to the devil, "Won't you please humbug me? I do love to be humbugged so that I can fool the sheep, please the goats, get a big salary and live in a fine house." Yes, says the devil, follow me; give me your heart; come into my lodge and worship me at my altar and all shall be as you desire. You have talent; you shall have a fine church, a fine house to live in and great honor.

Yesterday, upon being informed that a certain distinguished Congregational pastor is a celebrated Freemason, I called upon him, and made myself known to him an an Anti-mason. He received my visit with great kindness and cordiality. He told me of the reconciliation of the Masons and the Anti-masons in his denomination, and he read from their minutes the resolution which had been the means of effecting the reconciliation. The resolution deprecated such fraternities into which a Christian could not take the name of Christ. He was highly exultant over the fact that the resolution was the joint product of a great Mason and a great Anti-mason in his denomination. And he seemed to look upon the matter of secret societies as a settled thing among Congregationalists.

I mentioned to him the names of about a half dozen of the leading Masonic authors, and asked him if he had read any of them? He informed me that he had not, and asked me if they were Freemasons. Yet he acted and talked like an enthusiastic Mason; slippery as an eel and cautious as a cat, he played the part of ignorance, but I interrogated him upon what he must have done in the lodge in order to be a Mason, and undertook to make some comments upon the infernal blasphemy, when he at once and promptly drove me out of his house. And it is not likely that I shall ever be welcome there again except he repents of his lodge blasphemy. Oh, how the pastors and people do love to be humbugged, and the devil is ready to gratify them to the full extent of their desires, and he has the means of doing it in his lodges. W. FENTON.

INTERESTING ANTI-SECRET CAMPAIGN.

TRAIN EN ROUTE WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 30, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—For the past few days I have been laboring in Somerset Co., Pa. I found there a plain, industrious people. As a rule they are good farmers, making the most out of their resources in that line. They are of German descent, exceedingly cautious, afraid of anything new or mysterious. There are no lodges excepting in the larger towns. The churches most prominent are the Lutheran, German Baptist, Brethren, Menonnite and Amish. Their plain living proves conducive to health. There are among them many splendid specimens of humanity. Their aversion to the world, its fashions and follies has kept them much to themselves. The ministers in the Amish church are mostly farmers. They teach that they are not to have dealing with those who go out from them and join other churches. They take such passages as Christ at the well with the Samaritan woman to prove that this is proper.

Many of the young and those in middle life are thirsting for knowledge. To them ignorance is not bliss. The boy whose father told the teacher to give him no grammar or geography, got both grammar and geography. I learned of several heroes that are encountering great obstacles to acquire an education. The colleges at Huntingdon, Pa., Mt. Morris, Ill., and elsewhere in the German Baptist church. When the young man comes from college, his head filled with valuable information, his heart full of Christ's love, and preaches a masterly sermon, some of the old-time preachers think he is going too fast. Some of them don't like it, but the people do.

Bro. D. H. Bender of the Menonnite church, Chestnut Springs, welcomed me to his church. Bro. Bender is a bright, active man. He recognizes the value of an education and is both preacher and teacher. Under his care the church is building up rapidly. Saturday evening I gave the chart talk, and Sabbath morning a Gospel sermon. In the afternoon I was conveyed six miles in a sleigh to a place in Maryland called Casselman. There I was permitted to again break the bread of life for the hungry. Many were the greetings and requests to return received. Oh, what a privilege the reformer enjoys of feeding some who are so anxious for spiritual food.

Monday evening found me at my appointment in the German Baptist Brethren church, Salisbury. Elder W. A. Gaunt had heralded my coming. The people gave the closest attention, while I explained how the lodges are supplanting and attempting to rival the churches. A young man giving his name as A. O. McKinley came forward at the close, stated that he was a lodge man, but wished to subscribe for that paper (referring to the Cynosure). I am confident from what I saw and heard his stay in the lodge will be short. Like many others he has evidently gone in, not knowing what he was getting into. Some heard all four of my addresses, driving over twenty miles to do so. All meetings were largely attended. The sleighing was good. Twenty-four new readers to the Cynosure were secured.

Among those who subscribed in Salisbury I may mention Rev. Johnston, of the Lutheran church, and the leader of the Reformed church. They both have lodge men in their churches, but would be glad were it otherwise. My home was with Elder Gaunt. I found him a man of consecration and zeal. His management of the church was commended. There has been a healthy growth. He feels that there is great reason for thankfulness and encouragement. My temporal needs were cared for. I shall recall this visit in Somerset county with much satisfaction, and hope soon to respond to the request to return. I remain at home for a few days, and should be glad if any who know themselves to be indebted to me for Cynosure subscriptions would forward the same. We enter upon the new year with a glad heart, and a faith that God will do great things for us. When all the Davids that are coming on get out with their little slings, the Philistines will not trouble so much.

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MISSION IN BARBADOES.

HARTFORD, Conn, Dec. 28, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—To you and to all the saints who are opposed to the worship of the devil, as that is what I consider lodge worship to be, and only those who oppose such worship could consistently come under the apostolic benediction of saints, greeting, mercy and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who gives us the victory over all the enemies of truth and righteousness. Praise his name.

I can say that I am still on the warpath, and intend to fight it out on the Bible way to the end of my present life. When I commenced this warfare against the lodge, I expected to see the enemy routed and his guns spiked before now. But the sad fact is there is a very large army in the field at the present time who profess to be on the Lord's side and are drawing rations from the great storehouse of God's bounty and at the same time are openly and secretly giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

By all the rules of military warfare they would be tried as traitors, and, if justice was done, proved guilty and receive the penalty. But in moral warfare things are so different; instead of being considered as offenders they are applauded by the great congregation and given the uppermost seats in the synagogues, and, I am very sorry to say, that many who know better, but for fear of the people and their popularity, join in the shout, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians."

There has a man recently come to this city who has charge of a mission, who has several times publicly spoken in a way that was not complimentary to secret societies. He is a stranger in these parts and has not as yet issued any general orders as to what his plan of attack will be. Some are waiting to see what the outcome will be. He, like every other who goes into this war, must realize that his base of supplies is in the Almighty Jehovah, who will furnish arms and ammunition, but men and women to use them are scarce.

When I commenced to write it was to say a few words in behalf of the Christian Mission whose headquarters is at Bridgeton, Barbadoes, one of the West India Islands. I am glad to say that the work is not confined to that island, but takes in the "regions beyond" as the means are furnished. It is truly a work of faith, as they look to God alone to supply their needs. None of the officers or workers receive any salary, only their living and necessary expenses. I rejoice to say that from the commencement, six years ago, the work has been a wonderful success, as every work must be that is carried on according to the divine plan. They teach obedience to God in all things and oppose all sin, even to secret societies.

One of the early converts was a widow with eleven children to support, whose husband had belonged to several secret societies, and she was receiving about forty dollars per month in benefits from the different societies. When she learned that it was from the devil, she gave it all up and trusted in God alone to care for her and her children. She has since come to reside in the United States, and is now at Auburn, R I. Her name is Mary E. Wells. She has written a very interesting story of her life and conversion and God's dealings with her. She will be pleased to send it to any who will send their address, with a sum sufficient to pay postage.

She will also send the Christian Mission Herald, a monthly published at Barbadoes, which gives a full report of the work at the different stations. The subscription for the same is thirty-six cents per year. She is authorized to receive subscriptions. I have recently received a letter from Bro. J. H Hartman, one of the officers of the society, expressing a desire to have an anti-secret library, that the people may be more thoroughly prepared to contend against the evils of the lodge.

I should not omit to state that quite a number of the converts of the mission have been instructed in the Word, and are now in charge of different stations. Already the work is being carried on in quite a number of the different islands; also in South America. Why should not anti-secretists help where it will bring fruit according to the desire of their hearts?

Who will help to send them the library? Send money to the Cynosure office in large or small sums that the people may be more thoroughly fitted for the Lord's work. May God richly bless you all and keep you faithful in every good work.

P. BACON.

WHOLESOME TRUTH FROM WASHINGTON PULPITS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 30, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Rev. S. M. Hartsock, pastor of Ryland M. E. church, preached a strong sermon against dancing, last Sabbath, making it especially applicable to the coming inaugural ball. As may be seen from the following, he did not mince matters or take a halfway stand: "We do not believe," he said, "that it is right for members of our church, or of any church, either to practice dancing or to tolerate it in their houses, and there are many weighty reasons to support this stand. Dancing, with its late hours, confined atmosphere, the usual style of dress, and the sudden transition from a heated room to the cool night air, as is usually the case, is not safe, as many early deaths testify. While bodily health is damaged, there is no promise of moral or mental improvement. The moral influences are certainly not of a very high order. Nominal Christians may be seen at such places dancing, but they are persons who have no weight of Christian character and exert no influence for God or religion."

No sermon preached in Washington for a long time has been more talked about than one delivered Sabbath by Rev. Dr. T. S. Hamlin, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, on the American type of Christianity. That it was a striking sermon may be gathered from the extracts following: "We have an American type of Christianity. Wesley is still the patron saint of Methodism, but American Methodism Wesley would have difficulty in recognizing. Our Presbyterianism is a heritage from Switzerland and Holland and Scotland; but it is neither Swiss nor Dutch nor Scotch. Our Protestant Episcopal church is separated from the Anglican by more than the Atlantic. Even the Roman Catholic church, whose boast is its unchangeableness, has yielded to the spirit of free, democratic, simple American life.

"Our American Christianity has alone solved the problem of complete separation between church and state. This has been attempted elsewhere; it has been realized here. Our Constitution and laws protect every religion, but favor none. The purely voluntary support of Christianity is successful in many places; only with us is it a national policy. And its results are splendid, beyond the fears of its opponents or the hopes of its advocates. Our people give money lavishly for religious uses, though they would not endure for the same purpose the smallest tax. Our last census shows $670,000,000 invested in strictly church property, furnishing 43,000,000 sittings in church edifices alone, where 20,000,000 services are held annually, not to mention Sabbath-schools, missions and similar gatherings. This affords some idea of our estimate of that religion which we spend $12,000,000 a year to send to those who have it not."

Dr. Hamlin strongly urged his hearers not to help the foreigners in Washington to un-Americanize our Sabbath by adopting their custom of entertaining on that day.

GONE TO HIS REWARD.

MT. MORRIS, Ill., Dec. 9, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The following obituary notice is of one who has ever been your friend and a constant reader of your paper since its first publication:

Nathan R. Corning was born near Beardstown, Ill., Feb. 10, 1839. His father died when Nathan was only three years of age. He with his mother came to Carroll Co., Ill., where he was reared and received his education in the common schools. Being bred on a farm he had an aptitude for agricultural pursuits, and for a good many years was very successful in his chosen calling. He and Miss Eliza F. Newcomer were united in marriage in Mt. Morris, March 22, 1877, and to them have been born two children, Eliza H., who died at the age of two years, and Philo Blanchard, who was born Aug. 27, 1883

Mr. Corning volunteered his services to his country in the late war, enlisting in March, 1865, in Company I, 34th Illinois Infantry. He served until the war closed. He was a man of pure and lofty purpose, and of a keen, resolute, uncompromising nature, with much of the moral heroism that distinguished the old martyrs of bygone days, and it was his delight to wage war with the vices that came under his observation. He was an active worker in the cause of temperance, and was one of the leaders of prohibition in his county.

He was also a determined foe of all secret societies, and never failed to raise his voice against them when an opportunity was given. He did this without fear or favor. Has also contributed articles to the papers against them, and has expressed his views in public in clear, cogent language, and, in fact, has spent nearly all the accumulations of a lifetime in what he believed to be a righteous warfare against these evils of our country.

Mr. Corning was an intense sufferer from cancer of the stomach for many months. He bore up patiently, and one of his greatest pleasures in his last days was to have his wife read to him from the pages of the Cynosure, a regular visitor to his home.

A good man has gone to his reward, loved and respected by his neighbors and friends. Death came to him peacefully, Thursday morning, Dec. 3rd. May the good Father in heaven comfort the wife and son in this, their great bereavement.

THE CAUSE IN KANSAS CITY.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 29, 1896,
1015 East 12th St.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I am glad to inform you, that by the grace of God we yet live, and am earnestly contending for the faith that was first delivered unto the saints.

Since I last wrote you we have had not a few hardships contending with the powers of darkness in high places; but the Lord has promised, so, in spite of all the indirect fighting of the heathen worshippers, our church building is nearing completion. The side walls are finished and we are now striving to put on a temporary roof, and shall, D. V., move out from under the lodge room, our present location, by the last of this month.

Our work here has been a work of faith and trust in the Lord. We made several appeals, and succeeded in getting about ten dollars. We have not turned from our course, neither to the right or left, and in some way we know how God has enabled us to live and keep our building going. Our blessings have so far excelled our sorrows that we can only praise the name of the Lord.

We began work here in January last, with a congregation of fifteen persons; and in our first sermon we gave them an outline of our purposes, and steadily we have plodded along, while all of our brother ministers boycotted us, and many of their members spurned us, treating us contemptuously, but this did not move us in the least; so from our pulpit we assailed the church fair, drama, private card party, beer drinking, tobacco using and the church fellowship with the world in all phases. Steadily our membership has increased. We now number forty-five, and we have a congregation of nearly 150.

Last Sabbath night, Dec 15th, we had Bro. M. N. Butler, one of the lecturers and contributors to the columns of the Cynosure, to visit us. I gave a strong talk to my people along the line of Christian duty, and as a result four were added to our number. Bro. Butler made us a short talk, and among the things spoken he said: "I am glad to be with you all to-night. I have enjoyed your meeting. I am glad to see a church willing and ready to get off of the devil's territory."

Our success has been achieved because we are out among the poor. Our sisters meet every Thursday and sew and mend old clothing that they have solicited, and thus provide for the poor; and by so doing we have the hearts of the people.

Last week our brethren chose me as the editor of the Baptist Magnet for this State; an honor with no salary, only such as we may be able to get out of the paper. Bro. Cullor, a colporteur of the Cynosure, paid us a visit a short time since.

There is much land to be possessed, and we must go up and take it for the Lord. We earnestly ask those who can help us in the way of cast off clothing for the poor, to lend us a helping hand. Anything sent us in this line will be a great help in our work; by getting the little folk we soon get the parents. I shall send the Magnet as an exchange for the Cynosure. Pray that God may bless us. Yours on the field of battle, R. N. COUNTEE.

"STOP MY PAPER!"

BLANCHARD, Ia., Dec. 28, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The above phrase is one that almost every editor loves to ring the changes on, but it is an awful sin for a subscriber to use it, especially if he uses it with reference to what is termed "the home paer." We believe there are thousands of people taking papers which they would not take if they were not afraid of being abused by the editor under the caption of "stop my paper."

We will admit that it is wrong to stop anything good that we are able to obtain or help along. But are all papers good? The editors themselves will hardly say they are, but with them it will always be the other fellow's paper that is not good. Other people, however, can judge of papers as well as editors, and until all editors agree as to what is good we shall claim the right to judge.

This is the newspaper age. Their number is legion. God's Word says, "Of making many books there is no end, and much study is a weariness of the flesh." This is true of newspapers as well as books. We can neither buy nor read them all. We must and have a right to make choice. Papers are published to sell like other articles of merchandise, and no man has a right to abuse another because he does not buy his wares, whether he needs them or not. Again, if all papers are good, there is at least better and best among them, and every man has a right to choose the best.

But it is said we should support the "home paper" and "home industries." We answer, that depends. If the "home paper" furnishes what we need, and is best for our home, then to deprive ourselves of temporal good in order to support home industries is possibly well enough sometimes. But to deprive ourselves of mental, moral and spiritual good in order to support a home paper is asking too much. All papers are not good. As a rule papers are not published to be good; they are published to sell. The majority, especially of local papers, are extremely trashy, and a curse to every home they enter.

As a rule they pander to the lower classes. I once asked an editor why they did this? He said, "I'll answer you honestly: We expect all the good intelligent people to take our paper for the news, market reports, and because of their general interest in intelligence, but we have to pander to the lower classes in order to catch them." This is why we have the column or page devoted to sports, theatres, balls, dances, etc. Is it not time for good people to say, your paper can't enter our home with these plague spots on it. If you are going to pander to the evil, you must look to the evil for your entire support.

Again, there is always a clique in all small towns that try to control the paper. They suggest, dictate and threaten. They are not the best people, for the best people mind their own business. But there are few local editors that can resist this clique, and the result is that the majority of local papers do not represent the community, and are well-nigh worthless for good. This clique is usually composed of the lodge loafers about town, and hence the lodge controls the great majority of our local papers.

Bro. Foster has told us how the Jesuits have a man connected with almost all the great dailies to watch Romish interests. The same is true of the lodges, especially the Masons; and this extends down through the State, county and local papers, so that the press of the country is under the control of the lodge. It is claimed that the press is the great educator of the day, and it has a mighty influence. Just think of it. The Christian people of this country are being educated by literature under the control of the lodge to such an extent that if it does not uphold it, it never condemns but panders to it, while it lashes the Christians into line by the crack of the whip, "Stop my paper!"

Is it any wonder that the lodge is swallowing up the church? Is it not time that all followers of Christ should raise the cry of "Stop my paper" with regard to every sheet that does not stand for the whole truth of God, and establish and support papers that do? If they would do this we could have a daily Cynosure with the weekly made twice as large. J. R. WYLIE.

HE FEARS INJUSTICE WAS DONE.

COVINGTON, O., Dec. 23, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Allow me to explain that Dr. J. C. Yoder was expelled from our society at Huntingdon, Pa. There is a feeling that the doctor did not get justice by the committee. Their president, M. C. Brumbaugh, and their secretary were Masons, while they held official standing in our church. And they decline to take out their demits. And the committee did not demand demits, which was not correct, as my inclosed article shows, which also appeared in the Gospel Messenger. Secrecy is a hard thing to fight. I would like you to allow Dr. Yoder, of Lancester, Pa., a hearing in your columns.

I. J. ROSENBERGER.

THE ARTICLE ABOUT DEMITS.

QUERY.—"The church often receives those who have been members of secret orders, some of whom take out demits or letters of withdrawal, while others do not. Which is the right thing to do?" P. HENDRICKS.

ANSWER.—We will let standard Masonic authors answer:

DEMIT.—This is a technical term for the certificate granted by the lodge to a withdrawing membe.....The effect of demitting is to release the member from attendance upon the regular meetings of the lodge, from the payments of all dues and from service upon committees. It deprives him of the privilege of charitable aid.....The right to visit the lodge to take higher degrees, and from Masonic interments. Should he desire to return to the membership of a lodge, he should file his certificate of demit with his petition, and it becomes, henceforth, the property of the lodge that affiliates him." "Dictionary of Freemasonry, by Rob. Morris," p. p. 85 and 86.

"A Mason is said to demit from the order when he withdraws all connection with it." "Mackey's Masonic Lexicon."

"When a brother wished to withdraw entirely from Masonry, the Grand Master of Alabama (Wood, 1857) decided that a demit was the only means of withdrawal known to our institution." "Chase's Digest," p. 207.

"A Masonic demit dates from the lodge record when the name was granted, and, consequently, membership ceases with void date." "Reg. Ill., Sanford, G. M., Iowa, 1857."

"After once joining a lodge a Mason is always considered a member until he receives a demit or death." "Morris."

Hence the proper thing to do is to require a demit. This paper, with secretary's name and the stamp of the lodge, is a written witness from the lodge that he is not a member of any lodge. While a demit is also a certificate of good Masonic character, and signifies that all dues are paid to a certain date, yet with that paper in their possession they can pay no dues, hence get no benefits; they are separated, non-affiliated, not members. Lodge members have at different times come to the church and professed to have renounced their relation to secrecy, but deceived the church by such expressions as, "I don't attend the lodge;" "I've quit;" "I've withdrawn," etc. These expressions may each and all be true, and yet the person making the statement be a full fledged Mason. Through some secret way his dues are paid and he gets all the benefits of the lodge, and yet he never darkens the lodge door. I recently met a case of this kind. By demanding a demit you cut off such glaring hypocrisy.

It is true we hold members who were once members of secret orders and they hold no demits, but their character in this respect is without suspicion; besides they have ceased attending the lodge for so long a time that to now get a demit would require the back payment of all dues, which payment would be unjust to demand. But persons—brethren—leaving their lodge upon recent date, and declining to take out a demit, leave just grounds to conclude that such persons do yet sustain a relation to their lodge. I interrogated a friend of mine, who is a Mason in high standing, one of the leading educators of our country, on this point. He replied, "The only right and legitimate way to withdraw from Masonry is to take out a demit. You then have that with which you can protect yourself. Masons also issue a traveling certificate, which they call a diploma. See "Freemason's Monitor," by Webb, p. 241. I hope the foregoing condensed remarks will give you the information desired. —Rev. I. J. Rosenberger, in the Gospel Messenger, Mt. Morris, Ill.

PAGANISM AND ROMANISM.

ALBANY, Mo., Dec. 29, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The campaign is over. In many respects it has been the most remarkable in the history of our country. The results will be far-reaching for the weal or woe of the Republic. The writer spoke more than thirty times and in many counties. No great question is ever settled until it is settled right. The monetary of this nation was never farther from adjustment than at this time.

But we pass that to notice other things. McKinley is a zealous Freemason. He received blood money for rent of property as a saloon in Canton, Ohio. His pluralities were given by the cities—the saloon element, the boodle element, the foreign horde. Late in the campaign the Republican committee sent a letter to the Romish priests of the country adroitly lining the Catholics for Freemason McKinley.

It was published broadcast, on the eve of election, that William J. Bryan was an A. P. A. No doubt a million votes at least were thus turned from Bryan to McKinley. This throws Romanism at one bound into national politics. When the American people learn these facts they will have reason to pause and ponder. Trusts and combines, syndicates and monopolies, aggregation and concentration of wealth, discrimination and class legislation, subjugation and oppression will go on.

The banking monopoly is already planning to destroy the greenbacks and issue bonds that they may go ahead basing their so-called money on the nation's misfortune—on its debt. All this is to be deplored, but it is as nothing to the other phase mentioned. What is to become of Protestantism and Americanism when Romanism joins hands and at the ballot-box transfers more than a million votes to a pagan Freemason? Think of the Pope of Rome and Bishop Newman calling blessings on such a crowd. It could only be equaled by the arch enemy of souls reading the Sermon on the Mount to a convocation of Molochs, Belials and Beelzebubs. What think the Cynosure readers, anyhow? Am I right or wrong? M. N. BUTLER.

NOSE BLEEDING.

How It Is Caused and the Best Means of Checking It.

Nosebleed in children is commonly supposed to indicate nothing more than that the child tires easily or is overactive, says The Youth's Companion. Yet even these terms express more than is obvious upon a casual reading of the words.

If a child tires easily, or, in other words, if the least overexertion at play or at study results in a more or less severe attack of nosebleed, the child must be in a weakened state, while, on the other hand, if he is accustomed to allow his play or his studies so to absorb his interest as to make him forget his fatigue, he is placing an injudicious strain upon his constitution.

In either case he will be benefited by a curtailment of work and an increase in the amount of time allotted for rest, until his body is more fully developed. No child's mind can be developed faster than the body except at the expense of health.

Nosebleed occurring in middle life and old age is a more serious thing, as it indicates a graver condition of affairs. It is usually coincident with disease of the liver, heart or kidneys. Its cure is of course dependent upon the restoration of the organs to a normal condition. In elderly persons the disorder sometimes appears to result from weakness, which in turn it aggravates.

It is a common saying that in full blooded persons an occasional nosebleed is beneficial, and this may in a certain sense be true, inasmuch as the nasal membranes are thus relieved of congestion. But it is safe to say that bleeding from the nose is never anything but a sign of weakness.

The treatment of an attack of nosebleed consists in absolute rest and cool applications to the head. The extremities should be warm. The head should not be held down over a basin, as this favors the flow of blood. One of the simplest and most effectual methods of stopping an ordinary attack is for the person to stand erect, with the head in the usual erect position and the hands extended at length directly over the head.

How to Clean Delicate Fabrics.

To clean india silk or plush or anything delicate, put some gasoline in a basin; wash the goods between your hands, in the first place; now turn out and put in some more and rinse and hang out to dry. Gasoline is good to keep buffalo moths away too. Put it down near the edge of the carpet. Plush furniture may be sprayed with it, as it evaporates and does not hurt the most delicate goods. Be careful and don't have a light near till it has evaporated.

How to Mend Papier Mache.

First secure some putty and put this over the hole and smooth it down carefully until it is about the same thickness as the papier mache itself. Allow this to dry, and after it is dried put a strip of stout muslin over the putty, sticking it on with thick paint, and put another coat of paint over the mend. A coat of paint added from time to time will make the part as strong as the rest of the article. It takes but a moment to dip the brush into the ready prepared paint and put a stroke or two of the brush over the cloth.

Paper pails may be mended in the same way; so may the water pitchers, slop jars, etc. In case of an article needed for such use it might be well to paint it all over, and then it might be decorated if desired. I have seen this paper ware decorated with nasturtiums, and it really looked very pretty.

An occasional coat of paint would do a good deal toward making such utensils lasting.

How to Detect Smallpox.

Smallpox is more to be dreaded than any other eruptive disease, intense headache, backache and high fever first, with thirst and frequently delirium and then the eruption. Smallpox pustules are always square, and they are generally in clusters of three to five close together, but in very bad cases they cover the whole surface. They are at first a sort of salmon pink on a red background, changing to yellow and later to brown scabs.

All eruptions show first near the small of the back and on the stomach. In case of any of the symptoms named above a physician should be sent for at once and the child isolated and kept in bed until the doctor sees it at least.

How to Make Apple Fritters.

Core and pare large, tart apples. Cut them in slices about one-third of an inch thick. Season the slices with nutmeg; then dip them in the batter. Lift them one by one from the batter and drop gently into hot fat. Cook for three minutes; then lift from the fat, drain and serve immediately. Powdered sugar may be sprinkled on the fritters when they are arranged on the dish. Peach fritters are made in the same way.

How to Make Indelible Ink.

Dissolve ten grains of chloride of platinum in two ounces of rainwater. Apply with a quill pen.

How to Regulate the Children's Sweets.

More animal heat can be evolved from sugar than from almost any substance we can take. Hence when the growing child needs heat he will crave sugar or sweet things. It is best to furnish it at the end of a meal and never before.

How to Make the Eyelashes Grow.

Do not cut your eyelashes, now you are grown up, or they will always be stumpy. To thicken and straighten the lashes, rub castor oil or cocoa butter into them each night.

The Christian Cynosure.

REV. M. A. GAULT, - - - EDITOR.
WM. I. PHILLIPS, - - - PUBLISHER.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 7, 1897.

IS THE FAMILY A SECRET SOCIETY?

The straits in which lodgery is found, when pushed for vindication of its meanness and iniquities, are betrayed by its resort to an argument which almost casts aspersion on that divine institution, the family. The family, it is urged, is a secret society. Show us that family which stations an armed tyler before its door, demands a password to enter, requires each member of the household to take oaths which if known would disgrace the wigwam of a savage, binds all to religious, moral and political principles that will not bear a moment's examination, never admits a caller nor entertains a guest, and is never an asylum to the unfortunate or a refuge to the stranger, and we will confess that one family is a genuine secret society, a detestable one, and a true type of the whole noxious system of secret societies.

ALLIES OF PAGANISM.

Odd-fellowship may be less disloyal in its influence and tendency than Freemasonry. It may also be less aggressively pagan, still it is deistical in spirit and form. It also adopts, to a considerable degree, the same sunworship. It joins hands with Masonry in forbidding any acknowledgment of Christ as mediator in lodge exercises. In an advanced degree it teaches that no religion must be preferred more than another in the lodge, using to illustrate this doctrine of indifference Christianity and Mohammedanism.

At one point it introduces a parable of Christ as "an interesting narrative," with no allusion to its author or to the book in which it is found. It also uses the parable in a connection that exactly reverses its meaning and pointedly contradicts our Lord's teaching. Such influences would not seem desirable for irreligious young men.

HAS FREEMASONRY COME TO STAY?

Have vices come to stay? Drunkenness came early and has staid long. Theft and licentiousness, lying and murder came, long ago. So did gambling and Freemasonry. But is it possible that none of these vices can be overthrown? We know that the essence of them all is rooted deep in the carnal heart of mankind. But while each Moloch stands and its unholy cruel fire still burns, the messengers of divine mercy can rescue many of the children of men, and "by all means save some."

As Pres. C. A. Blanchard has said, "When a man believes that God led the Israelites across the Red Sea and across the Jordan; that God caused the walls of Jericho to fall, I do not like to hear him say that any iniquity in this world is here to stay, because if God is here to stay he will have a clean world for his people to live in; he has promised that even the heathen should be given to Jesus Christ for his possession." Yes, and he has promised that the saints shall take the kingdom, that all iniquity as ashamed shall hide its head, that Satan's kingdom shall be destroyed, and that Christ's will shall be done on earth even as it is done in heaven.

SAM JONES JOINS THE KNIGHT TEMPLARS.

Many admirers of the once popular evangelist, Sam Jones, will be pained to hear that he took the Knight Templar and Knight of Malta degree in the Rome, Ga , commandery on the night of Dec. 29 A gracious providence seemed to interpose a barrier to prevent this high-handed blasphemy on the part of one who had been so prominent in the Lord's work. A train on which Mr. Jones expected to reach Rome in time for the ceremonies was wrecked below Cartersville, so that for a time it seemed impossible that he could be present.

But the devil had staked too much on landing such a fish as Sam Jones. A large number of eminent Knights from different parts of the State were present to see him taken in, and a great banquet had been arranged for. W. H. Fleming, United States Congressman and Grand Commander of Georgia, and Grand Generalissimo W. A. Walton were also present to assist in the blasphemy of having poor Jones kneel at their sacrilegious altar while their glittering swords were aimed at his bare breast, and of having him drink wine from the ghastly human skull, repeating an oath, the horrible and damning nature of which is too shockingly profane to repeat here.

Surely, if ever a triumphant yell of derision went up from the fiends in hell, it would be at such a spectacle. Now let the religious press of the country faithfully warn the people against this apostate evangelist; this wolf in sheep's clothing. We have freduently heard him lecture and enjoyed his strong testimony against certain evils. But of late all must have observed that his influence for good has declined, and he is no longer quoted by the press. Poor Sam Jones, his name might have gone down in history beside that of D. L. Moody, but soon there will be "none so poor as to do him reverence."

DR. A. T. PIERSON ON THE LODGE.

T. H. Gault, of this city, has furnished us with some notes on a lecture he heard given by Dr. A. T. Pierson recently, at the Moody Institute. The subject of this distinguished Bible expositor was the third chapter of James. In expounding the first verse beginning with, "My brethren, be not many masters," etc , he took occasion to express the strongest condemnation of secret orders, especially that feature of them which placed men in higher and lower degrees, and exhausted the vocabulary in applying to officers such titles as Grand Master, Worshipful and Most Worshipful Grand Master, Most Puissant Grand Cammander General, etc.

All this, he said, was contrary to the spirit of Christ, who said, "But be not ye called Rabbi, for one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." "Neither be ye called masters, for one is your Master, even Christ. But he that is greatest among you shall be your servant." He has also enjoined through an inspired apostle, "Neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being examples to the flock."

It is the natural result of every anti-Christian system to exalt the few at the expense of the masses. Every corrupt government either in church or state reverses the order of Christ and says, "He that is poorest and weakest among you let him be your servant."

FREEMASONRY STOPPING A TRANS-ATLANTIC STEAMER,

A power that can stop a big trans-Atlantic steamer, after it has weighed anchor and is under way, is not a power to be laughed at. This was illustrated a few weeks ago in the harbor of Havana, Cuba. The steamer was in the Government service. It had behind it the orders of Gen. Weyler, commanding the armies of Spain. It had on board a number of prisoners banished from Cuba to the penal colony at Fernando Po, for political offences.

One of these prisoners was a Freemason, a member of the Grand Lodge at Caracas in Venezuela. The consul at Havana, from that republic, had tried in vain to secure the release of this Mason. Gen. Weyler had given the consul to understand that he was making himself decidedly disagreeable by such efforts. At last the consul appealed to the Grand Master of the lodge of which the prisoner was a member. Then came an order from the President of Venezuela to release the Masonic prisoner, and Gen. Weyler was obliged to signal the big vessel to stop until he could send out a police boat and bring the Freemason ashore. Who will dare to say that Freemasonry is not a tremendous power among all nations?

HOW TO UNITE THE CHURCH.

This should be a question of deep concern to every friend of Christ. The division of the church into sects tends mightily to cripple its power; for if what ought to be a single church in a town is divided into half a dozen churches it multiplies its expense by six besides greatly diminishing its power.

But the most effectual way of uniting the church is to destroy the wedges Satan is driving to divide it. One of these wedges is corrupt politics. If the churches could be purged of all those who stand upon Christless political platforms and constitutions, a great obstruction to their unity would be removed. Another wedge is complicity with the soul-destroying liquor traffic. If the churches were purged of all who directly or indirectly vote for license measures, a great barrier to union would be removed.

Another wedge which is dividing the church is the secret lodge system. If the church were cleansed of all members of secret societies a great cause of division would be taken away. Those who are laboring most earnestly in these reforms are doing the most effectual work to unite the churches, because they never can be united until they are purged of these evils.

CAN SECRET SOCIETIES BE KEPT OUT OF POLITICS?

The Junior Order United American Mechanics is supposed to keep out of politics, but every once in a while the non-partisan principles are forgotten. Just now the order is in a tangle over the United States Senatorial contest, and to make matters worse, the American, the official organ of the order for the State, this week appears with an editorial indorsing the candidacy of John Wanamaker. That gentleman is not a member of the order, while his opponent, Senator Boies Penrose, is said to have held prominent offices in the organization.

The Juniors mixed into the Quay-combine fight of 1895, and there was a great deal of trouble over it. At the next State council meeting certain members were censured. Since then politics have been kept out of the society to a great extent. With the opening of the contest for United States Senator the dragging of the order into politics was begun again.

Friends of Penrose and Wanamaker thought it would be a good thing to have the order lined up for the candidates, as there are about fifty Mechanic votes in the Legislature. Literature was prepared setting forth the qualities of the rival candidates and the councils of the State were flooded with it. The matter was sent out in a way which made it appear as official.

Within the past two weeks circulars have been sent broadcast among the members of the order throughout the State intended to impair the reputation of Mr. Wanamaker. Mr. Lichliter says that he thinks the order will be called to task for this conduct. The order is not supposed to indorse the candidacy of any candidate for political office. He says that he has nothing to do with the official organ, but as the State council appropriates money to the paper, it will want an explanation of the American's action. Mr. Lichliter was greatly surprised at this latest attempt to drag the order into politics.

This experience of the Juniors is one of many illustrations of the impossibility of keeping a secret order out of politics. The selfish principle, which is the ruling spirit of all secret organizations, absolutely requires that they be made engines for advancing partisan schemes and interests. To favor the clique at the expense of the masses is the object of all secret orders, and to forbid their interference in politics is to destroy their spirit and nature; yea, it would be to destroy their very object.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—The Christian Mission Herald is an eight-page monthly paper at Bridgetown, Barbados, one of the West India Islands. It takes high Christian ground against all popular evils, advocating separation from all secret organizations and total abstinence from all intoxicants. May God prosper such a herald.

—Rev. W. B. Stoddard is advertised to address a union meeting of the Ohio Synod Lutheran churches it Baltimore, Monday evening, Jan. 11th. The meeting will be in St. Peter's Lutheran church, 1105 E Fayette St., and will represent six Lutheran synods. We hope all within reach of Baltimore will remember this announcement, and try to attend this meeting.

—The whole Gospel, as preached by Secretary Williams, bears fruit. He writes: "Saturday night at a mission on Commercial street, where I spoke, nine started for heaven, and last night after I spoke at the First Free Methodist church, three were saved. One was a Roman Catholic young man." During last month Bro. Williams delivered sixteen anti-secrecy lectures and nineteen sermons.

—Last Monday's daily Record said: "Representatives of twenty-four wards met at Willard Hall Saturday night and nominated a full ticket for city officers on prohibition lines. A new central committee was appointed, and permission was given the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to name a woman in each ward to co operate with the committeemen. Following are the nominees: Mayor, H. L. Parmalee; treasurer, H. J. Brubaker; city attorney, Thomas H. Gault; city clerk, J. G. Battershill."

—Rev. Dr. Crafts, of the Reform League Bureau, talked to about thirty M. E. ministers in the Washington Metropolitan church last week. He told of the work accomplished towards moral reform legislation, and asked the co operation of those present towards getting the measures now pending in one or the other branches of Congress enacted into laws; Rev. Dr. Hartsock spoke on the "Forward Movement in New York City;" Chaplain Milburn, of the Senate, on "Health," and Rev. Dr. Stitt on Dr. Watson's ("Ian Maclaren") "The Mind of the Master."

—Rev. O. T. Lee, of Northwood, Ia., writes: "The Knights of Pythias of this place are closing the year in a manner very much fitting to that order, and in accordance with the will of their god. Their god has commanded them to dance, and they are obedient servants. All the churches of this place have worked hard to rescue the young from the snares and inticements of the modern dance; but these orders are setting up snares and inviting the young to spite the advice of their pastors, and come and be conformed to the world. In our neighboring Winnebago Co., the Knights of Pythias have turned the new court house into a dancing hall, and used it for such purposes in spite of the protest of respectable citizens. The 18th of Dec. said orders danced in the new court house in Forest City. What can we expect next?"

—Our Washington correspondent says: "The diplomatic news of the week has been especially satisfactory to the friends of peace. While no official announcement of the fact has been made, it is known that the British-American arbitration treaty has been completed and accepted by both governments, only needing the ratification of the Senate to become binding. It is expected that President Cleveland will send the treaty to the Senate soon after Congress re-assembles, and no opposition to its prompt ratification is looked for. The other pleasing diplomatic news is not so accurate, and its truthfulness is not vouched for, but it finds many believers in Washington. It is in effect that the Spanish government has indirectly but not officially intimated to our own its desire to bring about peace in Cuba, and its willingness to accept the proffered good offices of the President towards that end. State department officials decline to discuss this matter at all, further than to say that no official communication on the subject has come from Spain.

ABOUT THE HUNTINGTON TROUBLE.

Some may get the impression from Bro. I. J. Rosenberger's letter on our sixth page that Pres. M. C. Brumbaugh and the secretary of the committee are still adhering Masons, while holding membership in the Dunkard German Baptist church. But they each signed cards to the effect that they had left the lodge, and would never return to it. We are sorry if injustice has been done to anyone, and will do all in our power to set matters right. We trust aggrieved parties in writing will imitate the gentle forgiving spirit of the Master.

MISSOURI STATE CONVENTION.

Upon my return from the South, I find a number of letters from friends in Missouri which breathe encouragement and hope for a successful meeting on the 4th and 5th of February next, at Kirksville, Mo.

The pastor of the Christian church, Rev. Simpson Ely, writes me that his church has voted the use of their audience room to the convention.

The first one to pledge towards the expenses of the meeting, Mr. R. A. Cullor, adds to his pledge, making it $15. Messrs. Daniel Koup, S. E. Ross and Miss Bell Ewing pledge $1 each. Rev. A. B Lipp thinks he can raise a few dollars among his neighbors. We will publish his letter and some other correspondence next week. Rev. J. R Wylie, whose letters on the "Lodge and Saloon" in the Cynosure of late have attracted considerable attention, writes: "I want to be at the Missouri Convention, and will do all that I can to make it a success."

Rev. J. T. Cullor, who has been acting as our agent and colporteur in Missouri and Kansas, writes that he will be there, and that he thinks George W. Geesling, who wrote the expose of the Grange, will be there; as also will Rev. H. Hull, who has suffered so much at the hands of the secretists. I have not heard from these brethren, but trust to see them. And all can unite with Miss Amanda Sanderson, of DeWitt, Mo., in "prayer to God to help his children in this glorious work."

I hope to hear from many more before the month closes. Stir up your neighbors; pray and work for the salvation of the young men of your State from being pagan'zed by the lodge, and God will bless and save. WM I. PHILLIPS.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON.

BY REV J. B. GALLOWAY.

TEXT—"Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel." Micah 6:2, 3.

There is no disguising the fact, the world is full of controversy. It is true as well of politics as of religion. Truth and error, righteousness and unrighteousness, can never be reconciled; so that just as these principles take hold of men, they will be at variance with each other; hence it has been written, "How can two walk together except they be agreed," even in the child of God. "The flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other." Truth is of God, and Christ is the personfication of truth; hence it is called the Lord's controversy. Jer. 25:31.

It is with Israel and with all nations. With the church, when she goes astray, and with every sinner. With the world and with political parties, when they ignore his law and set at naught his king. When the Jewish Rabbi led the great Republican convention, of 1896, at St. Louis, in an eloquent but Christless prayer, all the thunders of applause of that great audience could not propitiate an offended Deity, whose decree with regard to his Son had been trampled under foot: "This is my beloved Son, hear ye him." And what does he say? "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." It is the same old question: "What shall I do with Jesus who is called Christ? Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour."

One God, the God of the whole earth, has a controversy with the whole world of unbelievers. "Woe to the world because of offence." "If ye believe not that I am, ye shall die in your sin." Not to believe is to make God a liar. "The Spirit has come to convince the world of sin. Of sin, because they believed not on me." This is the condemnation that light is come into the world, and men love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil. This is the great sin by which the world is condemned already.

2. God has a controversy with those who do believe, yet do not confess the Lord who hath bought them. It is a shameful spectacle when the bride will not acknowledge the Bridegroom. God can never be pleased with such conduct. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Rom. 10. "Whosoever shall confess me before men him will I also confess before my Father in heaven, but whosoever shall deny me before men him will I also deny," etc. Nothing less than open, free and full confession is pleasing to God.

3. God has a controversy with all those who do confess, and yet do not walk worthy of their high calling; who do not renounce the devil and all his works; who refuse to break fellowship with the world and its wicked institutions; who persist in following the unfruitful works of darkness. Christ came to break every yoke. We are not, therefore, to be "unequally yoked with unbelievers."

The yoke here is equivalent to a covenant, and surely includes the unlawful, irrevocable covenants of Freemasonry and other secret societies. "No man can serve two masters." No man can successfully worship at two altars, the one Christian and the other purposely Christless. "Come ye out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord." "Ye cannot drink the cup of the Lord and the cup of devils. See 1 Cor. 10:21. Yet how many in pulpit and pew are endeavoring to do this impossible thing? "Ye cannot be partakers of the Lord's table and the table of devils." "Do we provoke the Lord to jealousy; are we stronger than he?" This controversy is not mine, but the Lord's; and it must be settled somehow and somewhere, either by grace or by judgments terrible to contemplate.

4. It is love's controversy. He is pleading with Israel, saying, "Oh, my people, wherein have I wearied thee? Testify against me." As much as to say, let it be shown if I am not right in this matter. God's grace is amazing. There is yet a way of escape. "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God and he will abundantly pardon." "Repent, therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, in order that the times of refreshing may come from the presence of the Lord." These sins are the clogs on the chariot wheels of the Gospel to-day; causing divisions, alienations, and every evil work in the church and state.

ATTENTION, MINNESOTA!

The date of your annual State convention in the interests of the anti-secret movement is Feb. 23, 24. It will meet at Willmar, the Kandiyohi county seat, about 100 miles west of Minneapolis. Will not every friend of the cause in the State work for the success of this convention?

1. Try to have a collection taken up in your church and send the amount to your State treasurer, Rev. J. G. Hultkrans, Minneapolis, Minn., or to Treasurer W. I. Phillips, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill. They will see that it all goes to aid your State agent, Rev. Wm. Fenton.

2. Write to Rev. Wm. Fenton, 74 S. Robert St., St. Paul, Minn., telling him of your sympathy for the cause and the condition of the work in your vicinity.

3. Pray earnestly that this convention may be a powerful testimony for the truth.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 10. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Spiritual power—whence it comes and how to get it.—Phil. iv, 4-13.

Spiritual power is power from God. It comes from the Holy Ghost. The disciples were told that they should receive power after the Holy Ghost had come upon them, and when the Holy Ghost descended at Pentecost they received power, spiritual power. The one thing that is needed above all others in our church life today is the power of the Spirit. There is too much of a tendency to depend upon human means and human agencies, societies, bands and organizations. God's work cannot be done by these alone. The Spirit works through them, and it is only when He does that the best results are accomplished. Spiritual work needs spiritual power. Not by night, nor by power, but by My Spirit, sayeth the Lord." "Paul may plant Apollos water, but God giveth the increase." After all the blessing, if it comes, must come from God. Spiritual things are not only spiritually discerned, but also spiritually accomplished. God's work must be done by God's power.

Spiritual power comes from God. How may we get it? It is a matter of satisfaction that it does come from God because we are assured that we may get it. God withholds not any good thing from them that love Him. Above everything else He is willing to give us power through the Holy Ghost.

1. We may get spiritual power by prayer. It comes from God. We get things from God by asking Him for them. "Ask and ye shall receive" is the command and promise. And how willing He is to give His Holy Spirit if we ask—more willing, Jesus says, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children. If we really want spiritual power, we should pray to God for it, pray earnestly and unceasingly for the outpouring of His spirit upon us. If we get a baptism of the Holy Ghost, we will have spiritual power.

2. We may get spiritual power by obedience. God gives power to those who serve Him. He gave the spirit to the apostles because they obeyed His command to tarry at Jerusalem until He gave them the power. Obedience is necessary to spiritual power. If we give ourselves up to the will of God, His will will possess us and He will work through us.

3. We may get spiritual power by using what we have. All spiritual power is from God. If we possess it to the smallest degree, it may be increased by use. Physical exercise is profitable. It strengthens and increases the power of the man. Spiritual exercise has the same effect exactly. It adds power to power until the Holy Ghost has complete control of us.

Bible Readings.—Isa. xl, 28-31; xlii, 1-4; lxii, 1-4; Mic. iii, 8; Zech. iv, 6; Luke v, 17; xxiv, 45-53; John i, 11, 12; Acts i, 8; vi, 1-8; viii, 9-25; Rom. xv, 17-19; I Cor. v, 3-5; II Cor. xii, 9, 10; Eph, i, 15-23; II Tim. i, 7; Rev. ii, 26.

The True Christian.

Christian love is not the dream of a philosopher sitting in his study and benevolently wishing the world were better than it is, congratulating himself, perhaps, all the time on the superiority shown by himself over less amiable natures. Injure one of these beaming sons of good humor, and he bears malice, deep, unrelenting, and refuses to forgive. But give us the man who, instead of retiring to some small, select society, or rather association, where his own opinions shall be reflected, can mix with men where his sympathies are unmet and his tastes are jarred and his views are traversed at every turn and still can be just and gentle and forbearing. Give us the man who can be insulted and not retaliate, meet rudeness and still be courteous—the man who, like the Apostle Paul, buffeted and disliked, can yet be generous and make allowances.—Presbyterian Banner.

For the Happiness of Others.

Wealth being the gift of God, it must not be used contrary to the wishes of the Benefactor. It is proper that a fitting token of gratitude be made to Him and that His example of well doing unto others be emulated by those who have themselves benefited by the exercise of this attribute. Hence proceeds an entirely different understanding of the uses of wealth. It is laden with responsibility. It demands unselfishness in its administration and requires that it be used not recklessly, not tyrannically, but for the happiness of all.—Jewish Exponent.

Missionary Campaigning.

A certain society of Christian Endeavor in the country had given nothing to foreign missions for two years, says The Golden Rule. A company of student volunteers, working as a missionary extension committee of the county union, made them a visit, and now 15 persons have taken the Fulton pledge and the society has voted money for missionary literature. Such are the results of active union missionary campaigning.

A First Mortgage.

The devil has a first mortgage on the sinner's soul, body and worldly possessions and is only waiting for a good chance to close it out.—Christian Instructor.

PARIS ADMIRES HER.

The French Capital Reverses the Newport Verdict on an American Woman.

Mrs. Joseph De la Mar is said to be the most admired American woman in Paris. The Frenchmen simply rave over her. Captain and Mrs. De la Mar have secured a fine hotel at 89 Avenue Niel, in Paris, where they will live during the ensuing year. Mrs. De la Mar is now 22 years old, has a profusion of fair hair, regular features and a perfect complexion.

In direct contrast to the furore her beauty has created in Paris was the coldness with which she was received in Newport. She, with her husband, occupied the King cottage, on Bellevue avenue, during the summer of 1895 and was not received in the best of society. The men said that Mrs. De la Mar was too pretty to be tolerated by the women. Captain De La Mar, who is the owner of Colorado mines, is said to have a prodigious income and has been spoken of as the modern Monte-Christo.

An Airing Indoors.

Elderly people and others who may be temporarily house bound and prevented from enjoying a regular daily stroll outdoors can devise a fair substitute as follows: Bundle up as if for the usual constitutional, select a large, sunny room, preferably at the top of the house, open wide the windows, shut off the heat and move around briskly, going to the window and inhaling the fresh air deeply through the nostrils. We have often called attention to the fact that house air, with its many impurities, overheated condition and general lifelessness, is one of the principal predisposing causes to colds and catarrhal affections. Where a patient or invalid is confined to bed, if the shoulders are kept well covered and the head lightly protected, the windows may be opened and the room flushed with fresh air without any special risk, provided the current does not strike them too directly. The danger from want of proper ventilation is decidedly greater. Deep inhalations of air at the open window, taken gently through the nose, impart an enlivening and tonic influence to the whole nervous system, which can soon be demonstrated by a personal experiment. — Health Magazine.

Jewish Women.

Speaking of the part Jewish women take in the world's progress, the New York Commercial Advertiser says: "The first woman resident in a general hospital in New York was a Jewess, Dr. Josephine Walter. The first woman dentist of Germany was a Jewess, Dr. Fanny Sternfeldt. The fifth training school for nurses established in this country was founded by a Jewess, Mrs. Alma Hendricks of New York. The largest scholarship ever bestowed on an art student was given by a Jewess, Mrs. J. H. Lazarus of New York. May Abrams has become the first woman factory inspector in London, and the latest projected movement in New York to empower trained nurses to become inspectors of tenement districts has been started by a Jewess."

What the Women Did.

Rev. Phebe Hanaford says, "The Biblical text, 'And I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish, wiping it and turning it upside down,' plainly means that in those days men were engaged in menial work." She may or may not be right in this particular instance, but listen to an extract from the quaint description of the Egyptians given by William Waterman in "The Fardle of Facions," published over three centuries ago, "Their women in old tyme had all the trade of occupying, and brokage abrode, and reuelled at the Tauerne, and kepte lustie chiere: and the men satte at home spinnyng and woorkyng of Lace, and suche other thynges as women are wonte." The modern woman is very ancient.

Famous In Cookery.

The Princess of Soubise invented the soup now called after her, while the Princess of Conde gave her name to a particular mode of serving a breast of mutton. The Duchess of Mailly, vying with her, invented a special way of dressing a leg of the same animal. Louise de la Valliere was an adept in the culinary art, and Mme. de Maintenon, learned as she was, would prepare dishes for her royal master.

The New Advantages of Women.

While we must not for a moment lose sight of the fact that the generations of women who have vanished into the dim aisles of the past were many of them model wives, mothers, sisters and daughters, it is a fact not to be disputed that they were in the very nature of things shut out from many of the advantages their descendants enjoy and had not the wherewithal to accomplish certain ends that are possible to the women of the present generation.

If the betterment and brightening of the home is the chief end of woman—a proposition that no intelligent person will dream of questioning—then today's homemaker and homekeeper enjoys the proud distinction of standing far above her ancestors in opportunities for bettering and elevating that beautiful realm over which the home queen is supposed to reign supreme.

Half a century ago a medical scientist declared that there was but little use in doctors trying to decrease infant mortality while the mothers clung to old theories and traditions and refused to accept the better conditions that science and discoveries were placing within their reach. Overnice mothers washed the little lives out of their babies because they fancied their cleanliness was next to godliness, and they suffered the little children to go into the kingdom of heaven in battalions and floated them along with tears, the physician's advice or orders to the contrary notwithstanding. Those who leaned to the other extreme neglected their little ones, and they died of diseases induced by dirt and carelessness or kept the children in overheated rooms until they became supersensitive and died at the very slightest exposure.

Ignorance compounded elements that were incongruous and sometimes actually poisonous and went into mourning and refused to be comforted when through its own blind blundering its loved ones were taken from its arms. Following in the footsteps of those who went before it, unthinking obedience to custom presided at the family board and prepared dishes that entailed suffering and sorrow not only upon the partakers, but upon generations yet unborn. Sanitation and hygiene were as Greek to the average household, and whole families were swept away by maladies that raged as a plague.

And no one seemed to know the reason why. After a time a few women began to take an interest in outside things that were intimately connected with the affairs of their households. They studied cookbooks and learned the philosophy and chemistry of food. They took up the subjects of sanitation and hygiene, and, once mastered, they applied the principles to the daily life and arrangements of their households. The results were so pleasing and the conditions were so much improved that they felt constraned to proclaim from the very housetops the good tidings of great joy unto all people.

The sewing society was too limited as a field for disseminating such information, and the club was the next thing in order.

And now all well regulated women's clubs deal in a more or less comprehensive fashion with all matters pertaining to the household and the health, happiness and prosperity of its members.

All things new and of good report are discussed, tried and reported on, and the home of the sensible clubwoman is better ordered, more healthful, brighter, better, clearer and more permeated with the spirit of right living than she who plods along the mossgrown pathway of tradition and usage can ever imagine.—New York Ledger.

Hints on Making Over Your Gown.

Never was there a better opportunity for making effective use of small remnants of various dress fabrics than at the present time. Composed of these different materials, the gown need not have in the least the appearance of being a patchy or economical one—that is, if it is smartly made—for the very most chic and charming toilets and costumes are formed of just such beautiful odds and ends of brilliant brocade, vivid satin, silk velvet in black or dark wine or foliage colors, ribbon bows, lace points and medallions, rows of galloon, and so on. One sees at the importers' and high class dressmakers' elegant gowns, with waists showing one and not unfrequently two and three tiny bolero jackets graduated in size so that the edges of each separate front are in evidence, and these various pieces are all of a different material, and the outer, smaller and shorter one is usually made of velvet, bordered with passementerie or of rich brocade. Then come the ceintures that are made of plain satin laid in folds, of repped silk or of a material matching one of the small jacket fronts.

Nearly every gown in its latest, most approved guise has a girdle either very deep, very narrow, or, if more becoming, of medium width. A slender form looks best in a very deep ceinture that is almost as large as a low cut peasant bodice. A narrow girdle sharply pointed is most becoming to a fuller figure. But in some one or other of their forms they are dressy and improving to both the gown and its wearer. The bolero has lost not a bit of its popularity. On the contrary, in fur, velvet, plush, velours de nord, brocade and many other handsome textiles, it dominates among winter modes. Very stylish young ladies wear boleros of brilliant British red cloth trimmed with jet black silk gimp or braiding.

These are considered exceeding smart over skirts of black satin or corded silk that are lined with red taffeta silk. The jacket opens above a vest of black chiffon draped over red satin, or it is often wholly black. The utilization of the bolero and ceinture is most admirable also in freshening the fronts of a partly worn bodice, very often the new additions making it prettier

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

TWO LITTLE MAIDS.

These Eskimo Tots Have Been Adopted by an American Gentleman.

Two little Eskimo tots from faroff Alaska have been entertained at Gloucester, Mass., the past few weeks. They are twins, 6 years old, and traveled overland with their adopted father, Mr. Miner W. Bruce, who came from Seattle in order to purchase a fishing schooner destined for the north Pacific fisheries. Mr. Bruce, who was born in Boston, is a well known scientific and literary man, whose work on Alaska is a standard publication of its kind.

In 1892 he established the government reindeer station at Port Clarence, Alaska, at which place reindeer are brought across from Siberia by the government agents for the purpose of propagation for a food supply.

The parents of the little ones were too poor to keep them, and Mr. Bruce decided he would bring them up himself. They are devotedly attached to him. He says they never quarrel among themselves over the possession of toys or other matters, as some children, nor do they give any trouble to the hotel people, but, on the contrary, become prime favorites with all with whom they come in contact. Neither does the transition in their mode of life nor the change of climate affect their health or disposition. They thrive in any place.—Boston Herald.

A Snowball.

Teddy never meant to do it, but when Tom threw a snowball what could he do but squeeze up another and toss it back? And how could he know that naughty ball would hop right over Tom's head and go smash right into the window of Miss Priscilla Prim's millinery shop? But there was the broken pane and the glass scattered all over the ladies' bonnets.

Tom dodged around one corner and Teddy around the other. When Miss Priscilla looked out, the street was as empty and still as if there was not one little boy in town.

"I got off pretty well," thought Teddy. "If she caught me, she'd make me pay my whole 87 cents."

Nobody but Teddy knew how many errands he had run and how many paths he had swept and how much candy and popcorn and butter scotch he had not eaten to get together that 87 cents. As soon as he could earn just 13 cents more they were all to go for the little steam engine in the toyshop window.

Just five minutes later Teddy stepped into Miss Priscilla's shop with his little red savings bank in his hand. He emptied it on the counter, and out came rolling such a swarm of dimes and nickels and pennies! Miss Priscilla was so surprised that her eyebrows went right up to her little gray curls.

"Say, I fired that snowball," said Teddy bravely. "So I ought to pay for it, 'course, you know."

"Well, you are an honest boy!" said Miss Priscilla. "But you are dreadful careless."

Teddy went past the toyshop window on his way home, and he could not help just looking at the little engine. But he was not sorry for being honest, not a bit.—Youth's Companion.

Boys and Girls' Bird Day.

How would you like to spend one day every year studying the birds? The boys and girls of Oil City, Pa., and of Fort Madison, Ia., have a regular bird day, which comes every year, in the spring, like Arbor day. They have songs, recitations and readings about birds, and in the afternoon they take a trip to the woods to hear the songs of the birds. At the Fort Madison school the pupils bring their pet birds, and the building rings all day with their songs. Besides that, the pupils watch the birds all the year through, reporting when the birds come in the spring and studying those that remain during the winter. — Chicago Record.

Brave Girls of Canton.

The most effective cigarette crusade of the day is being carried on in Canton, O., where a number of schoolgirls recently formed a league and went about securing pledges from their boy friends not to smoke cigarettes.—Philadelphia Press.

THE DRUNKARD'S GRAVE.

A Victim of the Poison That Dishonors as Well as Slays.

Memory stands at the foot of the drunkard's grave like a leafless tree in the late autumn. Each thought of the past in memory is like the drooping branch of the willow, pointing to the earth from the dead weight of its own despair. Love may have planted violets in the covering sods, which pale their colors, as the cheek of the mourner lost the bloom of health and happiness when alcohol poisoned the strong man and dragged him from prosperity to dishonor. Love, lingering and disconsolate, is yet standing by the sorrowing wife at the grave as she pays the tender tribute of a tear before taking up the burden of toil.

The cold winds of the autumn day blow through the evergreens of the cemetery and tune the boughs of the cypress and drooping willow to sorrowing music that strikes harmonious unison with the dirge of the widow's heart, whose protector was slain. While her head lay on that manly breast, throbbing with the life that was fed by love and the ambition to provide by labor the home where happiness, with a family all their own, would be a perennial guest, even while the strong arm was around her, and that greatest mechanism of creation, the man's brain, was planning the ways of life and picturing to himself of success —even then the demon was creeping along the veins of the strong man as the beast of prey creeps along the path of the innocent, meaning only the destruction of its victim.

Wrapping the thin shawl closer over her chilled form, the drunkard's wife leaves the grave to a solitude dreary as her own heart and goes home. There are children at home, though but little else that goes to make a home. Thin, pinched and cold, they huddle together for warmth. The wearied step of the mother falls on the hearing of the little group, who are soon clustering around the woman who has nothing left in the world for the support of self and little ones but the labor of her own hands.

This woman, now bereaved, but also released, may have been born and reared in luxury. Perhaps the occupant of that drunkard's grave was a man capable of heroism or honest work and noble achievement. He might have reared his children under the horn of plenty at home and have given them that greatest heritage, a good moral and intellectual training, fitting them for any station. Instead of this there is that premature grave—not a year old—a Mecca of sorrow, a monument of disappointment, a mockery of life.—Dr. Leslie E. Keeley.

OUR BIG RUM BILL.

Drink Costs Us More Than Bread and Beef, Clothes and Shoes.

Last year it was shown by the Chicago Record that there were in Chicago 170,000 families on the charity roll. Of these, there were 517 families in one district alone. The heads of 300 of these were confirmed drunkards; the heads of 217 of the remaining families were regular drinkers. This left only 17 families out of 517 who were supported by charity whose heads did not drink. Our people are the poorer by the trade; our cities, our states, our nation, are the poorer because the damage is always larger than the income.

Our drinkers spend $1,000,000,000 annually for liquor and starve for bread. This $1,000,000,000 spent for drink annually covers the value for one year of all the bread and bakery products of the United States, all the slaughtering and meat packing, all the cheese, butter and condensed milk, all the boots, shoes and woolen goods.

France's Liquor Consumption.

According to the London Daily Mail, during ten years the amount of alcohol taxed for human consumption in France has been more than tripled. Within 15 years the number of recognized drinking saloons has increased by more than 100,000, bringing the total number close up to 500,000 for less than 40,000,000 of men, women and children. In the provincial districts there is one public house to every 67 inhabitants. In Paris there is 1 to 30, in the manufacturing towns of the north 1 to 15. Within 30 years the average annual consumption of alcohol for each inhabitant of France has increased from a little more than a quart to considerably more than a gallon.

Temperance In Iceland.

Iceland has never allowed a gallon of intoxicants to be manufactured within its borders, but Copenhagen merchants send quantities of stimulants through firms located on that island. One-fifth of all the clergymen and about one-third of the members of the national legislative body are pronounced temperance advocates.

Drink Epigrams.

The man who drinks to drown his sorrow is like the ostrich, which sticks its head in the sand under the delusion that, because it does not see its pursuers, it has eluded them.

Many "kind to a fault" are only kind to their own faults.

Many would be cured of sore eyes if they would wear their glasses over their mouths.

The devil never electioneers with a temperance man.

When a man gets high, he is low down.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON III, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 17.

Text of the Lesson, Acts ii, 32-47—Memory Verses, 38, 39—Golden Text, Acts ii, 39—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

32. "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses." The man who had with oaths and curses so cowardly denied Him is the one who is chosen by the Spirit to be His mouthpiece to this multitude. Being filled with the Spirit takes away all thought of self and all fear of man. He first quotes from Joel ii, 28-32, and says here is a fulfillment of the words of that prophet. He then speaks of Jesus of Nazareth and the wonders wrought by God through Him, and openly charges them with His death. He then quotes from the words of David in Ps. xvi concerning His resurrection and continues in the words of this first verse of our lesson.

33. Before He died He said that He was going back to the Father who had sent Him, and that He would send down from heaven the Holy Spirit, whom they now saw and heard in these disciples (John xvi, 5-8). Here, then, was the evidence that Jesus of Nazareth was really the one He professed to be, and not an impostor or blasphemer. Here was the evidence that He whom they crucified was now alive from the dead and actually in heaven.

34, 35. David did not rise from the dead. He did not speak of his own resurrection in Ps. xvi, but of Him of whom he said in Ps. cx, 1, "The Lord said unto my Lord, Sit thou on My right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool." David, as to his spirit, is certainly in glory, but his body still sleeps in the dust of the earth.

36. Peter, therefore, by the Spirit, insists that the very same Jesus whom they crucified God has raised from the dead and taken to His own right hand, thus making Him Lord and Christ and declaring Him to be the long promised Son of David to sit on David's throne, and the Son of Abraham in whom all the promises to the fathers are to be fulfilled.

37. The Spirit, by His words through Peter, took hold of their hearts, convinced them of their sin and led them to cry out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" There was no urging on the part of Peter that they should come forward to the penitent bench, or raise their hands for prayer, or sign a card declaring their intention to lead a new life, however helpful these methods may sometimes be.

38. When Jesus was on one occasion asked, "What shall we do?" His answer was, "Believe on Him whom God hath sent" (John vi, 28, 29). Peter says, by the same Spirit, "Repent and be baptized," which is another way of saying, "Believe." To believe that Jesus was their Messiah would be a complete change of mind or repentance on their part, and to be baptized in His name would be the outward confession that they had received Him. To receive Him would secure the forgiveness of all their sins (John i, 12; I John ii, 12).

39. The promise is to all who will come that they shall in no wise be cast out (John vi, 37). There were some illustrations of households being saved, as in Gen. vii, 1; xviii, 19; xix, 12; Joshua ii, 18. He calls all who hear and bids them come without money and without price. The God who sought out and restored Adam and Eve, who sent angels to rescue Lot and his family, who pleaded so earnestly with backsliding Israel (Jer. iii, 13, 14), is our God and the same unchangeable Jehovah.

40. Perhaps some of the "many other words" He used might be found in Isa. i, 18; xliii, 25; lv, 3, 4; Ezek. xxxvi, 26, for those are the Spirit's own words to sinners. Peter did not think to save the generation or race of Jews, but He did expect, like Paul, to save some of them (I Cor. ix, 22).

41. Receiving His word, they received Him and thus became children of God (John i, 12; vi, 63; xvii, 8; Jas. i, 21). Being baptized, they confessed Him and had the assurance that He would confess them before the Father (Math. x, 32). But think of 3,000 doing so! Would not some evangelists be tempted to make a demonstration over that? Whoever heard of such a result from one sermon? This was the Lord's doing and must have been marvelous in their eyes.

42. "They continued steadfastly,"—that is, they believed firmly, for there is no other way to be established. Compare II Chron. xx, 20, with Isa. vii, 9. This verse seems to say that they were instructed. They talked with each other of these things, especially of Him. They commemorated His death. They were much in prayer. How sorry they would be that they had not received Him sooner! How they would long for His return, and with what zeal they would testify of Him!

43. The wonders and signs wrought by the apostles would doubtless be on the line of Mark xvi, 17-20, and being such as He Himself wrought when He was on earth would add to their testimony that He was still alive, though invisible, and had all power in heaven and on earth. It was the Lord working with them and confirming the word with signs following (Mark xvi, 20).

44. One great family bound together by His love to them, and their love to Him and to each other, having a great desire to please Him and that others might receive Him too. They doubtless believed that all He had was theirs and thus were drawn to share all they had with each other. The Spirit controlled all, and it was a foretaste of heaven upon the earth.

45. Earthly possessions lost their attraction; they were no use except as they could use them for Him by spending them upon His who were in need. The Spirit of Him who though He was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, had taken hold of them, and they counted nothing so precious as His love, and the privilege of showing some love to Him. The first gave their own selves to the Lord (II Cor. viii, 5), and then to each other by the will of God. The same spirit today would fill the treasuries of the mission boards and put many workers in the field.

46. With one accord, with gladness and singleness of heart. This described their daily life of service unto Him whom they had received as Saviour and coming King. It is the third time we have met the phrase "With one accord." See i, 14; ii, 1.

47. Praising God is a good way to draw people unto Him, and thus they will be added to the church. In chapters v, 14; ii, 24, we read of people being added to the Lord, and that is the only real addition that will stand. Thus they are truly added to the church which is the body of Christ. People may be added to the membership of a church without being added to the Lord, but if they become a part of Christ by faith in Him they are then a part of the church, and it matters little what denomination they belong to. The Lord fill us with His Spirit to serve Him with gladness and singleness of heart.

ILLINOIS NEWS NOTES OF GENERAL INTEREST.

Summary of Important Events of the Past Few Days Reported by Telegraph for the Benefit of Our Readers—Items of Special Interest to Illinois People.

Decatur, Ills., Dec. 30.—Judge Edward P. Vail yesterday gave his decision in quo warranto case of the people of the state of Illinois against the Decatur and Eastern Railway company, otherwise the Indianapolis, Decatur and Western. The judge decided for defendant company, thus confirming it in the ownership of property worth nearly $3,000,000. It was set up that the company now was not legally incorporated; that it had usurped its franchises; that the Decatur and Eastern had been unlawfully consolidated with the Decatur and Indiana.

On all these points the judge found for the defendant. It is known now that this suit was brought by Attorney Crawford in behalf of the old Indianapolis, Decatur and Springfield second mortgage bondholders, whose claims were cut off by the foreclosure of that road. An appeal was prayed.

RURAL MEMBERS HAVE HOPES.

Will Try to Elect the Next Speaker of the Illinois Legislature.

Springfield, Ills., Dec. 30.—The contest for speaker is settling down to active work among the many candidates. Charles E. Selby, of this county; E. G. Schubert, of Cook, and Charles Allen, of Vermillion, are apparently running close, and if the opinions of those who are daily arriving is of any worth the speakership lies between Selby and Allen, but the friends of Charles Page Bryan; Tom Needles, of Washington, and ex-Speaker Cochrane, of Moultrie, do not concede this and are busy lining up their friends and trying to convince members of the lower house that they should have their support.

Schubert is showin considerable strength, and is the subject of favorable talk, but the efforts of the friends of candidates other than Selby and Allen are at work breaking the force of the popularity and growth of the two named. The fact that Cook county had the last two speakers—Myers and Crafts—has spurred the members of the rural districts with the hope of success and they are striving hard to select one other than from that county.

Chicago Sanitary District Tax.

Chicago, Jan. 4.—The legislature will be asked to extend the 1½ per cent. tax levy over the sanitary district for the next two years, in order to provide the board of trustees with sufficient funds to complete the work. Such was the decision of a meeting of the judiciary committee of the board Saturday, and its ratification by the board next Wednesday is not questioned. The extension of the extra taxation for two years will yield $4,460,000. The deficit figured up by Chairman Wenter, of the finance committee, is $3,850,000. There will be a surplus of $800,000 to be used in flushing conduits for the north and south branches, should the proposed bill become a law.

Chicago Gets a Copious Bath.

Chicago, Jan. 4.—The continuous rain of yesterday, following without intermission the downpour of the two previous days, caused a deluge which has rarely been seen in Chicago and Cook county. In the outer districts and suburbs the streets looked like ponds and many basements were flooded. Outside the city many roads are in an impassable condition and the fields are covered with large expanses of water. Desplaines river, Illinois and Michigan canal and drainage canal were torrents. In numbers of places the Desplaines overflowed and flooded surrounding country.

TANNER-ENGLISH.

MARRIAGE OF THE GOVERNOR-ELECT OF ILLINOIS.

Miss Cora Edith English Bears the Distinction of Being the First Girl Married to a Prairie State Governor-Elect—The Event Described.

Springfield, Ills., Dec. 31.—In that stately old edifice St. Paul's pro-cathedral, at high noon yesterday, Hon. John R. Tanner, governor-elect of Illinois, was united in marriage with Miss Cora Edith English. It was far the most notable social event that has taken place in this state for years, if not since the admission of Illinois to the union. Miss English has the distinction of being the first and only girl to marry an Illinois governor after his election to that exalted position. There were people in attendance from almost every county in the state, and there were public men and their wives of national fame. First and foremost among them was General Richard J. Oglesby, three times governor and twice United States senator from Illinois; Senator Shelby M. Cullom, General J. B. Hamilton, Senator John M. Palmer and General John A. McClernand. There were scores and scores of local and state officials and their wives, together with some of the leaders of society in Springfield, Chicago and elsewhere.

The beautiful Episcopal wedding service was read by the rector of the church, Rev. Frederick W. Taylor, and after he had pronounced the pair man and wife he stood aside and Rt. Rev. George Seymour, bishop of Springfield, took his place and pronounced an impressive benediction upon the newly wedded couple. At the conclusion of the benediction Miss Stuve, the maid of honor gracefully removed the front portion of the bride's veil and hung it cross her arm. This done the governor-elect and his wife turned and left the church and were followed in order by the best man and maid of honor, flower girls, ushers, family of the bride and groom and guests invited to the family home.

Here the guests were seated and served. The luncheon menu was as follows: Roast quail with French peas. Punch—Creme de la Menthe. Chicken salad; lettuce. Sandwiches. Cheese sticks. Coffee. Bonbons and coffee. An orchestra of nine pieces, stationed in the hallway and playing under the direction of Professor Louis Lehmann, furnished music during the reception, light operatic airs were the selections, which made up the programme of music. At the conclusion of the luncheon Governor Tanner and his bride left the city in the directors' car of the Illinois Central railroad attached to the Chicago and Alton limited train, going south.

FILIBUSTER COMMODORE SINKS.

Seventeen Accounted for Out of the Twenty-eight on Board.

Cincinnati, Jan. 4.—A special to The Commercial-Tribune from Jacksonville, Fla., says: Seventeen men accounted for out of the twenty-eight on the Cuban filibuster Commodore, is the record here, with a slight chance of seven more yet alive. Five men came ashore at Daytona yesterday—Captain Murphy, Stephen Crance (the novelist), the cook and two sailors. One of the latter, William Higgins, of Rhode Island, died soon after reaching land from the effects of the high surf. The vessel was twenty miles off shore when she foundered.

The Commodore had struck twice while crossing the bar at the mouth of the river and about midnight of the day she started all hands were called to the pumps. Their efforts were without avail, however, and the crew got out the boats when the water put out the fires in the engine room. She carried down with her a large cargo of munitions of war for the Cuban rebels. One of the survivors says that "a traitor in Spanish pay was the cause of the leak. He will be found and dealt with later. * * * Two boat-loads of Cubans, twelve men in all, were first sent off. One boat containing six men was capsized, and I am afraid that the men were lost.

WINTER WHEAT.

Results From Interesting Experiments Made at the Kansas Station.

A bulletin issued from the Kansas station gives the results of tests in the growing of winter wheat. Following are conclusions drawn from this bulletin:

For 16 years the station has had an acre continuously in wheat without manure. The yield appears to be falling off, and the acre shows signs of exhaustion. Growth is beginning to be spotted and thinner and shorter in certain places than in others. Early plowing for wheat, which will allow the soil to settle before it is seeded, shows a decided advantage over plowing just before seeding. Land subsoiled six weeks before seeding produced a better yield than that which was plowed in the ordinary way at the same time, but plats that were subsoiled a year before seeding and which in the meantime had been cropped with peas gave no increase over plowed plats.

A series of seedings made every seventh day from Sept. 13 to Nov. 1 gave the best yield from the seeding of Sept. 20, with a constantly diminishing yield from that time on. About the middle of September, therefore, is regarded as the best time to seed wheat in that region. The best returns were secured from a seeding of 1½ bushels per acre. The shoe express drill gave better returns than seeding with the hoe drill, lister drill or broadcasting, but whether this method gives the best yield in any given season will depend largely upon the character of the season.

The experiment with light, average and heavy seeds showed no marked difference this year, although the average of the experiments for four years is in favor of the heavy seed. Pasturing wheat this year did not injuriously affect the yield. In former experiments, however, the best yields have been secured from wheat not pastured. Heavy manuring with barnyard manure gives smaller yields than land in wheat continuously without manuring, the reason being that the wheat on the manured land lodges and fails to fill.

The best yielding varieties, as shown by the average of several years, are in the order named as follows: Andrew's No. 4, Turkey, Valley, Tasmanian Red, Ramsey and Currell.

Muscle Making Crops.

Ever since the silo has come into regular use in preserving the corn crop dairymen have been studying to find the best muscle making grain to feed with the ensilage. Cottonseed meal is the cheapest form of "muscle makers," and there is no safer way in which to feed it than with corn ensilage. Some farmers have always felt that they could grow muscle making crops cheaper than they can buy cottonseed meal, bran or other grain. For example, we have told how Mr. Bancroft of Delaware uses hundreds of tons of crimson clover and cowpeas in the silo. These crops help "balance" the corn ensilage and cut down the grain bill. There are farmers who feel that, with present low prices for dairy products, good clover hay and a few pounds of wheat bran will act like the meat in a sandwich to even up the ensilage.

In Canada a mixture of one part sunflower heads, two parts horse beans and four parts corn are put into the silo together in the hope of obtaining ensilage, which is of itself a "balanced ration." This plan of growing muscle making crops on the home farm is not advocated as strongly as it was several years ago. The price of bran and cottonseed meal has fallen so low that in many cases the old argument fails, and it is actually cheaper to buy grain than it is to grow clover or peas. In many cases it actually pays best to raise a heavy crop of corn for the silo on the land nearest the barn and put the other grass land into timothy to be sold every year, the money obtained for it to be spent for grain rich in muscle makers. That is just what some long headed dairymen are doing, and they are making a success of it, too, according to Rural New Yorker, authority for the foregoing.

Treatment of Seed Oats.

A bulletin from the Ohio station reports results of a series of experiments made on the station farm at Wooster in 1895 in the treatment of oats for the prevention of smut, in which it was shown that from duplicate samples of seed taken from the same sack the untreated seed produced as high as 40 per cent of smutted heads, while the treated seed produced a considerably larger crop entirely free from smut. These experiments have been repeated with the same result in 1896, a year when the smut of oats has been exceptionally prevalent. It has also been demonstrated that, with a very slight modification, the same treatment will absolutely prevent the stinking smut of wheat. From the reports which have come to the station it seems probable that the farmers of Ohio have this year lost not less than half a million dollars from oat smut alone.

Things That Are Told.

The short course in agriculture which opens at Madison, Wis., Dec. 1 next and closes March 5, 1897, promises to be one of the most successful terms ever experienced in the College of Agriculture.

Bulletin 26 of Nevada station treats of feeding stuffs for cattle. The leading stock feeds of Nevada are alfalfa, corn and fodder, Polish wheat, buckwheat and betts and beet leaves.

Professor Boffman of the experiment station at Laramie, Wy., concludes, after many tests, that sugar beets are a profitable crop for Wyoming.

An exchange claims that Montana heads the list this year as to the number of sheep, followed by California, Ohio and New Mexico in the order named.

An exchange tells that at Mammoth Hot Springs, in Yellowstone park, there is a fence made of elk horns.

The burning of corn for fuel this winter in some sections of our prairie country is more than a possibility.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

FALLS FROM A BED ROOM WINDOW.

Report That It Was a Suicide Proves Incorrect—Gets Up While Suffering from a Smothering Spell, Probably, and in His Weakness Takes a Plunge of Twenty-Five Feet to the Stones Below and Dies There Alone—Sad End of the Career of a Brilliant Journalist.

St. Louis, Jan. 2.—Following is a correct account of the event that startled all St. Louis Thursday as well as the entire newspaper profession in the United States:

Joseph B. McCullagh, editor of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, and one of the best-known newspaper men in the country, is dead as the result of a fall of 25 feet from a second-story window of his apartments at the residence of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Kate Manion, at 3837 West Pine boulevard. The body, which was cold in death and clad only in a night-gown, was discovered by Mrs. Manion's colored man servant about 7 o'lock Thursday morning. Waters, the colored servant, without touching the body, ran frightened into the house, where he told the cook of the discovery. She immediately called Mrs. Manion, who had not yet arisen, and told her that McCullagh had "fallen out of his window and killed himself."

Strikes His Head in the Fall.

The announcement was a severe shock to Mrs. Manion, and it was several minutes before she was able to control herself. Immediately on benig notified by the servant Mrs. Manion dispatched her coachman to summon Dr. C. H. Hughes, who resides in the neighborhood, and who was McCullagh's physician during his last illness. He hastened to the house, and after after examining the body ordered it removed to the house. Dr. Hughes' conclusion from the condition of the body when he examined it is that McCullagh plunged head-first from the window about 3:30 o'clock. On the ground around the foundation of the house is a stone water table. In the fall McCullagh struck a sharp corner of this stone with the left side of his head, fracturing the parietal bone. This caused contusion of the brain and instant unconsciousness, if not death.

Went to Bed in Good Spirits.

The physician is of the opinion that death followed immediately after the shock of the fall. The victim's head was lying in a small pool of blood which had dripped from the wound, but otherwise it showed no evidences of violence. Just how McCullagh happened to fall out of the window can only be a matter of conjecture. He had been ill several months, and latterly was compelled to keep to his room. He passed his last night unattended, as he had always slept during his illness. Wednesday evening McCullagh was in the best of spirits, although he complained of not being quite so well. The smothering sensation which had troubled him at intervals during his illness had returned to him in a mild form, and rendered him languid and drowsy. He retired to bed about 7 o'lock, leaving word with the household that he did not wish to be disturbed unless it was by his physician.

Wanted to Get Up Early.

Dr. Huges made his customary night call about 7:30 o'lock, and expressed surprise to McCullagh at finding him in bed at such an early hour.

"I am very weary," McCullagh said, "and I thought I would get as much rest as possible tonight. I expect my barber early in the morning to trim my hair, and I want to be up when he arrives." The physician administered to his patient's needs, saw that everything in the room was fixed for the night, and that the north window was raised about an inch for ventilation. Then he bade McCullagh good night, turned off the electric light, and retired.

LAST VISIT OF THE PHYSICIAN.

Finding of an Open Gas Jet and the Explanation That Is Made.

Before going to bed herself Mrs. Manion looked into McCullagh's room. She saw that everything in the room was in order and then retired to her own apartments. About midnight she woke up and detected an odor of escaping gas. She investigated and found a burner in the combination gas and electric light chandelier which hangs suspended in the center of McCullagh's room, open. The odor of gas was very strong in the apartments. Mrs. Manion turned on an electric light and shut off the gas. McCulagh woke up.

"Joe," she said," did you know the gas was escaping in your room? You would have been a dead man in the morning if I had not discovered it."

McCullagh was apparently too drowsy to realize what his sister-in-law said. He murmured an inaudible reply and fell asleep again. Mrs. Manion raised the open window a little higher, so that the fumes of the gas would leave the room, and then returned to bed. Indications seemed to be that McCullagh had got out of bed for something, and in trying to turn on an electric light he turned on the gas. He did not notice the error and retired again unconscious of danger.

Careful investigation warrants the conclusion that McCullagh was awakened later in the morning by a smothering attack, and climbing out of bed again, nervous and unsteady from the spell, went to the window for more air. As he threw the sash up to its full height he was probably overcome with weakness, lost his balance and rolled out over the window sill and fell to death.

There seems to be a difference of opinion as to whether McCullagh's death was due to accident or was the result of his own act. This latter theory is scouted by the dead man's friends.

The funeral is set for 2 o'clock Saturday afternoon at Mrs. Manion's residence. Rev. Dr. W. W. Boyd, pastor of the Second Baptist church, and Rev. John Snyder, a prominent Unitarian minister of this city, will conduct the services. The interment will be at Bellefontaine cemetery.

HISTORY OF THE PAST YEAR.

Figures on the Crimes, Fires, Disasters and Also on Charities.

Chicago, Jan. 2.—Some of the happenings of the year 1896 are summarized in the following:

The total number of persons who have committed suicide in the United States during 1896 is 6,520, as compared with 5,759 in 1895, 4,912 in 1894, 4,436 in 1893, 3,860 in 1892, 3,531 in 1891, and 2,040 in 1890. The total shows a steady increase in the unfortunate crime of self-murder. Of this number 5,078 were males and 1,442 females.

Judge Lynch has executed 131 persons—130 men and one woman—during 1896, or 40 less than in 1895. The number of legal executions in 1896 was 122, as compared with 132 in 1895, 132 in 1894, 126 in 1893, and 107 in 1892.

The losses by fire in 1896 aggregate $111,856,067, as compared with $131,578,206 in 1895, a decrease of $19,822,139. Of these fires those with losses of $100,000 and upwards contributed $50,726,200 of the total, and smaller fires $61,029,867.

As accurately as can be estimated 3,840 lives have been lost upon the ocean, 72 upon inland waters, 3,076 by railroad accidents, 80,061 by disasters abroad, 7,741 by disasters at home, 22,676 by epidemics, and 129,080 by war and massacre, making a total loss of 246,546 as compared with 275,391 in 1895.

The black record of $9,000,000 and more embezzled in 1896, is magnificency offset by the generous sums contributed by will or gift to churches, colleges, charities, museums, art galleries, libraries, etc., amounting to $33,670,129, as compared with $28,943,549 in 1895, and $19,967,116 in 1894. In the preparation of these statistics no attention has been paid to small donations, since to collect them all would be a manifest impossibility.

SITUATION IN O'MALLEY'S CASE.

Alderman Gets Out of Jail on a Bail Bond of $25,000.

Chicago, Jan. 4.—The trial of Alderman Thomas J. O'Malley, charged with the murder of Gus Colliander, was called in Judge Tuley's court Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, after one of the mose eventful and exciting legal battles ever enacted in the courts of Cook county. O'Malley was brought into Judge Gibbons' court Saturday morning with a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. Attorney Forrest was anxious for an immediate hearing of the matter, but the state, rather than disclose its evidence, recommended that the prisoner be admitted to bail in the sum of $25,000. States Attorney Deneen then caused a further sensation by demanding an immediate trial, which he set before Judge Sears at 10 o'clock.

The defense asked a change of venue and it was sent to Judge Tuley, who finally concluded to continue the case to the next term. O'Malley's attorney wanted his case separated from that of Santry and others, accused of the same crime—the murder of Colliander—and Santry's counsel wanted an immediate trial, but Judge Tuley concluded of his own motion to continue Santry's case. As it stands now O'Malley is out on bail, and has gained that much, while the state has won its desire not to make public its evidence, a point the counsel for the defense had in mind to win if it could. O'Malley's bail is $25,000.

BANKER KILLS HIMSELF.

Vice President Hammond of the Failed Chicago Concern

Chicago, Jan. 4.—The second suicide resulting from the failure of the National Bank of Illinois was chronicled Saturday when William A. Hammond, second vice president of the suspended institution, and its virtual head, threw himself into the lake. The mad plunge was taken from the end of the old Foster pier, off Evanston, which projects its ruined length a thousand feet into Lake Michigan from the foot of Dempster street. A short block away is the finely appointed Greenwood boulevard home, which the desperate man left in scanty attire between 1 and 6 o'clock Saturday morning to seek death beneath the waters of the lake. Less than ten hours afterward the wind and waves relieved the harrowing uncertanty of his family and friends by casting the body ashore on the Church street beach, a full quarter of a mile from the pier around which police, life-saversand tugs were dragging the lake bottom for trace of the remains.

Requested Mrs. Gougar to Retire.

Chicago, Jan. 2.—At the request of the committee of which she is a member Mrs. Helen Gougar stepped down and out of the National party yesterday. A joint conference was held by the executive and national central committees to consider the best means of furthering the interest of the party, at which Mrs. Gougar was present. Ever since the election she has been criticised by some of the extreme members of the party for her part in speaking for the cause of bimetallism in the late campaign. At the conference resolutions were passed asking for the resignation of Mrs. Gougar, whereupon she handed in her resignation, which was accepted.

Van Nortwicks to Resume Business.

Milwaukee, Jan. 2.—Efforts are making for an adjustment of the affairs of the Van Nortwicks for a settlement of their business affairs more speedily than is possible through the assignments. It is said that an agreement for a general resumption of business by the institutions in which they are interested will probably be reached in a few days, but the plans under consideration are not made public.

Colorado's Precious Metal Production.

Denver, Jan. 2.—A close estimate of the production of precious metals in Colorado in 1896 is: Gold, $16,500,000; silver, $12,058,000. The miners' strike at Leadville has curtailed the output materially.

The Missouri State Convention will be held at Kirksville about Feb. 4, 5.

One year's subscription to the Lodge Lodge will be given for a good copy of the July, 1894, number.

Denying Christ before men invites the fulfillment of his assurance of denial before his Father and the holy angels. He made no exception in favor of denial before lodge men, but lodge law involves implied denial.

If the Masonic or general lodge principle, that Christians may engage in religious services with other men, while yielding to their demand to make no recognition or mention of Christ, can be proved right, let proof be forthcoming.

One thing in the attitude of evangelical ministers, who are in the lodge, needs explaining. They disfellowship Unitarians for their doctrine concerning Christ, yet they fellowship the lodge, which holds and inculcates an even more radical doctrine of the same kind.

The one idea of the Cynosure is broad. It is not a party or denominational journal. It stands for the authority of Christ and his law. It opposes secret organizations because they rend and destroy Christ's three divine institutions, the family, the church and the state.

The Farm Field and Fireside thinks that Mr. Debbs' estimate of the cost of the late Republican Presidential campaign, as amounting to $16,000,000, is very nearly correct. In the dissemination of literature alone they spent $3,000,000. The other enormous outlays, including special trains to Canton, speakers in every city and town, some of whom were said to have received $1,000 for a single speech, must have footed up about sixteen million dollars, which in the end the long-suffering people must pay. Add to this the much less expense of the Democratic campaign, and reflect that about all the change it will make to the people will be that other hands will hand out their mail from the post-office window.

H. D. WHITCOMB.

There is a well-known tie between soldiers who have borne the struggle and danger of conflict together. Their personalities of mind, heart, and even body are mutually interesting; and the soldiery "of the cross" are no exception in this respect; especially those who read the Christian Cynosure, and testify against the dark systems of partiality and deceit, who nightly violate the fifth commandment. There seems to be a unity of reforms, all of which are upward struggles, and a "kith and kin" among reformers, making sign, grip or password quite unnecessary. Kingcraft, chattel slavery, the liquor traffic, monopoly, social privilege and the secret empire all recognize their common enemy, the reformer or "crank," and the subject of this week's illustration is one who confesses the name.

H. D. Whitcomb traces ancestry back to the Minute Men of Boston, who resisted King George in his usurpations. He was born near the time and place of the Morgan tragedy, and witnessed some of the subsequent stirring events which so quickened the public conscience as to apparently bury the system which assassinated him in oblivion. Inheriting the anti-slavery struggle, he knew something of such men as Garrison and Phillips and their struggles. He came West at about the time of the murder of Lovejoy at Alton, and here became personally acquainted with Owen Lovejoy, Ichabod Codding, and such like spirits. He held a place on the underground railroad while in operation, and braved the penalties of the Fugitive Slave Law. He grew up and subsisted on such mental pabulum as The Liberator, National Era, American Baptist, The Principia, and lastly the Christian Cynosure. Finding the old hydra of secretism resuscitated, with many more heads, and again threatening both church and state, he has put the lodge and saloon together, and throws every influence he can against them; affiliating with no church which withholds its testimony against them, or that sells its pews. Mr. Whitcomb resides at Bloomington, Ill., where he is an old settler. Visiting the families of his three sons in this city, he always gives the Cynosure office a call; the last was during holidays.

There has been a large immigration of the Slav and Latin people during the last six years, and last year they formed fifty-two per cent of the total immigration. But it has been shown both by census and by the testimony of the immigrants themselves that they do not go into the States which were pivotal during the last election, except to the city of Chicago, but congregate on the Atlantic seaboard.

How can Christians in the sunworshiping lodge, with its pagan ceremonies, wicked oaths, unlawful principles and manifold abominations, expect other members of the lodge to respect or trust their religious professions?

Dr. P. S. Henson says that Job covered over with sore boils was an illustration of the condition of our body politic. What Job needed was not salve or court plaster, but sarsaparilla. And what our nation needs is not mere education or ballots, but the regeneration of the people.

Who, that considers with due seriousness the solemnity of the judgment to come, can tolerate with any approval the outrageous imprecation, or no less outrageous trifling, if such it be to any man, involved in the Royal Arch oath when all the sins of two souls are invoked under conditions?

President Blanchard recently addressed the Christian Alliance Convention, in New York City, on the secret society question. His address was given by special invitation of Rev. A. B. Simpson, who followed him with a powerful testimony against the lodge; and by Dr. A. T. Pierson, who gave strong reasons why he was opposed to secret orders.

A friend of the Cynosure availed himself of an opportunity to have it regularly mailed to a lady, some of whose relatives were secret society men. When visiting at her home he found a copy of the paper still in the wrapper unopened. On inquiry he learned that she was not in the habit of reading it, and the result of his effort seemed wasteful and discouraging. However, he found means to excite new interest in the paper, and long afterward had the satisfaction of hearing the lady express her horror of her pastor's action in joining the Masons, and referred to the Cynosure as a source of her information concerning the unfitness of Masonry for such men. Discouragement may precede success as well as failure.

The Wheaton College Record says: "President Blanchard has been for several weeks in the East on a tour for the college. The points reached were Boston, Hartford, New York and Pittsburg. The friends of the institution in these cities share in the depression which has affected the whole country, but are interested in our work and again aided it. Many who have never been co-laborers with us would we think gladly become so did they understand the situation. The colleges of New England make at present no draft on the Christian benevolences of our churches. They are from seventy-five to two hundred and fifty years of age; are richly endowed and generously supplied with buildings. When the interior is in the same condition it will have no right to call upon the East for help, but will be able and willing to care for itself."

THE LAND OUR FATHERS LOVED.

BY J. G. WHITTIER.

Is this the land our fathers loved?
The freedom which they toiled to win?
Is this the soil whereon they moved?
Are these the graves they slumber in?
Are we the sons by whom are borne
The mantles which the dead have worn?

And shall we crouch above these graves
With craven soul and fettered lip?
Yoke in with midnight hoodwinked slaves?
And tremble at the lordling's whip?
Bend to the earth our pliant knees,
And speak but as "grand masters" please?

Shall tongues be mute, when deeds are wrought
Which well might shame extremest hell?
Shall freemen lock the indignant thought?
Shall mercy's bosom cease to swell?
Shall honor bleed?—shall truth succumb?
Shall pen, and press, and soul be dumb?

No! by each spot of haunted ground,
Where freedom weeps her children's fall;
By Plymouth's rock, and Bunker's mound;
By Griswold's stained and shattered wall;
By Warren's ghost; by Langdon's shade;
By all the memories of our dead!

By their enlarging souls which burst
The bands and fetters round them set;
By the free Pilgrim spirit nursed
Within our inmost bosoms, yet;
By all around, above, below,
Be ours th' indignant answer—No!

No! guided by our country's laws,
For truth, and right, and suffering man,
Be ours to strive in freedom's cause,
As Christians may, as freemen can!
Still pouring on th' unwilling ear,
That truth the guilty only fear.

NATURE WORSHIP.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

Albert G. Mackey, the Past General Grand High Priest of the General Grand Chapter of all the Masons of the United States, in his great book of "Masonic Jurisprudence" that governs every Masonic lodge, page 502, says of the Moral Law:

"Now this moral law is not to be considered as confined to the decalogue of Moses, within which narrow limits the ecclesiastical writers technically restrain it; but rather as alluding to what is called the lex naturae, or the law of nature." And he explains: "The precepts of Jesus could not have been made obligatory on a Jew; a Christian would have denied the sanctions of the Koran; a Mohammedan must have rejected the law of Moses, and a disciple of Zoroaster would have turned from all to the teachings of his Zend Avesta. The universal law of nature, which the authors of the old charges have properly called the moral law, because it is, as Conybeare remarks, 'a perfect collection of all those moral doctrines and precepts which have a foundation in the nature and reason of things, is therefore the only law suited in every respect to be adopted as the Masonic code."

The same Past General Grand High Priest in his "Lexicon of Freemasonry," page 402, declares: "The religion, then, of Masonry is pure theism, upon which its members engraft their own peculiar opinions; but they are not permitted to introduce them into the lodge or to connect their truth or falsehood with the truth of Masonry.'

Then "Chase's Digest of Masonic Law," the great book of decisions in Freemasonry, and in which every Masonic Grand Lodge in America is represented over and again, affirms: "The Jews, the Chinese, the Turks, each reject either the New Testament or the Old, or both, and yet we see no good reason why they should not be made Masons. In fact, Blue Lodge Masonry has nothing whatever to do with the Bible. It is not founded on the Bible; if it was, it would not be Masonry, it would be something else."

This same great book of decisions, page 206, reads: "It is Anti-masonic to require any religious test, other than that the candidate should believe in a God, the Creator and Governor of the universe."

Again, Robert Morris, Past Grand Master of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Kentucky, poet laureate of the fraternity, and a Sovereign Grand Inspector General, in his "Dictionary of Freemasonry," page 296, states: "The Worshipful Master himself is a representative of the sun." Not something like the sun but of the sun. A. T. C. Pierson, present Grand Secretary of the Masonic Grand Lodge of Minnesota, and Grand Captain General of the Grand Encampment of the Masons of the United States, in his "Traditions of Freemasonry," page 87, prints: "It is evident that the sun, either as an object of worship or of symbolization, has always formed an important part of both the mysteries and the system of Freemasonry."

Dan Sickels, now the great Masonic publisher of New York City, and Secretary General of the Supreme Council of the Northern Jurisdiction of the United States, in his "General Ahiman Rezon or Freemason's Guide," page 56, adds: "Accepting the symbol have we lost its sense? Our rites will be of little value to us if this be the case. It is our duty, then, to make Freemasonry the object of a profound study. We must consult the past. We must stand by the sacophagus of the murdered, but restored, Osiris in Egypt, enter the caverns of Phrygia and hold communion with the Cabiri, penetrate the 'Collegia Fabrarum' of ancient Rome, and work in the mystic circles of Sidon."

These are the highest Masonic authorities in in the United States. Freemasonry, then, is "pure theism, pure deism, pure demonism. "Ye believe in God ye do well; the devils also believe and tremble"—natural religion, nature worship. And if this system of sun worship, this un-American hierarchy, with its chaplains, stewards, deacons, worshipful masters, priests and most excellent grand high priests, its most worshipful grand masters, sublime princes, kings and grand kings, is not devil worship, then let some one inform the people what demonism really is. Freemasonry is surely the very antichrist. The devils recognized Christ and said: "What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God?" But this Masonic system does not recognize that there ever was any Christ, and double dates all its documents past the Christian era to A. L., or the "year of light."

Brotherly kindness to those still outside the lodge often seems to require abandoning the kind of brotherhood found inside.

THE MYSTERY OF INIQUITY.

BY E. RONAYNE.

Looking at religious matters from a human, or rather from a secret society standpoint, one would be led to conclude that the different churches might as well close up and go out of business or into bankruptcy, for the secret societies are doing all that churches claim to do, and they do more of it, and do it better. Whether a dead brother had led a good or a bad life, whether he was honest or dishonest, moral or immoral, an atheist or a church member, he is at once and without ceremony transferred from the "lodge below" to "the celestial lodge above." The candidate receives the "new birth" through the ceremonies of initiation, and by living in strict obedience to the horrible obligations and cut-throat penalties of Freemasonry especially, he is "free from sin."

One can mix up in the mad delirium of politics, attend rotten primaries, scheme, plan and cheat the other fellow out of the nomination; he can attend balls, parties, progressive euchre, or any other; he can even "play the races," go to church in the morning and to the theatre in the evening, and if he is a member in good standing of a secret lodge, no matter which one, when he dies he goes off straight to "the grand lodge above." What more than this does a man want? Or can you tell us which of the churches can do better? Neither Calvanism nor Armenianism has any standing whatever by the side of the religion of the secret lodge; and last of all, they baptize children; do so much of it, and do it so well, that no church in America can do better. Baptize children, did you say? Yes, surely; read the following from the Odd-fellows' Herald, Springfield, Ill., Jan. 1, 1897:

"Monday evening, Dec. 21, was an era maker in the history of Grape Creek Lodge No. 632, and White Oak Rebekah Lodge No. 314. Many brothers and sisters of these lodges decided that they would have their children christened, and they fixed on Past Grand Chaplain Rev. W. T. Beadles, of Paris, to officiate, and also decided that the occasion should be social, festive and for the good of the order. Grand Secretary James R. Miller, of Springfield, also kindly accepted an invitation to be present.

"At 5:30 Chaplain Beadles conducted the baptismal services, twenty-seven children being christened by him, as follows:

"Leo Victor, Lawrence Turner and Lucy Winnefred, the children of Dr. and Mrs. Joseph Fairhall.

"Mary Ann, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Pierce.

"John, Peter and Margaret, children of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Hamilton, of Westville.

"Ralph, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Brown.

"Herbert Henry, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Ray.

"Harriett Hannah, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hible.

"Charles, Henry and Thomas, children of John and Mrs. Hudsonpillar.

"Agnes, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Elsden.

"Flossie, Eliza, William, Edward, Charles and Henry, children of Mr. and Mrs. George Ray.

"Charles Edmond, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edmond Roberts.

"William Henry, Louisa, Edward Robert, children of Frederick Foote.

"Florence Eliza, George William, Mabel and Bessie, children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bennett.

"Lucy Edna, daughter of William and Mrs. Foote.

"George McKinley, son of Mr. and Mrs. George J. Coster.

"The services were beautifully conducted by P. C. Chaplain W. T. Beadles, and solemn silence prevailed among both children and adults.

"After the services the Chaplain said that this is a new and unique thing in the history of the lodges but eminently proper; and had not bound any of the parents to have their children become members of any church, but to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, so that they may become goldly men and women, and also good Odd-fellows and citizens.

"After supper the lodge room was a delightful scene, young and old joining in blind man's buff and other games."

"The services were beautifully conducted," etc., "and solemn silence prevailed." I wonder if the Rev. Beadles could do better in his own church, or could his Paris congregation maintain more solemn silence? And then remember there was quite an advantage here, "the parents were not bound to have their children become members of any church"—simply good Odd-fellows after they were "brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord," in connection with an institution where the Lord's name even cannot be mentioned; where his finished work is despised, denied and rejected, and where not one of the parents knows the Lord. And then after the supper and the "solemn silence, both "young and old joined in blind man's buff and other games," just as they did on Pentecost when the 3,000 were baptized; just as Philip and the Eunuch did, Acts 8; and precisely as Ananias and Saul of Tarsus did when the latter was baptized at Damascus, Acts 9. Oh, the deep down iniquity of secret societies, and the unspeakable abomination of those preachers "who say they are apostles and are not," but are found to be liars! It would seem as if the scathing rebuke of the Apostle Paul to Elymas, the sorceror, could very appropriately be applied to such men. Read the passage in Acts 13:10.

Prayer moves the hand that moves the world.

THE LODGE AND THE CHURCH

BY REV. CYRUS SMITH.

It is well known that lodges are religious institutions, having altars and prayers. But the worship is much different from that practiced by a church of Christ. It is a mystery that Christians should have any taste for lodgery or its worship in this enlightened age. To worship in the lodge and to worship in the church too, is trying to "serve two masters." Lodge altars are as truly the altars of Baal as any that ever existed in the dark ages, and the people of God cannot worship at them and serve him any more than they could do a similar thing in the days of Ahab. Christians are to serve Elijah's God, and not worship at the altars of Baal in any age; because the principles of false worship is as bad and as much condemned by the Word of God at one time as at another.

In the religious performances of the lodge, many have been so injured in initiation as to cause death. Who ever heard of any one being so injured while being initiated into the kingdom of grace in the church? The construction of the lodge differs widely from the church. The lodge may be used, because of its secrecy, as the most potent factor in the world for concealing crime. If lodges are not to conceal crime, why are they so often used for that purpose?

Are men either by civil or ecclesiastical authority sworn to perpetually conceal and never reveal that which is good? If the lodges were good they would have no need of concealment. Crime is always the most difficult thing to investigate and expose to the light. Why are lodges existing on the same plan if they are innocent and have nothing but good to conceal? But if the lodge did not appear innocent it could not deceive good men.

I am opposed to the lodge because it is a snare, and deceives those whom I love. There are many in the lodge that I esteem highly, but if I was silent on this subject I would not do my duty toward them. It is far from me to desire to wound the feelings of any, but God requires me to be plain and let my feeble light shine and persuade others not to walk "in the counsel of the ungodly," which men are doing most effectually in the lodge. My prayer to God is that the men of the order may be converted from the lodge to Christ, the only way of salvation.

THE VISIBLE WORLD AND THE WORLD INVISIBLE.

BY REV. JOHN BROWN, A. M.

It is generally supposed that there is no intercourse between the visible world and the world invisible; but the experience of Paul demonstrates the contrary fact. He assures us that he knew a man—meaning himself—caught up to paradise, who heard words that it would be unlawful for a man to utter, though he did not know whether he was in the body or out of the body, which implies that either the whole person, soul and body may be admitted to heaven, or, that the soul leaving the body may pass into the invisible world and return during life. 2 Cor. 12:1–6.

The case of Wm. Tenent, in the last century, is very similar to that of the apostle. It is a well authenticated fact that he was supposed to have died, and that the people assembled to his funeral, when he gave three groans, sat up, and fell back as he was before. After an hour he gave three groans, sat up, and fell back again. After a second hour he gave three groans and sat up; but from that moment he gradually recovered, and was afterward licensed for the Presbyterian ministry. This fact has been accounted for by various theories. His own opinion, which he held during life, was that he was in heaven; that he was remanded to earth again; that he was reluctant to come back, and that his reluctance was the cause of his groaning. Professor Scott called the attention of the students in the moral philosophy class in Kings College, Aberdeen, to the fact, which he explained on the principle of somnambulism; but Dr. Nelson, who had been an infidel, but afterwards wrote a book on the evidences of the Christian religion, which was published by the American Religious Tract Society, accepted Mr. Tenent's own opinion, and says that he believes that in many cases the soul leaves the body before death.

Christ founds an argument for a future life on the use of the present tense of the verb to be: "I am"—not, I was—but "I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." Matt. 22:23. Consequently, Abraham and Isaac and Jacob must have been alive in some sense in the time of Moses several hundred years after their bodies died. Moses and Elias appeared on the Mount of Transfiguration conversing with Jesus, in the presence of Peter, James and John. Matt. 17. Samuel returned from the invisible world, and prophesied that Saul, and his sons should be with him to-morrow. 1 Sam. 28. The miracle has been explained away by many; but it was doubted neither by Saul, nor the necromancer, nor the historian. No doubt much imposition has been practiced by spiritualists; but it would be hard to explain the facts of spiritualism on natural principles.

These facts prove that not only does the soul exist after the death of the body, but sometimes returns to it during life, and that disembodied spirits visit this world, and sometimes make themselves visible. "Wherefore, seeing we are also compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight and the sin that doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, the author and perfector of the faith, who for the joy set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is now set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

SATAN CASTING OUT SATAN.

By the kindness of Rev. J. P. Stoddard I have the reading of a book entitled, "Manual of Freemasonry," in three parts, with an explanatory introduction to the science and a free translation of some of the sacred names of Scripture by the late Richard Carlisle. It seems to have been three separate pamphlets with three separate introductions representing the first three degrees, Apprentice, Fellow Craft and Master Mason, the Royal Arch, and Knights Templar and the Mark Man degrees. The introductions occupy 12, 24 and 26 pages respectively, and the manuals 71, 50 and 109 pages respectively.

He places Christianity in the same list with the false worship of Egyptian and Chaldean, Greek and Roman antiquity. According to his "tell," all religions originated in sun worship. The twelve signs of the Zodiac are the key to all the mysteries of every religion. The Bible is only a mythical story invented to mislead and captivate. There never was such a nation as the Israelites. The building of Solomon's Temple was a fable. "Judaism, Christianity and Freemasonry are in principle one and the same as to secret, origin and mystery. Astrology, gipsy fortune-telling, modern Freemasonry, Mohammedanism, Christianity and Judaism, now so-called, have sprung from, and are so many corruptions of, the ancient mysteries of the pagans.

"The Eleusinian mysteries were pagan; the same in relation to Isis in Egypt, as to Ceres in Greece, and continued in relation to the Virgin Mary as a part of the mistaken Christian mystery. It is the fault of Freemasonry that it has nothing feminine belonging to it; the ladies make no part of its mysteries, and to the ladies it has been a matter of great uneasiness.

"Hebrew, Israelite and Jew are Syriac, Phoenician and Egyptian terms used in the mysterious degrees; and it would be as reasonable that the Freemasons are a dispersed nation as that the Jews are or were a dispersed nation. The modern religion of both Jew and Christian is a misunderstood and forgotten connection, corruption and continuation of the ancient pagan mysteries. Freemasonry is a secret attempt of the same kind, but a failure.

"The key, then, to the mysteries of Freemasonry, as well as to the mysteries of the Christian and the Jewish religions, is the Eleusinian mysteries of the pagan religion, and the further key to all those mysteries is the worship of the sun as God under a variety of personifications, in all its Zodiacal transits, in the personification of the year, of the seasons, of the months, of time generally. I have long felt the necessity of tracing another origin, and I now do so, in connecting Christianity with the ancient pagan mysteries. On reading the New Testament with the key which I here present, and with the remembrance that, in relation to history, the book is altogether, from beginning to end, a fiction; and on reading the Old Testament in the same way, there will remain in the mind something like knowledge gained from its mysterious matter. Freemasonry is but a professed concealment of the same revelation, and may be properly styled a bastard or illegitimate mystery.

"We have seen enough of the mischief of monarchy and priestcraft, of mystery, sectarianism and secret societies. Let us now be open, be inquisitive and be equal in knowledge. Any secret recipe for human disorder is but murder towards those who need it and cannot reach it. I rejoice in having no secrets. I rejoice in being able to expose to the world the professed secrets of others. I am sure that secrecy is a vice, and I therefore expose and explain Freemasonry."

This is Satan casting out Satan; when that begins in earnest his house must fall.

UNEARTHING A DARK PLOT.

"Truth crushed to earth will rise again;
The eternal years of God are her's.
But error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshipers."

Although L. A. McLean, clerk of Survey, declared that Calhoun had taken the ballots of the election of Jan. 8, 1858, with him to Washington, grave doubts were entertained among the Free State leaders, and Ewing and others who had stationed themselves at the border precincts at the peril of their lives, and had witnessed border ruffian repeating, went before the legislature now in session, and procured the passage of a bill creating a Board of Investigation, to report on the frauds committed at that, and the election of Dec. 21, 1857, ratifying the Lecompton constitution.

McLean was summoned before this Board and swore to what he had already stated. Still not satisfied, the legislature sent the Sergeant-at-arms, who searched Calhoun's premises but found nothing giving any clue to the whereabouts of the ballots. Calhoun had tabulated the vote by counties and published the returns in the papers, giving the entire Pro-slavery Territorial ticket and legislature a handsome majority. As provided in the schedule of the Lecompton constitution, Calhoun had the counting of the votes, and his decision was beyond review or reversal by any Territorial authority.

Many days passed in dreadful suspense. The Free State majority in the legislature counted for little under existing conditions. With haughty mien the Pro-slavery leaders regarded its legislation with little concern. They were serene and happy in contemplation of the early destruction of every vestige of Free State government and authority in the Territory, and the final consummation of their cherished hopes in fastening slavery, not only on Kansas, but the entire Northwest, yet to come into the Union when the institution would have full sway in the majority of the United States.

But "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things that are mighty." One night as Ewing was passing from his office to his hotel through a lonely part of Lawrence, a man stepped out of the shadows across his way, saying: "Is this Mr. Ewing?" He at first declined to give his own name, but instantly handed his revolver, breech foremost, to Ewing as assurance of his peaceful intent, and said he had been waiting there in hiding for hours to see Ewing, evidently not wishing it known that he was in the town. He said he had heard of McLean's testimony in regard to the missing ballots and believed it was false, and thought he could tell something that would lead to important disclosures, if it would not jeopardize his life, for his life would be worth nothing at Lecompton if it were found out that he had divulged anything leading to the discomfiture of the Pro slavery authorities.

Ewing assured him that he would not disclose his part in the matter, and if he should divulge anything that would prove that Calhoun's returns were false, it would rout the whole gang and he would be safe anyway.

He then gave his name as Henry W. Petrikin, a clerk of Wm. Brindle, receiver of the United States land office at Lecompton, and said that Charley Torrey, or "Dutch Charley" as he was called, told him that he was aroused by a noise the night before Calhoun went to Washington, and going to the window saw a man burying a large candle-box under the woodpile. Petrikin said he believed it contained the ballots of the late election, and that there was evidently something crooked about the returns that might yet be ferreted out.

As Ewing passed on he reasoned, that if this was a clerk of Brindle, from what he knew of Brindle he would not have a rascal in his employ, and this was a voucher for his good faith in what he purported to reveal. Petrikin returned to his post early next morning as usual, without the Pro-slaveryites knowing that he had been to Free State headquarters during the night.

Aided by his official position as a member of the Board of Investigation, Ewing obtained from Probate Judge Miller, of Douglas county, a search warrant directed to the sheriff, commanding him to repair to Lecompton and search the premises of the surveyor-general, and, if practicable, to secure and bring before him at Lawrence one certain box that might be found on said premises. The sheriff was directed to take a posse of fighting men along, and proceeded as directed, arriving at Lecompton early in the morning. The woodpile was removed and a box found, sure enough, answering to the description, and was carried to Lawrence and delivered to the judge. The speaker of the House, president of the Senate and Governor Denver met with the investigating committee then, and the judge opened the candle-box and there found the returns in question.

Fraud was discovered as had been attested by Ewing and others before the legislature, and when the plainly fraudulent votes were thrown out, the Free State ticket had an overwhelming majority. In the separate election held the same day to vote on the Lecompton constitution, the Free State party cast over ten thousand votes against it, which was about 3 to 1. A warrant was now issued for McLean, but the whole gang had fled from Lecompton as soon after the sheriff and his posse found the candle-box as possible.

Every incident of these disclosures was heralded over the country as fast as the news could be carried. Petrikin took a certified statement of the facts to Washington, and in the presence of his father and other Congressmen laid the same before President Buchanan. Ewing followed with a report of the Board of Investigation and an abstract of the candle-box returns and a memorial to Congress, all of which were printed and laid on the desk of each Congressman at once.

This killed the bill then pending in Congress for the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution. Thus Calhoun's scheme fell flat, and he, too, shrank from the gaze of an indignant public and went into obscurity. A short time afterward Buchanan had the affrontery to force through a bill providing for the submission of the Lecompton constitution to a free vote of the people of Kansas, promising a fair election, and offering them eight million acres of public lands for schools and internal improvements provided they adopted it. This forced election occurred August, 1858, and the proposition was voted down forever by 8 to 1. For this Kansas was denied Statehood as long as there was a Pro-slavery majority in Congress. S. C. REFORM NEWS.

MISSOURI STATE MEETING.

APPEAL FROM THE STATE COLPORTEUR.

ST. JOHN, Mo., Jan. 11, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—In regard to our State Convention to be held at Kirksville, Mo., on or about February 4, 5, I am truly glad it has been called to meet in such an educational center, and where Iowa as well as Missouri brethren can attend. And now, brethren and sisters in the Lord, let us remember that if the light of every star in heaven was combined and focused into one it would be almost as bright as the sun. So if we can combine the testimonies of all friends of anti-secrecy in Missouri and Southern Iowa, we will kindle a flame before which every secret lodge will tremble. Let every friend of the cause resolve to go up to this meeting in the strength of the Lord. Let us demonstrate that right can triumph against might, and get our hearts and minds filled with zeal and arguments in this cause.

The pastor of the church where the meeting is to be held is a host in himself. Rev. S. H. Swartz, of Morris, Ill., whose eloquence so inspired the Iowa brethren, has promised to speak. And M. N. Butler, the man whose writings have so often stirred our souls during the years of the past, will be there. George W. Geesling, who wrote the exposition of the Grange, is also expected. So is Elder A. B. Lipp, our fearless reform lecturer. Rev. H. Hull, who has suffered so much at the hands of lodge men, has promised to be at the meeting. And a great many other men of power are to be with us. Let us lay greater and higher plans than ever before. Remember how many years has elapsed since our last State meeting. Let there be such a rally at Kirksville, of the friends in Missouri, as will cause the lodge power to tremble from one end of the State to the other. Let us go up in the strength of the Lord and the battle will be ours. Missouri expects every friend of the cause to do his duty.

FROM OUR MICHIGAN COLPORTEUR.

SPRING ARBOR, Mich., Dec. 26, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have just returned home from the East, where I had a very good time doing some good work for God and humanity. I will start out again soon, though I am troubled some with rheumatism so that it pains me to walk, but I feel that I must do what I can.

It rejoiced me to see that Rev. O. H. Perry, of Hanover, Mich., is so much interested in the Lodge Lamp. He lives about eight miles from here; and told me last winter that he had been an Odd-fellow and a Freemason, and had to give both up. He is now trying to help others out, and says at times he feels that he ought to go out and lecture against the lodge. I will try and get him at it this winter.

I was glad to get the last Lodge Lamp. I find so many who say that Washington and other good men were Masons. It was this that drew me into the lodge; so many good men and ministers were in it. The trouble is Masons never publish what Washington and other good men have said against the lodge. JASPER J. TUCKER.

REMARKABLE ESCAPE FROM DEATH.

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 2, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since my last letter to the Cynosure I have had quite an experience. On Saturday, the 26th of December, I left the city via. the Seattle and International railroad for Arlington in Snohomish county. On the train I fell in with two ministers of a prominent denomination, both of them opposed to secret societies, but little posted on the great danger of the orders to the church and society in general.

I arrived at Arlington at noon and was met at the train by Bro. Harry Probstfeld, a grand good, Christian young man, who has been in the past in the employ of the railroad company more or less. Sometime ago the company sent out some cars loaded with rock for him to unload on the Sabbath. He refused to work on the Sabbath, but got some men to go down with him Saturday night and unload them. While he was lifting a rock, with his back to the edge of the car, the rock split, and over the brink he went and down thirty feet on the pile of rock they had been unloading.

He says that while going down from the car to the stonepile he was as happy as an angel, thinking about his having made his peace with God and consecrated his all to his service. The boys climbed down expecting to find every bone in his body broken. To their astonishment and delight, although he was badly bruised and unconscious, not a bone was broken. He still lives to praise the Lord and let his light shine.

He took me to the St. Paul hotel, Bro. Rea, proprietor. At night I spoke in the Hall. The Odd-fellows above me were initiating a candidate in the first or Initiatory degree. This gave me an opportunity to be more practical on the subject of Odd-fellowship. At the close of my address the Masonic M. D. of the place refused to shake hands with me. I told him I would shake hands with any man.

He said, "I will with any honest man."

I said, "I am honest enough to say 'Mah-hah-bone,' are you?" He lost his jewel, to say the least. I afterward learned that he is a professed infidel.

On Sabbath morning I preached to a fair-sized audience at the Free Methodist church. In the afternoon addressed the Sabbath-school children on the evils of intemperance and other great evils. I spoke again at the class meeting in the evening, and preached again at night. I should have mentioned that Rev. E. H. Stayt arrived from Marysville soon after I got there, he having been there to bill me for Wednesday evening. He is a true man of God, filled with the spirit, and readily abominates all evils like the secret lodge system. His good wife chimes in with him in his work, and I may say all his people are loyal to God and his church. Even little Nellie, their daughter, nine years old, at the family altar prayed for Bro. Williams and his great cause which he represents. God bless her.

On Monday afternoon in company with Bro. Stayt, and after a good dinner at Sister Molden's, I boarded the train for Snohomish, the county seat, where I found a good home with the pastor and his family. I spoke at night in the Free Methodist hall to a small but very attentive audience. Rev. A. J. Hanson, the M. E. pastor, whom I knew for several years at Vancouver, Wash., was present and gave a few very hearty smiles during my address. A young Presbyterian brother gave me to understand, that though his father is an Odd-fellow, yet he is opposed to all secret societies. The same may be said of Rev. Stayt.

The next night I spoke in the large opera house in the city of Everett, to a small audience, owing to a Christian Endeavor convention and a revival in progress in the city. The next night I spoke in the Lyceum Hall at Marysville. Here we had a very fair audience. The meeting lasted near three hours. I spoke two hours and sixteen minutes.

At the close the young editor of the Marysville Globe said: "I have been an Odd-fellow seven years. I never knew till to-night that there is an organization opposed to secret societies. You've got Odd-fellowship 'dead sure.' I always knew in my heart it was wrong." He gave excellent evidence that he was done with it; signed for the Lodge Lamp, and agreed to give all the publicity possible to our coming convention at Seattle, and hoped to get down himself to attend it. Thus the good Lord blesses our weak efforts, always in time to encourage us when we most need it. I received at Arlington six Lodge Lamps and two Cynosure subscriptions; at Snohomish, six Lodge Lamps and one Cynosure; at Everett, six LodgeLamps and two Cynosures and at Marysville two LodgeLamps.

I returned to Seattle Thursday, via. steamer Greyhound, from Everett. I made out my monthly report, and on the first day of the new year called on and took dinner with Bro. J. C. Card and family of South Seattle. They showed us no little kindness. They are opposed to all shams, secret orders with the rest.

While at Bro. Card's, a gentleman called on some business. After he was gone they explained to us, that about two years ago, while he was off at lodge one night, a neighbor went in, killed his wife and little child, and took all his money. Had the man staid at home as he should, he would doubtless have his wife, child and money. Brother and Sister Card gave me $5 toward paying for the hall. Who will do likewise?

P. B. WILLIAMS.

LETTER FROM MINNESOTA.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 8, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—"Yes," said a Congregational pastor of this city this morning, "I know of the Christian Cynosure, and I approve of all that is said against secret societies; but everything is so permeated with them that to oppose them is to destroy the foundations of society; therefore, I do not oppose them and I do not want the Cynosure."

He had spoken of a disease in his own body. I, therefore, quoted James 5:12, "But above all things, my brethren, swear not," the preface to the promised gift of healing. He combatted that Scripture by quoting Heb. 6:16, which is: "For men indeed swear by the greater; and the oath serves them for confirmation as an end of all gainsaying." Revised version. I rebutted what he said by quoting the words of Jesus, Matt. 5: 33: "Thou shalt not swear falsely.....But I

JAMES P. STODDARD.

A TRUMPET BLAST FROM TEXAS.

STOUT, Texas, Dec. 19, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your paper comes as a welcome visitor to me out here in this lodge-ridden country. I am willing to stand alone with the Lord against the secret lodge system.

Permit me to say amen to Elder Rufus Smith's article, "To Friends and Strangers," published in your issue of Nov. 26th. I have had membership only in the same church he describes, and which is also set forth by Paul in Eph. 5: 25 27, "Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church and gave himself for it. That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word. That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot nor wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish."

I have not practiced the one church idea for thirty years as Bro. Smith has; I have been the Lord's free-man for more than twelve years. I once traveled East in search of light, but can now say with John 1:5,6, "This then is the message which we have heard of Him and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all. If we say we have fellowship with him and walk in darkness, we lie and do not the truth: But if we walk in the light as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." The light and fellowship spoken of here is not found with a hoodwink over your eyes traveling east; but by the way of the cross or garden of Gethsemane.

I am often told that I can't accomplish anything by opposing the secret lodge here alone. I find a great many men who can say privately that they are opposed to the secret lodge, but are too faint hearted to speak out publicly. I was somewhat surprised when I met an old brother in Denton last summer, who claimed to have been sanctified more than twenty-three years, and when I presented him with a copy of the Cynosure and insisted on his subscribing for it, he said that he took the paper in Iowa, but there were so many Masons in Denton that should it come to him there they would spot him.

I related to him how the Masons had threatened my life, but the Lord never suffered them to touch a hair on my head. I cannot harmonize this brother's experience with 1 John 4:18: "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casteth out fear, because fear hath torment: He that feareth is not made perfect in love." Oh, for more men that would

> "Dare to be a Daniel,
> Dare to stand alone,
> Dare to have a purpose firm,
> And dare to make it known."

Very often, when I distribute anti-lodge literature, I meet with frowns and some murmuring, but I tell them that I serve Daniel's God. Last December when I attended a quarterly meeting at Shady Grove, the elder related a circumstance of a young friend of his who was under conviction for a long time, and feeling that there was something in his way, he questioned him in regard to his trouble; and he confessed to him that if he was converted he would have to preach the Gospel, but he never would consent to do that. The elder told him he must be willing to do anything the Lord required of him. But the young man continued in sin till his death.

After the meeting the elder was in quite a hurry to get to his train. I followed him and told him he had given us to understand that he belonged to the Masonic fraternity. "Yes," he replied. I told him God had delivered me from that institution and laid it upon me to warn others. I handed him some Cynosures. He promised to read them and thanked me and hastened away.

Last Sabbath I heard another presiding elder of the came church, from the same pulpit, preach on the seven graces, 2 Pet. 1:5 7. When he came to "temperance" he said we must be temperate in our eating, drinking and sleeping, and that he knew no better rule for the division of our time than that layed down by one of the oldest and best institutions in our country outside of the church.

After the sermon he confessed to me that he was a Mason. I said I once was, but God had delivered me from that institution, and it was strange to me that he could pronounce Freemasonry the best institution outside the church, when it excludes the name of Christ. He denied that it excluded Christ, but I proved it from Masonic standards. I handed him two copies of the Lodge Lamp and some tracts, which he promised me he would read.

S F. PROCTOR.

A VISIT TO THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 6, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Bishop Satterlee this week gave a very interesting description of his recent trip to Russia, for the purpose of presenting an American petition in behalf of the Armenian Christians to the Czar. When he first arrived at St. Petersburg and announced that he wished to present this petition in person and without the intervention of the American minister, because it was desired that the presentation should be devoid of even the appearance of political significence, he was told that it would be impossible.

However, he persisted, and as usual when people determine to persevere until a good deed is accomplished, he succeeded. He was received by the Czar and his wife with such simplicity that he says he could hardly realize that he was in the presence of the absolute monarch of the country in which all the outward pomp and circumstance of royalty finds its fullest expression. In addition to presenting the petition, Bishop Satterlee spoke to the Czar of the anxiety all civilized nations felt about the Armenians and Russia's probable action towards them. But he left without an idea of how the Czar felt towards them; he listened closely, but the answers he gave were short and diplomatically non-committal.

Turn where you will and the rum evil will still confront you. A Government Indian Inspector, Mr. J. G. Wright, who has only recently returned from an official trip among the Chippewa Indians at White Earth Agency, Minnesota, after speaking of the manner in which the 7,000 (or thereabouts) Indians on that reservation spend their time, added significantly: "Their morals in a general way are very good. They have a warm attachment for their wives, and would give little or no trouble if whiskey could be kept from them." Kind reader, how many white men do you know of whom that last sentence might also be truthfully said?

Those who believe that the upper ten of society offers proportionately as good a field for missionary work as the lower ten thousand, will be pleased to know that Mrs. John W. Foster, wife of the ex Secretary of State, proposes to duplicate some of the remarkable missionary meetings held in the large house occupied by Postmaster General and Mrs. Wanamaker during the last administration. Mrs. Foster has invited a number of society ladies to attend a meeting at her house Friday morning, to hear an address from Mrs. Booth Tucker, of the Salvation Army, who is to be accompanied by Brigadier Susie F. Swift, a graduate of Vassar College, and Dr. Frederick Nice, once a surgeon in the German army and now an humble ensign in the Salvation Army, who is known far and wide as a skilled player of the violin.

LETTER FROM FAR OFF INDIA.

CAWNPORE, N. W. Province, India,
Dec. 3, 1896.

DEAR CYNOSURE READERS:—Simultaneous with the unfolding, to me, by the spirit of an evangelistic tour through Central and N. W. India, came the word, "Speak unto the children of Israel that they go forward." The possibility of such a trip had been brought to mind some months before, and the conviction had been deepened into probability as the weeks went by, until in the latter part of September the above word was given and all made clear that the time had come for the going forward as the Spirit should lead the way, to be a witness unto Him and to proclaim a full deliverance from all sin.

Some deeper lessons in the deep things had been given as a special preparation for such an important work. Special lessons in faith, with directions as to the manner of going, were a part of the fitting up. The manner of going, doing, etc., were clearly set forth in Christ's charge to his disciples, as he sent them forth to preach. Matt. 10. The message was to the "House of Israel." No provision was to be made for the journey; but trust in God for all needs to be supplied. This for special direction, and Ezekiel 3d for the special commission, with many promises and assurances of his presence and help, were given by the Spirit, and with much joy and a restful trust in him the start was made Oct. 12.

This going forth involved a long journey—nearly nine hundred miles—among strangers, and all unused to India's ways of travel and customs. This, with the impaired hearing, made it appear a difficult way to anything but the eye of faith. The hand of faith grasped the promises and assurances, that all needed help would be given, when and however needed. To the praise of his grace I can say at this writing that the way has been smoothed before me. Just when I needed help it has been given in a very special way, and of difficulties there have been none. All praise be unto Him. My first stop was at Cawnpore, where I put a little Eurasien girl in the M. E. Girl's school. She had been rescued from a Romish school in answer to some earnest prayers and efforts on the part of some of the watchman workers, inspiring much thanksgiving to God on this account.

From Cawnpore to Lucknow, the day following our arival at C——, was the next step in the journey. The annual meeting of the Methodists, but attended by all Christian workers and missionaries, was in session and hither we were clearly led. We were most kindly entertained by Miss Thoburn, who is in charge of Lat Bagh school and college. The week spent here was pleasant and profitable, though a great sorrow came when the telegram was received at this time announcing the translation of our beloved co-laborer, Victor Gladwin, from labor to reward. The grace of God was sufficient for this "fiery trial," of which we had a vague warning before leaving Bombay and the sick one. Getting a new insight into India's needs, mission work, etc., is a source of great personal profit. Witnessing to a joyful and "full salvation" is, we trust, the means of much profit to others. With this hope to cheer us, together with some grateful expressions from those who had been helped and encouraged by our testimony, we next went on our way to Fyzabad, seventy-five miles distant from Lucknow. This is a military station with many soldiers in camp, and to these soldiers, for whom we feel a special interest, we felt the Spirit leading us.

That it was the Spirit's call was evidenced by the remarkable way we were provided for, though an entire stranger to all but two soldiers who were at the Lucknow meeting; and also by the fact that the Christian soldiers were meeting daily to pray for the experience of entire sanctification, but of which they had not the light and instruction sufficient to enable them to understand the way "into the holiest of all." Precious were the meetings held daily at the Soldiers' Prayer Room. There were open hearts to receive the instruction and testimony on the destruction of inbred sin, and the cleansing from all its defilement. Many of these British soldiers are the flower of England's homes, in their young manhood, and to see them Christian soldiers, and pressing on into the fulness of spiritual life, is a source of great joy to those who are specially laboring among them. We were most kindly entertained by the ladies of the English Zenana Mission, and helped in our work by the pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission. The last meeting in the church of this mission was a profitable one, there being a number of soldiers who gave testimony to the light and blessing they had received during our three days meeting together.

Beautiful Fyzabad with its long, finely-shaded avenues, extensive, well-kept soldiers' quarters, orange groves, droves of camels and many wild monkeys sporting on the housetops, or by the roadside, was a place of much interest to our Western eyes, but it will especially be remembered as a place of special interest, and peculiar blessing and help to souls. A letter at hand today from one of the soldiers there tells of increased blessing and progress in the spiritual life as the result of the meetings during our stay there. It cheers us on to greater and more earnest efforts for souls, and causes new praise to Him who leadeth us on. Praise be unto Him.

The past month has been spent in this place, chiefly in visiting from house to house, talking and praying with the people. There is much darkness on spiritual things in the minds and hearts of many, regarding God's requirements, his laws, and the power of Jesus to save to the "uttermost." People sin and transgress God's laws with such recklessness and indifference. It is appalling, and so few lay it to heart, even among those who are working for the redemption of souls. "The soul that sinneth, it shall die," is a divine declaration all unheeded. So also is, "He that is born of God doth not commit sin," too largely passed by as not really being an emphatic evidence of the new birth or true conversion. Is not the reason of such careless indifference largely the lack of proper teaching and preaching against sin, and the absence of clear, joyful testimony to being saved from sin?

Ignorance as to what sin is, is another deplorable state that has fallen on the people. God's laws are trampled on. His admonitions and warnings are unheeded. His plainest commands disobeyed, and the desires of the natural, unsanctified heart are gratified with the remark, "I see no harm in it," given as an excuse for their misdoing. Ignorance and blindness is expected of those who have never known the power of the saving grace of God; but clear vision belongs to those who have been made partakers of spiritual life, yet many who have a "name to live" are ignorant of these things.

In going about from house to house among all classes and conditions, one has an opportunity to see what a great awakening is needed, on the part of many, as to the plainest truths of God's word. We are more than ever convinced that nothing but the primitive teaching and testimony, together with the practical daily living of the simple, humble religion of Jesus Christ, will be able to meet the demands for the awakening, convicting and conversion of sinners of all kindreds and tribes.

India needs this kind very much. We are glad to be one who is going this plain, humble, joyful way; and to go in and out before the people testifying to his power to save and confirming it by our daily life. It is a wonder to some, and to some it is too simple, too much despised, too far removed from all show to be of much worth in convincing souls of their needs or of bringing them to Christ. "Conform to the world somewhat so as to have more influence with the world," one says. Put a billiard table into the room next the prayer room. This will draw the young men and give them recreation and may be they will go from there into the prayer room and be converted, says another, who is working to draw souls to Jesus. Worldly means to attain spiritual ends! This is a modern way. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me," is God's way, and it has always been successful. The other is not. Although it has a drawing power, it draws not to Christ. These are some of the things we meet with, and which give us occasion to speak some earnest messages in order to deliver our soul.

A day spent at the ancient heathen town of Bithmour, sixteen miles up the Ganges river, gave a deeper view of heathenism in its practical workings than we have had before. It was the occasion of a great annual festival when the Hindoos flock there by the thousands to bathe in the sacred waters of the Ganges, and worship the nutal rod, supposed to be a nail from the shoe of their god Burma. Sorrowful sight! Oh, the depths of the superstition of heathenism! Who will go to the rescue of these? Who can go but those who know the power of Christ to save from all sin, and who can and do show him forth in a humble, holy life? Oh, for the Moses of faith and devotion to lead this down-trodden nation into the land of rest and plenty! Oh, for the Aarons of holy fervor and sanctity to go before while the waters part in twain and the redeemed of India go forth dry-shod into the Canaan of Christian life and liberty! Amen. With much joy, much intercession,

Yours for God and India,
HENRIETTA E. MUZZY.

TOCSIN OF TRUTH,

FROM THE OLD LIBERTY SINGER.

DETROIT, Mich., Jan. 4, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—What will become of all our vital interests, and what will be the the state of society and the condition of our country should the deadly and demoralizing influence of the liquor power over our civil and religious institutions, our politicians and our priests, continue to increase its baleful domination for ten or fifteen years to come at the rate it has for that period in the past? If our so-called "good citizens" and our professed Christians reject the earnest warning and appeals of the prohibitionists and continue to support liquor license parties—such as elect dough-faced legislators who bow the knee to the behests of the liquor men, and support "time serving" ministers of religion. Instead of crying aloud and sparing not, showing the people their sins, they strike hands with the murderers of fathers and mothers, for the legalization of their beastializing business all over the country. Is it not time for every true lover of our country, of law and order, and of good society, to stop and enquire, whither are we tending?

With 250,000 licensed murder and misery producing saloons running day and night through the week at a cost to the people of two billion and a half of much-needed money, and the destruction of over 150,000 lives annually, and with our government running its fiscal machinery with the bribe money, in other words, the "blood money," under the euphonious name of "internal (infernal) revenue" taken from the sensual and mercenary creatures, who, in the truthful and vivid language of John Wesley "drive their fellow men to hell like sheep," we may indeed well ask not only "where we are at," but what are we coming to?

If Thomas Jefferson had such fears for his country in view of the injustice and wrongs of slavery, how much greater reason have we to tremble for our country in view of the greater wrongs and wretchedness caused by the liquor traffic? No wrongs ever inflicted by slaveholders upon their victims could equal the inhuman outrages perpetrated by liquor-bedeviled husbands upon their hapless wives and defenseless children?

We had just such dough-faced and sycophantic politicians and preachers to contend against in the anti-slavery struggle back in the 40's and 50's:—the Dr. Adams, the Dr. Lords, the Dr. Hills, the Dr. Leachs. Where is the memory of these doctors to day? Does Dr. Rainsford and his coteries or anybody else in all Christendom believe if Christ or Paul was on earth to-day they would join with the gross and sensual in the clamor for open drunkeries on the Sabbath day? Monstrous! Then why should we? Christ came to save the people from their sins, not to lead them into sin or into temptation.

Frederick Douglas and I were holding abolition conventions in the Eastern States back in the 50's, when slavery's dark, pervading power was over all the land and the day of emancipation seemed remote as ever. Frederick was addressing the people in a discouraged and half-despairing tone, when the tall, turbaned figure of that renowned old negress, "Sojourner Truth," the last slave to be emancipated in the State of New York in 1827, being in the audience, rose to her feet, and extending her long arms exclaimed, "Frederick, is God dead?" This inspired and timely ejaculation from that old devoted ebony saint went like a thrill of electricity through the great audience, and turned the whole current of feeling from doubt and despondency to faith and hope. Cheer after cheer resounded through the great hall. That grand woman, that trusting soul, lived to see, and not long after her faith in a living God verified in 4,000,000 of her oppressed people set free.

So better to hope tho' the clouds hang low,
And to keep your eyes still lifted;
For the bright blue sky will soon peep through,
When the ominous clouds are rifted.

There was never a night without a day,
Or an evening without a morning;
And the darkest hour, as the proverb goes,
Is the hour before the dawning.

"And the Lord answered me and said, 'Write the vision, and make it plain upon tables, that he may run that readeth it. For the vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie: though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry.'" Hab. 2:3.

The reason why many Masons are silent and do not denounce Masonry and warn others not to join is, that, not without reason, they are afraid.

LETTER FROM NEW ORLEANS.

CLINTON, La., Dec. 11, 1896.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It may be of interest to your many readers to hear something from this part of God's vineyard. We left New Orleans Wednesday to meet the Fourth District Baptist Association of Louisiana, which is holding their twenty-first annual session in Mt. Pilgrim Baptist church, Rev. J. Nettles, pastor. We were most cordially received by the brethren, and given half an hour, which we gladly accepted, and used as best we could.

During my address I took occasion to reprove lodgism, rumism, Romanism and adulterers, and was heartily endorsed by the large delegation. There were 125 churches with 300 delegates represented. Rev. Joseph Foster, pastor of Mt. Pleasant Baptist church, of Baton Rouge, preached the doctrinal sermon. He told the delegates that many of them had their Gospel guns spiked with secret lodge ammunition, and were bound with a diabolical oath not to oppose sin; and that God is angry with them for their hypocrisy, and will punish them for their evil deeds by and by. The sermon was heartily received.

This association is the third largest in the State, having about 11,000 communicants, and fully 90 per cent of their members and ministers are opposed to secret societies in every sense of the word. The association is supporting and controling an academy at Baton Rouge, with Prof. J. L. Crossly at its head, which is doing much to disseminate the pure Gospel truth throughout the district which comprises Iberville, East and West Baton Rouge, East and West Feliciana and Point Coupee parishes.

We were glad to see that the brethren of glorious old Fourth District are again awakening to their good senses, and are declaring themselves against secret societies, intoxicants and divorces. On Thursday night Rev. H. Johnson, of Fort Hudson, preached an able sermon on mission work. He also scored the lodge-gentry unmercifully. The association unanimously adopted a resolution declaring themselves against ministers or laymen divorcing one husband or wife and marrying another man or woman while the former lives.

We recomend a few ministers to you who we believe will read the Cynosure, and use it profitably. The New Orleans Tribune has done much during the year to stir the brethren of the district up and put them to thinking, and at this session they put their thoughts into action. May God help you to continue the warfare against sin.

F. J. DAVIDSON.

It would be a great mistake to imagine that all the enemies of Masonry are outside, and that all inside are friends.

WHOLE WHEAT BREAD.

How to Make This Most Wholesome and Palatable Food.

Whole wheat bread should be used almost to the entire exclusion of that made from fine white flour, which passes through so many processes that all the most essential properties are extracted. The albuminoids and phosphates in this whole wheat are retained, the hull being only excluded. After experimenting with the different recipes, it is concluded the following makes the better bread: Three pounds of flour, a cake compressed yeast, 2 tablespoonfuls lard, 2 of sugar, 1 of salt, mixing either with milk or water, will make three loaves about the size of our bakers' 5 cent loaf. First put your flour in basin, then mix through it thoroughly the lard, salt and sugar. Now use wooden spoon for stirring in lukewarm water or milk, being careful to pour in slowly, as it must be so thick a spoon can scarcely stir. Should you have it too thin, your bread would be sticky and soggy. Last put in the yeast, which has been dissolved in half a cup of lukewarm water. Now stir it for ten minutes, when it will be ready to stand in a warm place to get light, which will not require the length of time of other bread. When light, put into pans, letting stand to rise again, which will be but a short time. Then bake one hour in an oven not hot enough to burn. It will come out a lovely brown. All housekeepers are no doubt aware that bread made in small loaves is better than the large ones, for the reason that when a loaf is cut and the air reaches it it will soon dry. But as each loaf is cut it seems fresh. Keep wrapped in a coarse towel and in a tin bread box. It also makes lovely toast.

If children are given this bread rather than so much of the fine white, they will not want to be eating all the while, as this supplies the necessary food qualities the bones and nerves require.

How to Relieve the Bite of a Dog.

While waiting the arrival of a doctor place a tight ligature above the affected part, and, if possible, at once have the wound vigorously sucked; then apply hartshorn. Should a doctor not be available after this treatment a piece of potassa fusa can be placed in the wound and allowed to dissolve. This has a cauterizing influence upon all parts of the wound. Nitrate of silver as a cautery has been proved dangerous.

It is a very foolish thing to kill a dog that has bitten anybody, for he may be a healthy and harmless animal.

How Long Distances Can Be Run With Ease.

There are many manners of walking, some of which are much devoid of grace. But M. de Raoul has come to the conclusion that, as far as fast walking is concerned, the best method is that which he calls marche enflexion. The principle is to run without leaping, to raise the body above the ground as little as possible, to keep the knees bent, the upper part of the body inclined forward, so that practically you are always running after your center of gravity. The feet must be raised only very slightly. Any man between 20 and 60 can be taught to run as long as his legs can carry him without getting out of breath. Some men can, on the very first trial of the method, run seven or eight miles without stopping, while, with the ordinary tactics, they could not have run over a mile. The first kilometer (a kilometer is five-eighths of a mile) is usually covered in 7¼ minutes, the second in 6 minutes and the third in 5 minutes and 45 seconds. An interesting feature of M. de Raoul's researches is that even after a long run, according to his method, a stiff walk is no trouble at all. The muscles which work in both cases do not belong to the same set, and while one exercise is performed the muscles which minister to the other rest.

How to Make a Bureau Scarf.

A bureau scarf which will be a novelty to some of our readers was of white linen, cut just a little smaller than the bureau top. This was finished with a very elaborate cut work pattern, but the work was done with butter colored roman floss instead of linen thread. This was used over a pad of blue sateen, the edge of which was trimmed with the narrowest of butter colored lace, which was visible outside the cut work edge.

How to Care For Fuel.

When the fire is burning, a small shovelful at a time will keep the oven in prime condition and cook everything as well as if the heat was intense. If you let the coal in the latrobe all get on fire at once, it will drive you out of the room with heat, but it will all burn to white ashes in an hour, when by feeding down properly it would have heated the house, and the one feederful would have sufficed for a whole day.

How to Keep the Water Cooler Pure.

To purify the water cooler, either porcelain or zinc lined, pour a little vinegar on a clean cloth and wipe it well once or twice a week.

PEACH TREES.

FOR THE NORTH. Why not grow your own peaches? I have an Iowa peach that has been grown in the State for sixty years. The original tree is still alive and fruiting.

This peach is of good size, best quality, free stone, and has fruited unprotected after winters of 30 degrees below zero.

It is the peach for the North Send for prices and history; also prices of other reliable nursery stock.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1897.

WHAT CLINCHED THE ARGUMENT.

A month after Rev. W. B. Stoddard lectured in the Menonnite church near Woodside, Pa., he received a letter from E. J. Berkey of that place, in which he said:

"You know there was to be a funeral a few days after the lecture. Quite a number did not know whether to believe all you stated in your lecture. They said one could not get the secrets unless he was a member of the lodge. We gave them the names of the authors you quoted, and in addition, told them to attend the funeral. They did so, and it was carried out to the letter, so that they said if you told the truth that much it certainly was all right. I believe that funeral was so designed of God to confirm your work at this place. The man was a distiller, and a very profane man, and had made no profession, and said, 'His lodge was good enough religion' for him.

"They went to the house and told the minister he could have a prayer and a few words, and then 'He is ours.' There were no songs or anything. They did not wear the white 'bibs,' but otherwise it was just as you stated. They were all the 33d degree Masons, and the little 'common Masons' were not recognized at all, and it made some of them rather indignant. At the grave they performed the regular services, but instead of sending him to the 'Grand Lodge above,' they sent him to the 'Grand Home above,' which was, no doubt, put for the occasion. The principle was the same, at least."

SAMUEL C. LAWRENCE.

We are requested by a correspondent to publish the name of the distinguished distiller of New England rum, who sat in the pulpit with Dr. Lorimer on last Easter Sabbath, representing the Knight Templars of Massachusetts as their Eminent Grand Commander. Rev. James P. Stoddard, of Boston, answers this question as follows:

"Samuel C. Lawrence is a member of Mt. Hermon Lodge, Medford, Mass. His Masonic title given in the papers at the time the Knight Templars were in Boston was, Eminent Grand Commander. He is not a member of any church, but the "stock" is Universalists. He is married, but has no child of his own. He has an adopted son. He is a liberal giver and used to attend the Congregationalist church. Of late he attends the Unitarian church. His rum is not sold in Medford, and but a small part of it disposed of in this country. It is taken from the distilleries and put in 'bond,' and then shipped to and sold in foreign ports; quite largely, as is supposed, in Africa. He is said to be strictly temperate and public-spirited. This is about all I have been able so far to learn about him, but this much is reliable."

THE COURT METHOD.

Crime has a method which it carefully pursues in order to escape punishment. The opposite method is pursued with equal care by those who bring crime to punishment. The method of crime is secrecy. The antagonistic method is exposure. So far as secrecy is preserved, crime is apt to be safe; and so far as exposure goes, criminals are alarmed and often punished.

Freemasonry is a crime which cherishes the method as vital to its protection. It fights exposure so passionately and violently that it halts at no extreme like falsehood, conspiracy, persecution or murder. By any and every means secrecy must be preserved. If no other extreme measure is taken, yet there is invariably an oath.

While Freemasonry thus shares the method of all other crimes against law or good order, the method found effective against all other crimes should be applied. Like other crimes, Freemasonry desires and cherishes secrecy; like others who antagonize crime, we should use the method of exposure. Crime is blasted by light, and this truth holds of Freemasonry.

When some other crime is committed detectives search out the truth, then witnesses tell the truth. A large part of the work of courts is to obtain testimony and so use it as to give crime an exposure. This is a lesson. To set Freemasonry vividly to view is to give it almost the severest treatment. It is so bad that to show it, is to make it abhorred. It is so low, degraded and mean, that to show it, is to make it detested. It is so false, erroneous and foolish, that to show it, is to make it despised. Like other deeds of darkness it wilts and fades under exposure. Exposure of the salient features of Freemasonry is a true method.

—"Thou shalt not bow down thyself" was the command in the decalogue (Ex 20), and one of the "abominations" of unfaithful Israel was "bowing toward the East." (Ezek. 8:16.) This act adopted from ancient sun worship is still perpetrated by professed members of the spiritual Israel in Masonic lodges.

—Bro. L. B. Lathrop, of Capitola, Cal., writes: "It affords me pleasure to know that the Masons overshot themselves in trying to shut the Lodge Lamp out of the mails. The Notes on International Lessons by Dr. William E. Ketcham are excellent and helpful.

—Rev. W. O. Dinius wrote from Huntington last Saturday: "Sorry I cannot meet with the Board this morning. I closed our meeting here last night after having some thirty converts. I begin at Servia Monday evening. Pray for victory there."

—General Horace Porter, in his "Campaigning with Grant" in the Christmas Century, deals with Genaral Grant's demeanor during the battle of the wilderness. General Porter says that even during the most critical moments General Grant manifested no perceptible anxiety, but that he was visibly affected by the sight of blood. During the second day of the battle Grant smoked about twenty strong cigars, his highest record in the use of tobacco. And let the youth of our land take warning that Gen. Grant's death by cancer of the throat was in all probability the penalty for this excessive use of tobacco.

—Rev. I. L. Buchwalter, of Lisbon, Ia., has a strong article in the Religious Telescope of Dec. 16th, in which he says: "Perhaps the greatest need of humanity, among the moral forces at work to hasten the coming of the good and glorious time looked for, is good, intelligent, pious, and faithful mothers. The very center of our Christian civilization is the home, and the center of the home is the mother. It is very certain that if parents would more carefully follow the Bible standard in guarding the sacred inclosure of the home, this planet would soon turn up a brighter and better prospect to the moral universe."

—General Andrew Jackson, shortly after the Battle of New Orleans, wrote an account of the engagement in a letter to James Monroe, afterward President. This letter will be published, it is believed for the first time, in an article on "Napoleon's Interest in the Battle of New Orleans," in the January Century. In this battle, although the opposing forces were about equal, the English lost 2,117 killed and wounded, while the American loss was only six killed and seven wounded. Mr. Monroe showed General Jackson's letter to Napoleon, and when the latter learned that the victory was mainly due to the deadly aim of the Americans, he planned the formation of troops of sharpshooters, armed with guns of the American pattern. Waterloo prevented the carrying out of the scheme.

—Rev. Dr. B. Baldwin, of the U. B. church, Montpelier, Ohio, whose ministry we much enjoyed while at Petoskey, Mich., a few years ago, has written a volume of sermons which are the products of over a quarter of a century of hard study under the high pressure of missionary, itinerant and evangelistic Christian work. His voice has been heard in many States, thousands have sat entranced, thrilled by his eloquent utterances in proclaiming the "unsearchable riches of Christ," and have wished and urged that these utterances might be placed before them in a permanent form. These discourses are a response in part to these wishes. They who desire to renew their acquaintance with the thought of the author, or the young minister in search of a model, or who seek the reflection of a peculiar denominational life, or the excitation to a higher realm and exalted cast of thinking, or they who build fortresses against the onslaughts of infidelity, and the insidious attacks of dangerous heresies, or any who desire to more fully equip themselves for hand to hand work with sinners will find much in the following pages very helpful, nuggets of truth, brilliant illustrations and strikingly clear comments one may here glean and add to his general stock of knowledge. That this initial volume is worthy of a wide reading is the judgment of all who are acquainted with the ability and sincerity of the author, and it is believed that all others acquainting themselves with it will corroborate this judgment. This valuable book may be had of the author for sixty cents a copy.

MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

The Board of Directors of the National Christian Association met at the Association rooms at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Saturday morning, Jan. 9th. In the absence of the chairman, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, Prof. H. F. Kletzing, of Northwestern College, presided. The following members were also present: Rev. Dr. J. A. Collins, C. J. Holmes, Esq., J. M. Hitchcock, Esq., E. A. Cook, Esq., Prof. Elliot Whipple, Rev. T. B. Radabaugh, E. B. Wylie and Rev. T. B. Arnold. Secretary Phillips and Editor Gault also met with the Board.

Secretary Phillips gave a report that covered the whole wide field, and it was made evident that the district agents are doing excellent service, notwithstanding the natural difficulties which are rather intensified by the continued financial depression. Mr. Phillips has recently made visits to distant parts of the country in the interests of the Association, and has met with uniform courtesy everywhere. As treasurer of the Association Mr. Phillips of course laments the inability to support a more extended work in the various districts. It is certain that donations made now will be like "a friend in need" to the Association and its work.

A committee appointed at a former meeting to suggest improvements in the form of the Cynosure reported, but no action was thought wise just at present. High appreciation of the tone and scope of the columns of the paper was expressed by all, and it is the desire of the Board to put the paper into a form more convenient for binding and preserving.

It was the unanimous feeling that the calls from the foreign missionary fields for literature should be encouraged, although the special fund for that purpose is overdrawn. A small appropriation was voted to fill requests now in hand from certain missionaries friendly to the cause of anti-secrecy. We may again suggest the great good gifts for this purpose would accomplish just now.

Just at the close of this meeting the Board, recalling gratefully the blessing attending the Annual Meeting of last year, appointed a committee of three to arrange for a similar series of meetings in various churches at the time of the next Annual Meeting in May. The following were made the committee: J. M. Hitchcock, chairman, Wm. I. Phillips and M. A. Gault. As is the invariable custom the meeting was opened and closed with prayer to the Father of all, in the name of his Son, Jesus Christ. Dr. J. A. Collins closed the session with a tender petition for guidance and wisdom for all, in all departments of the work.

A SPLENDID IDEA.

Our worthy co laborer, Edward Brakeman, of Geneva, Ohio, suggests, in the following letter under date of Dec. 23, an excellent plan for increasing the circulation of anti-secret literature:

As old age and its usual effects prevents me from aggressive action in public against "secretism," and as none of the papers for which I write dare publish a ringing protest against lodgery, such as I would like, I have thought of the following plan to reach very many who would like to know more about secret societies, if once their attention could be called to the matter. I believe there are hundreds, if not thousands, in every populous locality, whose practical attention to the subject might be secured by reading in their paper an advertisement something like the following:

TURN ON THE SEARCH-LIGHT.

Do you wish to know all about the interior working of every prominent secret society (so-called) in this country, and illustrations of the same? Write to P. O. box (here give number and name of office), with stamp enclosed for return postage, and you will be given by return mail directions how and where to obtain the desired information, with a pamphlet and catalogue of publications.

Of course the place to which I should refer any that might enquire, would be your office. I would like to make arrangements that my place be a depository for such publications as the above "ad" refers to, but when it became generally known, I am of the opinion I would have soon more ashes than books on hand. Hence the first suggestion. Now can you supply me with something that I can envelop to any enquirer which will contain a full list of your publications on secretism? Say something like the last leaf of the Cynosure. I make a practice of giving away the Cynosure after I have read it through, and such other of its kindred as I get from your press.

If every reader of the Cynosure would let his light shine in some such way, lodge darkness would soon flee away. If there is anything in this if placed in the Cynosure that would help us in our contest with the devil, it is at your service. God bless you and all your co-workers in dismantling the forts of Satan, is the constant prayer of your aged brother in Christ,

EDWARD BRAKEMAN.

say to you, swear not at all." He replied, "That is subject to modification." "But," said he, "I will not argue the question," and he dismissed me from his house.

He said enough to me to make it seem that he, in common with the multitude, regarded perjury when committed against the law of God as formulated in the Bible, to be a thing of no account. It may be that the foundations of Protestantism are so far permeated with secret societies as to give occasion for Archbishop Ireland's remark in his book: "As a religious system Protestantism is in a process of dissolution; it is without value as a moral or doctrinal power, and it is no longer a foe with which we need reckon." And again, the Romish Bishop says: "As we love America, as we love the church, it suffices to mention the work, and our hearts shall leap toward it with crusade enthusiasm."

Will Protestantism continue in the same course that God's ancient church did, namely, the secret society abomination fill the land with violence, provoke the wrath of God as did his ancient church, until his chosen people were taken captives by their enemy? We see the bloody harlot waiting and watching for the prey. Bro. Ronayne or Miss Flagg can show us how the secret empire is identical with Romanism.

My next call was upon a Lutheran pastor, whom I found in his study reading this week's Cynosure. His conversation with me was encouraging; he looks the subject squarely in the face and means to meet it with Gospel truth, and will, if he can, attend the State Convention.

We have enough now who agree to take part as speakers in the convention to warrant success as far as public addresses are concerned, and we expect to have the program made out soon.

A GRAND OPPORTUNITY.

SPECIAL TO PENNSYLVANIA FRIENDS. READ EVERY WORD CAREFULLY. DETERMINE WHO ARE ON THE LORD'S SIDE.

WASHINGTON, D, C., Jan. 8, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The enclosed circular letter with the following petition is being sent to friends in Pennsylvania:

To the Honorable Representatives assembled at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania:

The undersigned, residents of the State of Pennsylvania, respectfully petition your aid in enacting such laws as shall prohibit those who hold connection with any of the so called oath-bound secret societies from employment in civil office, from securing corporate or charter privileges for lodges, and displays at the laying of corner stones of public buildings.

We believe such laws required for the public good.

The circulation of these petitions affords a grand opportunity to find out who are on the Lord's side as opposed to the lodge. The first issue of these petitions is to Cynosure readers. We aim in sending out to put a petition in each town where friends are known. We request any who have not received petitions, and can give a little time to aid in circulating them, to drop us a card at once. We will be glad to supply all such.

If any who have received petitions cannot for any reason see to their circulation, they will please notify us at once that some one may be asked to do the work in their town. If we do not hear from friends who have received petitions, we will recognize that they are willing to act as the committee to see to the circulation in their town or locality, and shall look for a report later.

We shall hope that friends and churches interested will send a small contribution. If this is worth doing at all, it is worth well doing. We can secure the names and hire the help necessary to give all pastors in the State a chance to sign these petitions with their congregations if you place the means in our hands. We shall go strictly on the cash basis. As fast as you send we shall use. Prompt action is therefore desired. State, as soon as convenient, what your church will give. Get the young people interested. Oh, how much the young people's societies can help in this! I am sure friends are going to take hold and work, and that we can give a grand report later.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE CIRCULAR LETTER.

To the friends of the anti secrecy cause in Pennsylvania:

DEAR FRIENDS:—At a convention held in Oaks, Pa., Nov. 19th last, the following, with other resolutions, were adopted:

Res 7. The State should require her officers to be free from all connection with secret orders; should refuse to permit such societies to lay the corner stones of buildings erected and paid for by the public; should refuse them the privileges of corporate bodies, and should withdraw charters already given.

Res 8. The State secretary is requested to prepare and circulate a petition addressed to our State legislators at Harrisburg to accord with the sentiment of the 7th resolution. The State officers are requested, as our committee, to present the same.

In accord with this request petitions have been printed and are presented for circulation. We call upon all pastors in the State, together with all friends, to aid in securing signatures.

OUR REASONS MAY BE ASKED.

1, Evidence is not wanting to prove secret orders are undermining our government. Justice should secure the legislation asked. Who can disapprove the statement—"those who are under special obligation to a class are not fitted to rule over the whole."

2. God holds his people responsible for the use of all opportunities to aid in securing right government. Is not this a means within our hands? For these and equally as good reasons,

WE REQUEST

A. All pastors to present these petitions to their congregations, urging that all in sympathy sign, and secure the signatures of any who may be reached in the community. A systematic canvass is desired.

B. All friends to give special attention to securing signatures NOW. If pushed the State may be canvassed in two months, or less. Send for what petitions you can likely use. Mention the names of pastors known to specially favor Christian legislation. When you have made a reasonable effort to secure all the signatures in your church, town or locality, return petitions to the secretary.

C. All friends to send a small contribution to aid in meeting the expense of printing, postage, and sending out these petitions.

To secure the best results, thousands of petitions with circulars should be sent to all parts of the State. We feel confident friends will recognize the importance and magnitude of this work and help as they may be able in its accomplishment.

Send all pledges, contributions and petitions, when signed, to the secretary, who will acknowledge receip and report in due time.

What do you say, friends? How much do you desire the freedom of your country? What may you be expected to do in this matter? We look for a strong, clear and united reply Address,

REV. W. B. STODDARD,
215 Four-and-a-half St., N. W. Washington, D C.

NOTE.—There are two petitions, one to the Senate, the other to the House. Friends are requested to sign both.

Our Christ.

Holding His hand, my steadied feet
May walk the air, the seas.
On life and death His smile falls sweet—
Lights up all mysteries.
Stranger nor exile can I be
In new worlds where He leadeth me.

Not my Christ only—He is ours,
Humanity's close bond,
Key to its vast, unopened powers,
Dream of our dreams beyond.
What yet we shall be none can tell.
Now are we His, and all is well.
—Lucy Larcom.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 17. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Revivals at home and in mission fields.—II Chron. xxx, 13-27. (A missionary topic.)

This chapter tells the story of a remarkable revival. It was brought about under the direction of Hezekiah, the good king of Israel, who had succeeded Ahab, the wicked king. The story really occupies the twenty-ninth as well as the thirtieth chapter. It places before us in an interesting and striking manner the characteristics of a revival in religion, whether at home or on mission fields. Taking in the whole story, we find these characteristics to be:

1. A consciousness of need. Hezekiah realized this need. God had been neglected. He had been forsaken. The doors of the temple had been closed, the lamps put out and neither incense was burned nor burnt offerings offered. The consciousness of need is a necessary element to a true revival in religion. Men must be made to feel their need of a Saviour before they will come to Him to be saved.

2. Preparatory steps. 1. The first step was reformation among the religious leaders. Hezekiah summoned the priests and Levites and ordered them to sanctify themselves. A revival must begin with God's people in the first place. This is what revival means—a reviving of those who are already Christians. Awaken the church and the world will be awakened. Revive the saint and the sinner will easily and speedily be revived. 2. Obstacles overcome. There will always be apparent obstacles in the way of a revival. The regular time for the passover, which was to be used in reviving the people, had passed by a short time. Many would argue that they should wait the regular coming of the time again. But Hezekiah believed that now the iron was hot and it was time to strike. So applying a law to the congregation which gave individuals the permission to keep the passover in the second month he determined to celebrate it in the second month. God's laws will point out some way of overcoming difficulties if we are sincere and in earnest. 3. Invitations were sent out. The king issued a decree calling upon the people to return to God. Some mocked it, but others heeded it. There will always be mockers and scoffers, but still the work should be done. Invitations should be given to all to come to God and to the church. Personal solicitation is a very important preparatory step to a revival. People must be brought under the influences of the gospel, and nothing will bring them quicker than a kind personal invitation.

3. The revival. The time came. God was present. The people were present. There was earnest prayer. The people turned from idols. There was spirited music. It was a great success.

SUBJECTS OF PRAYER.

Suggested For Christian Endeavor Prayer Chain.

JANUARY—FOR THE CONVERSION OF THE WORLD.

Pray that the beginning of the new year may witness the beginning of a universal revival of religion. Pray for a great manifestation of the power of the Holy Spirit throughout the world, and that the unsaved everywhere may be turned to Christ.

FEBRUARY—FOR ARMENIA.

Pray that Armenia may be spared further persecution, and that a way to prosperity may be opened to the thousands left destitute by the Turk.

MARCH—FOR OUR CHURCHES.

Pray that churches may be filled with the evangelizing spirit of Christ; that the members may dwell together in Christian unity and service; that they may loyally uphold the pastors' hands, and that the great mission of the church in winning men and training them into Christlikeness may be fulfilled.

APRIL—FOR UNSAVED FRIENDS AND RELATIVES.

Pray that the members of our own families may be won for Christ, and that Christians may be faithful in witnessing to them for the Master. Pray for the unsaved friends and relatives of others.

MAY—FOR THE CAUSE OF TEMPERANCE.

Pray that the drink traffic everywhere may be destroyed, and that all Christians may labor together for this end.

JUNE—FOR UNIVERSAL PEACE.

Pray that war everywhere may give way to arbitration, and that Christian nations may become examples of fellowship and mutual toleration.

Floating Endeavor.

Two English merchantmen recently stopping in San Diego harbor were visited systematically by the local Endeavorers, with the result that before the ships left port an officer on each and 19 men on one and 12 on the other had confessed Christ. A prayer circle was formed on each ship.

Having Their Own Way.

If you could have your own way, you would speedily ruin yourself and do great harm to all that stand in close relation to you.—American Friend.

Much Easier.

How often is it found easier to teach 20 what were good to be done than to be one of 20 to follow our own teachings!—Presbyterian Messenger.

Hardly Consistent.

The man who is too poor to buy a newspaper is generally rich enough to take his whole family to the circus.—Christian Instructor.

Christian Magnanimity.

To have the advantage of an enemy and yet abstain from using it is to display true Christian magnanimity.—American Friend.

Divided Skirts.

No girl who has faced the wind in a divided bicycle skirt on a frosty day will return to the old open, flapping skirt that impedes her movements as it chills her knees. The divided skirt has the "yeas" by a great majority, and she will cast about to see how she can make the prettiest divided skirt she knows how. There are divided skirts and divided skirts, you know, and there is a wide difference in kind.

A new bicycle costume is made of heavy Scotch cheviot in a small, irregular brown and tan check. The skirt is a well hanging divided skirt, reaching to the shoe tops, with two broad box plaits at the back and front that are so full that one never suspects the dividing line at all.

The jacket is a short, snug garment, cut in an irregular way at the front to show quite an expanse of the brown linen blouse front. A broad white braid follows the edge of the jacket, and at the back seam of the sleeve the braiding is quite elaborate.

A dark brown suede belt and a soft white berretta complete this outing toilet. The black berretta is worn also, and on very cold days a chamois jacket is slipped on underneath the bicycle suit.—New York Commercial.

A Chicago Experiment.

The new training school for domestic service in Chicago will be watched with interest because it claims to be founded "upon wisdom gathered from past errors and failures of like efforts." The institution is incorporated under state laws, with a house provided with ample grounds for its extension if warranted by the success of the venture. The first class consists of 25 young women, who have the best of references for faithfulness in performing their duties. The instruction given will be not only in cookery, but in all branches that have to do with economy, comfort, health and the proper maintenance of a house. The most improved methods will be taught. The pupils are received free of charge; also without compensation from the school for the first six months. After this probation $3 a week will be given to each pupil until she graduates, which will be at the end of two years. At the end of that time a diploma and the sum of $100 will be given. Special courses of instruction will also be given to those who desire to fit themselves for one branch of work only, but only after the preliminary six months' training required as a basis for any kind of service.

Vassar Students' Aid.

Vassar college was very glad to welcome on Nov. 21 the Vassar Students' Aid society. During the seven years of its existence the society has enabled a large number of students to take the college course. Its beneficiaries at the college last year numbered 20, a small number, however, in comparison with the applicants for aid. Competitive examinations or other means for testing special fitness determine the successful candidates. The aid is give in the form of a loan without interest, usually to the amount of $200, or a half scholarship yearly. The society hopes also to be able to offer a fellowship soon. The regular membership of the society is composed of graduates, former students and teachers of Vassar college. The 14 local branches admit others who are interested in its object as associate members. At the recent meeting the New York, Brooklyn, Orange (N. J.) and Poughkeepsie branches were represented. The president is Mrs. Truman J. Backus and the secretary Mrs. William M. Dean, both of Brooklyn.

Won Many Honors.

Miss Anita Hetherington Haggerty, one of the three young women recently appointed receivers by Justice McLean of the New York supreme court, has won honor in everything she has attempted. A graduate of Vassar, who later enjoyed the privilege of foreign travel and study, she took her LL. B. at the University Law school in 1895, ranking among the first ten in her class, received the degree of master of laws at the university commencement last spring, and was appointed by Chancellor McCracken and the Woman's Legal Education society as assistant lecturer for this year in the woman's law class. Miss Haggerty has had valuable experience in her profession for the past two years in the law office of De Lancey Nicoll. She retains a fondness for music and art which has made her skilled in both. She is also a proficient linguist.

Tab Trimmings.

Among trimmings square tabs are much affected. Revers and basques are finished with them; the hems of dress skirts are battlemented, and outstanding tabs are attached to straight collars and wrist frills. Most of these tabs are about 2½ inches long and not more than 2 inches wide. They are detached as a rule and are secured to a moderately wide band which slips inside the collar of the bodice. Sets of these decorations in white linen are made for the neck and sleeves, and when of this material narrow lace insertion is let in about a quarter of an inch from the edge of the tab, and for dressy wear a tiny lace frill is added, but the plainer sets with the insertion alone is considered the most stylish.

French Ideas of American Women.

Some young western farmers in New York were once asked by a smart reporter why they had come to Castle Garden in search of wives. "If we married an American girl," answered one of them, "we should have to employ a foreign woman to take care of her." And it is just this half oriental attitude toward the weaker sex which is one of the most disquieting features in American social life. The wild rose of English woods and hedges is not a whit less fragrant and dewy than the finest blooms of the manor garden, and the gardener's daughter and my lady are, each in her own particular way, as suggestive as an English landscape shrouded in mist. In like manner the American has all the hardness and brightness and crispness of her native air. But what she gains in one direction she loses in another. She does not live in an atmosphere such as artists love. She does not make one feel that her clear, calm eyes are the windows of a soul whose depths have never been sounded. She does not give one the impression of richness, intellectually and physically. She has not the repose of manner which suggests strength and vigor. Her qualities are all, with one exception, matter of fact. She has charm, and it is a quality peculiarly her own. It has very little in common with the charm, founded on passion, of a Cleopatra or a Lucrezia Borgia, but it has fragrance which, when allied with beauty, does much to atone for the want of those feminine graces she has, unhappily, come to believe are incompatible with independence. It is her most reliable weapon of defense.—Contemporary Review.

How to Wear Flowers.

Let no one attempt to wear flowers ignorantly. It is no longer permissible to wear a corsage bouquet, and other time worn methods of decorating oneself are likewise out of favor. If one does not know just where to place the chosen blossoms, it were far better to appear unadorned than to commit so pronounced a breach of social etiquette. For the many who are uninformed the following points of information will be of advantage. They have been issued by the most authoritative coterie of fashionable women:

Chrysanthemums are being worn by thousands of women who have not a suspicion of the proper method. The only approved style is to wear a single blossom, and it may be as large as the wearer pleases, directly under the chin, the stem reaching down toward the waist.

And, finally, there is a new place for the bunch of violets. This is to be worn on the sleeve, on the outer edge of the right cuff, whether it be worn with a coat or dress. All manner of fancy pins are in vogue to pin the violets in their new position, a fact which argues that the new fancy is already well established.—Philadelphia Times.

The Aigret.

Fifty-one national societies were represented at the meetings of the National Council of Women held in Boston on Dec. 3 and 4. With few exceptions, the reports from these organizations showed gratifying progress in work undertaken. One of these exceptions was found in the report read by Mrs. M. A. Lovell of Philadelphia of the work of the Anti-vivisection society. Part of the effort of this society is directed toward the bird despoiling and slaughter for millinery purposes. Mrs. Lovell eloquently denounced the practice and begged every woman present who wore an aigret in her hat to tear it out before she left the building, adding, "I have had only occasional glimpses of the speakers here today through a grove of the plumes plucked from the breasts of mother birds, while hovering over their young." She reported that almost no progress had been made toward getting women to stop the encouragement of those cruel practices, the demand for bird plumage being practically no less than it has been for a number of years.

The Corset Question.

If it really is true that the queen of Portugal has ordered the women of the court to remove their corsets, we may look out for a fresh assortment of modes. Style in gowns will change, because the fitted frock as we wear it today is not pleasing without stays.

Interest in physical culture will intensify greatly, since, with less expected of dress, more will be required of figure under the clothing. Modes in hats shift with those in gowns. And the same is true of shoes.

I do not know how much influence the queen of Portugal has upon the world of fashion, but I presume it is enough to make other leaders at least pause to think again the harm that the corset does. It is said that this queen's action comes from the shock which she experienced upon seeing the interiors of some of her maids in evening dress by the help of an X ray.

Why would it not be an excellent idea to let all of us see in that way the effect of tight clothing upon women?

Of course common sense would revolt against the exhibition, just as common sense is and has been opposed to every effort of the human being to become acquainted with himself. But we are not all governed by common sense, thank heaven!

Let us know the worst about woman and her corsets. It cannot be so bad in its effect as not to know it.—New York Press.

Aiming For Two Reforms.

In France a lady with the suspiciously Teutonic name of Schmahl is the head and front of the agitation for women's rights. Oddly enough, Mme. Schmahl is an English woman born and bred, her permanent residence in France having only been during the last ten years. However, neither nationality, race nor creed offers any serious obstacle to feminine co-operation in the task of winning equality with man. As chief supporter of L'Avant Courriere, Mme. Schmahl has succeeded in annexing, as other supporters, two ladies who are as widely apart as the poles in religious sympathy and social status. One of these is the dowager Duchess d'Uzes, an aristocrat and a fervent Roman Catholic, while the other is Mme. Sarah Monod, a member of a well known Calvinistic family at Geneva. Their programme is limited to two reforms, which they may hope to compass in one legislative session—namely, the right of women to act as witnesses to all legal documents and the protection of the earnings of a wife from her husband's interference.

Her Wet Day Wear.

A bright, stylish woman, who has to go out every day in all weathers to attend to daily business, has designed her own rainy day costume and wears it with any amount of comfort and pleasure. It is made of Scotch tweed, the skirt being box plaited and the waist made a full blouse. The skirt reaches to the tops of the shoes, and rubbers and gaiters are always worn with it. The whole suit is made large enough to slip over the ordinary street gown, the designer frequently looping up the skirt of the usual street gown and wearing it under the other.

Grand, Gloomy and Peculiar.

The new boots adopted by the Brooklyn Women's Health Culture club are "grand, gloomy and peculiar," according to some of the accounts of them. But they are sensible and comfortable, at any rate, with low, flat heels, thick soles and toes that are like neither razors nor clubs. The boots reach almost or quite to the knees and are laced snugly. They are really stylish looking, and as a protection from the rain and the mud they are a lasting success.—New York Tribune.

Life Insurance For Women.

Mrs. S. Gurney Lapham of Syracuse, who lectured recently at the home of Mrs. Russell Sage, in New York, on "Life Insurance For Women," says that $1 a week invested in an endowment policy assures to a woman not only protection in case of her death for those dependent on her, but if she lives the guaranteed return at a specified rate of all the money paid and the compound interest, the amount of which will prove a substantial prop in declining years.

Nearly 60,000 women voted for the first time at the recent general elections in South Australia. The exact figures are 59,066 women, which compare favorably with 77,464 men.

A woman with a pretty hand spoils it by wearing rings, but you couldn't make one in a thousand believe it.

FORMS OF INEBRIETY

SOCIAL, SOLITARY AND PERIODIC DRUNKARDS.

They All Reach the Same Goal In the End—Insanity and Death—Delusions of Diseased Brains—Causes Which Produce the Appetite For Rum.

From hospital records it would appear that the chief cause of inebriety is an inebriate parent. In many cases inebriate parents have insane as well as inebriate children.

Out of 500 cases treated by Dr. Crothers, the alcohol expert, 225 cases could be traced to the use of alcohol in parents and grandparents, and in 120 to defective brain states from neurotic diseases, with consumptive and rheumatic diathesis.

Out of a total of 1,500 inebriates, there were 755 having a history of intemperance in their families, besides a record of insanity in 6 per cent. Parents, one or both, were responsible for two-thirds, and grandparents for one-twenty-fifth of these transmissions.

But the whole question of inebriety is an intricate and perplexing problem. Doctors in general seem to have arrived at the conclusion that habitual inebriety should be treated as a disease rather than as a criminal offense. In most retreats cruelty has given way to kindness.

Patients are now treated as are those laboring under a baffling had inveterate disease.

According to Dr. Norman Kerr, in his book on inebriety, there are many forms of this, but that it is hard to denote the worst. For instance, there is the social inebriate. He drinks openly and without disguise, and rarely except in congenial companionship with other drinkers. In his cups he is fond of good company, and it is frequently to his fondness for company that he is indebted for his introduction to drinking, if not his initiation into the habit of intoxication.

The solitary inebriate leads a far different life. He generally shuns the company of his fellows, shuts himself up with his bottle and dulls his senses into foolish dreams of coming greatness. He generally drinks in the evening or even after he has retired, rising frequently in the night for his deep potations.

All drunkards, however, are not subjects of disease. There are many who drink from "sheer cussedness," in whom at the outset of their careers the closest scrutiny can detect only moral obliquity. Such are not happy unless when indulging in forbidden pleasure. They drink as they gamble—for the love of pleasurable excitement.

There are yet others who indulge simply because they yield easily to temptation or like to be in the fashion of a fast set in which they move. Generally speaking, these are not victims of a disease, at least in the early stages of their drinking.

Both of these classes of drunkards can drink or refrain from drink at pleasure before a clearly defined diseased condition has been established. They gradually fall, not because they are greater sinners than their fellows, not because they are worse morally, but because they are weaker physically.

It is rare that victims of hereditary inebriety are periodic in their libations. They usually drink constantly and freely and have no time for the sobering up until tired nature masters them. They are complete slaves to the habit and are practically insane as long as they can stand upon their feet.

Periodic inebriety also affords extraordinary examples of temporary insanity. One man becomes the embodiment of piety, oracularly delivering solemn religious counsel to all with whom he drinks, though in his intervals of abstaining soberness he is an avowed atheist.

Another labors under the delusion that he is the "last man" and bids all his fellows an affectionate farewell. A third is literally "mad." He can be controlled only with difficulty. A fourth insists that he is dying from smallpox.

In fact, there is no end to the hallucinations of drunkards. But whether hereditary or otherwise, whether social or solitary or periodic, all the confirmed inebriates find the same goal—a warped and diseased brain and a drunkard's asylum.—New York Telegram.

Crush Appetite.

To be as good as our fathers we must be better. They silenced their fears and subdued their prejudices, inaugurating free speech and equality with no precedent on the file. Europe shouted "Madmen!" and gave us 40 years for the shipwreck. With serene faith they persevered. Let us rise to their level. Crush appetite and prevent temptation if it rots great cities.—Wendell Phillips.

Barmaids of England.

There are said to be 90,000 barmaids in England and practically none in Ireland. Very few Scotch girls will accept such a position. An appeal is being made to English women to rescue these girls from the slavery of the bar.

Three Bottles Per Man.

At a recent banquet given by the lord mayor of London 250 dozen bottles of wine were broken, or an average of three bottles for every guest, so says The Westminster Gazette.

Temperance Notes.

The Transvaal folksraad has enacted a new liquor law embodying total prohibition of the sale of liquors to natives.

Ivan Turgeneff, the Russian novelist, neither smokes nor uses alcoholic drinks.

The corporation of the city of Glasgow has not granted a new liquor license for eight years.

The devil has a good start in every home where there is a moderate drinker.—Ram's Horn.

Four of our great Protestant denominations now refuse to admit rum sellers to church membership.

The reason why so many break the pledge is that their grandfathers never took it.

If a boy were to get drunk, would he make a man of himself?

The man who can afford to get drunk is too rich.—New York Voice.

SABBATH SCHOOL.

LESSON IV, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JAN. 24.

Text of the Lesson, Acts iii, 1-16—Memory Verses, 13-16—Golden Text, Acts iii, 16—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. Although this book is called the Acts of the Apostles, it might be called the acts of Peter and Paul, for these are the two through whom the Spirit is seen working. John is seen here associated with Peter, but Peter seems to be the principal actor. It is most interesting to follow these two, who, with James, formed the inner circle of the Saviour's friends. The ninth hour would be about 3 p. m. (Luke xxiii, 44), the hour when Jesus died, and we might safely imagine these two talking of it as they walked to the temple together.

2. Here is a pitifully helpless case, a man over 40 years of age (chapter iv, 22), who had never walked a step, and who was daily carried by friends and laid at the beautiful gate of the temple that he might receive alms from the passersby. He makes us think of the man 38 years sick at the pool of Bethesda (John v, 5) so discouraged and hopeless, but these are just the cases which show forth the power of God, as in the blind man and Lazarus (John ix, 3; xi, 4). Every sinner is a hopeless case in himself, but Christ Jesus came into the world to same sinners, to seek and save the lost

3, 4, 5. As he asks alms of Peter and John they both looked at him, and when Peter said, "Look on us," he thought surely he would receive something from them, but cannot possibly have had a thought of what he was going to receive. If one had told him that day as he was being carried to the temple, "This is our last trip with you, for you won't need to come again," he might have asked if they thought he would die or if another great healer had come, for it can hardly be but that he had both heard of and seen the Lord Jesus. But if so why had not Jesus healed him? Can it be that Jesus passed him by in order that Peter and John might have the honor and joy of doing so? Possibly.

6. "Silver and gold have I none." That was enough to make him drop his hand, for it was money he wanted. "But such as I have give I thee." What could he have worth giving if he had no money? "In the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth rise up and walk." Could he believe his ears? Did he say, "Rise and walk?" And did he use that name, "Jesus of Nazareth?" Yes, even so. And there is something supernatural in their looks and words, for it is Jesus Himself who by His Spirit is looking through their eyes and speaking with their lips.

7. Peter took him by the hand, lifted him up and instantly strength came to his feet and ankle bones. It is a true story. It actually happened, and such things are being done in our own time by the very same Jesus, for He is the same yesterday, today and forever. The Christian Alliance and other papers record many such.

8. Standing, walking, leaping, praising God, he entered into the temple with Peter and John. Another illustration of Isa. xxxv, 6, and proof of the fact that the Lord Jesus lives and has all power. But let us not be understood as teaching or believing that every sick person could be healed if they had faith enough, and that the Lord has no use for physicians. The facts are that believers both then and now were sometimes healed and sometimes allowed to remain sick and die. The Lord sees fit to bless the skill and medicine of the physician, and sometimes to restore to health even from the verge of the grave without either. It is our place to have full confidence in and trust Him to do what seemeth Him good, magnifying Him under all circumstances (Phil. i, 20).

9, 10. The people saw him perfectly whole. They knew him as the lame man at the beautiful gate, but they never saw him after this fashion. Day after day and year after year had he continued helpless, but at last his deliverance came suddenly and unexpectedly. It is the waiting and the patient continuing that tries one's soul—the going on in the same routine and under the same trials with no prospect of deliverance. But deliverance will come in His time and way. Here is the patience and faith of the saints (Rev. xiii, 10).

11, 12. The lame man, now healed, holds on to Peter and John as if he thought his healing might depart if he let them go, and the crowd has gathered and looks in astonishment upon Peter and John as if they had done it. How prone we are to see the human instrumentality and honor it, and how prone our human nature is to feel that itself is some great one! We say and sing, "Not I, but Christ," but perhaps the Searcher of Hearts sees deep within us something that says, "See what Christ did through Me! You can't come up to that."

13. At once Peter points them to Jesus of Nazareth, the glorified Son of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and accuses them of being guilty of His death and responsible for it. We are not apt to want a Saviour unless we know that we are sinners. The first thing necessary, therefore, to our salvation is a conviction of sin.

14. How often have we by deed or word denied Him and preferred the murderer? Whenever we are ashamed to own that we are His and that we do not care to do this or that, or go here or there because we know He would not like it, or when we prefer the company of the world to His company, is it not a denial of Him and a preference for the prince of this world? If we prefer the worldly one to the holy one, or unrighteousness to righteousness, what better are we than those who crucified Christ? Let us in imagination stand by the cross of Christ and honestly confess what we think of Him.

15. The central truth throughout this book and in all the preaching of the apostles is that Jesus is alive from the dead, and believers are witnesses to that fact; also that God had foreseen and foretold both the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow, and that He will come again to fulfill all that the prophets have spoken (verses 17 21). How, then, can we know anything of the things that are to come unless we are familiar with the prophets, for "surely the Lord God will do nothing, but He revealeth His secret unto His servants, the prophets" (Amos iii, 7).

16. Not Peter nor John, but the risen and glorified Christ had made this man perfectly whole, and the same Lord Jesus Christ foretold by Moses shall yet fulfill every promise to Abraham and bring blessing to all the kindreds of the earth (verses 22-26). His name, through faith in His name, will do wonders today, and those who, like Peter and John, have neither silver nor gold and are counted unlearned and ignorant men (chapter iv, 18) my be used by Him if only they are willing to be filled with His Spirit and give Him all the glory.

ILLINOIS' NEW EXECUTIVE INDUCTED INTO OFFICE.

Imposing Parade Precedes the Inaugural Exercises with a Fine Array of Military and Civic Org nizations in Line—Gov. Mount, of Indiana, Also Takes Hold.

Springfield, Ills., Jan. 11.—At noon today the inaugural ceremonies of Governor took place. At 10:45 a. m. a procession began its march through the streets of the city. Hundreds of fraternal orders, marching clubs and civic societies, in conjunction with the state militia, made the procession a notable feature of the ceremonies. Among those in line were about 2,000 of the state guard including the companies of this city, the cadet companies from Alton and the Unuiversity of Illinois and the Champaign companies under the command of Captain D. H. Brush, of the regular army.

The Coming and the Going Meet.

After the parade Governor Altgeld received Governor-Elect Tanner in the executive chamber in the state capitol and acompanied him from there to the hall of the house of representatives, where the governor-elect took the oath of office. Then Governor Tanner began the delivery of his inaugural adress. The inaugural ball tonight, a new departure in this state, will be held in representative hall and will be one of the social events of the season in Illinois.

Gov. Altgeld Objected.

According to the original plans of the committee Governor Altgeld and Governor-elect Tanner were to review the troops from a stand erected for the purpose on the Adams street side of the court house, and there to join forces and proceed to the state house to the inauguration ceremonies. This plan was thought to be all right by the committee, but Gov. Altgeld seemed to think it was not fitting that he, being the outgoing executive, should officiate in the role of chief mourner, and kicked over the traces at once and flatly declined to concur in this plan.

Suggests a New Plan.

He, however, suggested another which was equally as distastful to the committee on arrangements. He wanted Governor-elect Tanner to come to the executive mansion and accompany him from there to the state house, where the inauguration ceremonies were to be held. Governor Tanner did not care much how things were arranged, but the committee on arrangements raised the point of etiquette that it was not at all in keeping with the occasion that Tanner should go to the executive mansion until he entered it as its occupant, and so this proposition met with a prompt veto at the hands of the committee. The result was the arrangement described above.

Preparations for the Event.

Preparation for the festive event had been pushed for several weeks and were very complete. Flags, Japanese lanterns, and hundreds of electric lights transform the state house into a brilliant festival hall. A false floor in the representatives' chamber made an ideal ball room. Immediately after the legislature adjourned workmen began removing the desks, seats, and the speaker's throne and temporary chairs were substituted in their place. Here is where Captain Tanner took the oath of office.

Death of Gen. Francis A. Walker.

Boston, Jan. 6.—General Francis A. Walker is dead. The end came very sudden, coming with hardly an instant's warning, and the sad news was received with surprise and no small measure of incredulity when it first became known in this city. General Walker was in his usual health Monday, and attended to his many duties as usual during the day. He passed Monday evening with his family, and retired at the usual hour. About 12:30 a. m. he spoke to Mrs. Walker, who was awake by his side, making some casual remarks. She answered him, and it was but a few minutes later when she was startled to notice that his breathing was becoming labored. She spoke to him, but received no reply. He did not speak again.

In this book alone can be found the information sought by every Bible reader, whether old or young, scholarly or unlettered. It is, indeed, a great work.

Recent discoveries in archæology have brought the world of today face to face with the men who lived, and acted, and wrote during the early periods covered by Biblical Historians. These discoveries have resulted in the triumphant vindication of the sacred volume from the charges brought against it by open foes and pretended friends. Every intelligent person will order the book, as the matter contained in it is of vital importance and cannot be found in any other book on earth.

Springfield, Ills., Jan. 8.—Senate and house sat in join session yesterday in the assembly chamber to canvass the returns of the last election for state officers. The regular routine was followed in this matter and each Republican candidate from governor down was formally declared elected. The following committee was appointed by Speaker Curtiss and Lieutenant Governor Gill to wait on Governor Tanner and other state officers and inform them of their election and invite them to meet the house and senate at 12 o'clock Monday, Jan. 11, to take the oath of office: Senators Bogardus and Wells, and Representatives Parrish, Sharrock and Barnes. Prior to the joint session Speaker Curtiss announced to the assembly his committee on rules. It is composed of Speaker Curtiss, C. A. Allen, Ernest Schubert, Isaac Craig and Fred P. Morris.

Drawing of numbers for seats occupied nearly an hour of the senate's time. Both houses adjourned till 9 o'clock a. m. Monday and a majority of the members have gone home. Three contested election cases were referred to the election committee. Appropriation bills covering the expenses of the session were introduced in both houses. No change is apparent in the senatorial situation.

FLOOD SUFFERERS IN ILLINOIS.

Rescuers Have to Cut Their Way Through Ice to Reach Them.

Quincy, Ills., Jan. 8.—Farmers who have been down from the Indian Grave district report that the water in the flooded portion, fifteen miles above here, is subsiding very slowly, and that there is much suffering among the water-bound families and their stock. Several men went to the aid of the sufferers, and after working most of the night, cutting their way through the ice, they reached four families who had been calling for help for two days and part of whom had lived on parched corn for three days. The Quincy Humane society is also taking an active part in relieving the washed-out and water-bound families.

Twenty Pardoned in One Day.

Springfield, Ills., Jan. 6.—Governor Altgeld yesterday pardoned twenty convicts, twelve of whom were charged with murder. The sentences of the latter ranged from short terms for manslaughter to imprisonment for life for murder in the first degree. Their names are: Henry Jones, John F. Burke, Charles Dixon, Goin Harris, William Landers, John Crowley, Frank Weber, John Walker, Charles Robinson, Lawrence Farley, Kathryn Kelchner, and William B. Sibert. The reason given by the governor for the issuance of the pardons is that they were recommended by the state's attorneys of the counties represented.

His Shot Went Fatally Astray.

Decatur, Ills., Jan. 11.—Theron Fletcher, a prominent grocer, shot at a sparrow with a rifle yesterday. The bullet struck Mrs. Walters, colored, in the left temple. The doctors think she will die. Fletcher was not arrested.

THREE CABINET POSITIONS FILLED.

Sherman for State, Bliss for Navy, and Goff for Attorney General.

Chicago, Jan. 11.—The Chicago Journal's Washington correspondent telegraphs as follows: "I am able to state positively that President-Elect McKinley has these cabinet selections: John Sherman of Ohio for secretary of state; Cornelius Bliss of New York for secretary of the navy; Judge Nathan Goff of West Virginia for attorney general. Also that affairs have so changed in Ohio politics as to warrant Mark Hanna's believing that Governor Bushnell will appoint him to the senate.

"Judge Joseph McKenna of California can be secretary of the interior if he will take the place. No selection has been made for the treasury, war, postoffice, or agriculture departments. Major McKinley offered Senator Allison the state portfolio when the senator visited him the other day. Allison declined, greatly to McKinley's disappointment. It is believed by McKinley that Sherman will accept, and this enables Hanna to switch from the treasury department, for which he was slated, against his inclination, to the senate, for which he has a strong liking. Should Bushnell or Sherman at the last moment decline to comply with McKinley's wishes, another man for secretary of state will have to be found, and Hanna switched back to the treasury.

"But I am creditably informed that McKinley is confident that Sherman and Bushnell will not disappoint him. No selection for McKinley's private secretary has been made. Major Carson, Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger; Moses P. Handy, editor-in-chief of The Chicago Times-Herald; Perry Heath, and Charles Dawes of Evanston, Ills., have been under consideration."

Campania's Stormy Passage.

Liverpool, Jan. 11.—The Cunard line steamship Campania, which arrived here Saturday, after leaving New York on Saturday last, had a most stormy passage, encountering strong gales and high seas all the way over. Senator Edward G. Wolcott of Colorado, who is understood to be visiting Europe in the interest of bimetallism, was in good health when he landed here. He read with interest the dispatches from the United States during the week, but he refused to say anything except that the work he had in hand lies chiefly in London, to which city he is proceeding immediately.

Failure in Washtubs.

New York, Jan. 11.—The Stewart Cereamic company, manufacturers of washtubs and ceremaic ware, Saturday assigned to Anthony R. Porter. The company was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey in 1892, with a capital stock of $200,000.

Perkins Renominated in California.

Sacramento, Cal., Jan. 6.—George C. Perkins was declared the nominee for United States senator by the joint Republican caucus last night. Twenty-three senators and thirty-six asemblymen went into caucus, and Perkins received 59 votes and the proxy of Sims, making a vote of 60. Perkins needs but one vote to elect, and that is said to be sure.

Costly Fire at Minneapolis.

The fire department succeeded in confining the flames to the packing department of the Anchor establishment. The loss will reach $150,000. Fully insured.

The writer of this has been in the business 20 years, and has seen the changes from the old wooden lasts and pegs to the modern method, and knows it to be complete.

Our Improved Harness and Saw Clamp is an indispensable tool in sewing a harness or filing a saw. The jaws are thrown open mechanically by a coiled spring on the bolt.

FARM FIELD AND GARDEN

FIND OUT HOW YOU STAND.

A Business Talk to Farmers by a Business Man.

A man of business expresses himself as follows in the columns of The New England Homestead: It is certainly worth while to make a good deal of an effort to square up such accounts. If the settlement shows that you owe a balance, pay it, if possible, in cash or trade, especially if you can get a discount off for so doing. If it appears that the other man owes you, it is equally important to square up the matter, and if you have doubts about his ability to pay you had better sacrifice something now to fix it up than run the risk of a bigger loss later. The least that can be done is to have a perfect understanding of the account. Even if the balance is not settled both parties then know exactly how much it is. This done, you are in shape to take an inventory.

First, I make a full list of everything on the farm—different lots of land, the buildings, the animals, all tools, machines, vehicles, etc., and amount of each crop, feed, manure, fertilizer, wood, lumber or other stuff on hand that is used on the farm. This list includes everything, from the most important and costly down to that of least consequence. To see that nothing is missed have a grand clearing up about buildings and farm. You may find lots of little things that have been lost. Then each article must be closely inspected to judge its value, and this leads to many repairs that would be neglected otherwise, but that can be easily made during winter at small expense. The list must include any and all other property; also debts owing to you, notes or cash on hand, etc. The valuation to be applied is what each article is worth in the business of the farm. No use deceiving yourself by putting the value of an article too high or too low. You want to get it as near right as possible.

The total of all these items of what you own makes up your assets. The total of what you owe constitutes your liabilities. If the latter exceed the former, you are by so much "in a hole." If your assets exceed your liabilities, you are that much ahead, unless you have deceived yourself by putting too high a value on your inventory. Even if you don't keep a book account during the year your inventory, if compared with the one taken a year ago, will show whether you have gained or lost during the year. It will show how the list of your stock, crops, etc., compares now with then. It will give you lots of points about making the most of success and failure. It will be an eye opener to any farmer, however good or poor it may be.

Protect the Trees.

A good law in Massachusetts allows the selectmen of any town to appoint a tree committee, who may go over all the highways of the town and designate what trees must not be cut down by driving a spike into them six feet from the ground. This protects from ruthless owners, who have no taste for the beautiful, trees in which should center public interest and local pride. The Farm Journal, commenting on the foregoing, says: The sentiment may well be commended to the lawmakers of other states. And when insect depredators are despoiling the foliage and making a town hideous and loathsome, thus directly damaging its real estate values, the local authorities should have the power to buy and use sprayers or compel owners to do so, by which to protect the interests of the townspeople and the traveling public.

Nut Trees For the Central West.

The improved Spanish chestnut, known under the name of Paragon, would do well. The nuts are fully twice as large as the American chestnut and nearly or quite as sweet. It is usually grafted on the common chestnut, about 4 or 5 feet above the ground, but as it outgrows the latter it is liable to break off at the point of union, so it is better to graft at the surface. Then, in transplanting, the point of union can be set, say two inches under the surface, as in the case of a dwarf pear tree.

The English walnut would do well in central Indiana. It is a nice tree, and the fruit or nut—for sale in the groceries—is superior to that of both the black and the white walnut. The hard shelled almond is as hardy as a peach tree, which it much resembles, and on which it can be budded.—National Farmer.

Best Results From Manure.

It is told in a bulletin from the Ohio station that manuring ground for corn direct from the stable during midwinter and manuring from the barnyard just before plowing corn ground left a residual effect, noticeable on the oat crop following, in favor of the application direct from the stable in midwinter. This accords with the experience of others. Manure is strongest when first made, and there is no safer place for it than on the surface of a sod field. As it leaches the plant roots take up the strength, and the loss is a small item. The manure should be spread several months, if possible, before the ground is plowed.

Selling Cotton Seed.

We have always maintained that the farmer gains more by using his cotton seed as manure than by selling when the price is anywhere below $10 a ton or 15 cents a bushel. The following analysis shows the fertilizing properties of a ton each of whole cotton seed and cottonseed meal:

Whole seed, 1 ton; nitrogen, 61.4 pounds; phosphoric acid, 20.4 pounds; potash, 33.4 pounds; cottonseed meal, nitrogen 141.6 pounds; phosphoric acid, 56 pounds; potash, 36 pounds.—Southern Cultivator.

ILLUSTRATING THE RELATION OF SOME OF THE DEGREES AND RITES IN FREEMASONRY TO EACH OTHER.

The accompanying chart represents one hundred and forty two degrees.

1. The American Rite of 13 degrees;
2. The Scotch Rite of 33 degrees;

The Symbolic degrees, or Blue Lodge of three degrees, are common to every Masonic rite, whether American, Scotch, or Egyptian, or whichever of the Masonic rites, named in Mackey's Masonic Encyclopedia one may choose to investigate.

This chart shows in the Blue Lodge the position of the Worshipful Master and some of the other officers of the lodge. Several positions of the candidate who is being initiated are also shown. SEVEN NUNS PERISH.

SMOTHERED TO DEATH IN THE RUINS OF A CONVENT.

Pinned in the Fourth Story They Are Unable to Escape Owing to the Rapid Spread of the Flames—List of the Lost—Whole Building a Mass of Ruins.

Ottawa, Ont., Jan.—The convent of the Ursuline nuns at Roberval, on Lake St. John, about 120 miles north of Quebec, was destroyed by fire which broke out at 6 o'clock yesterday morning and seven sisters are known to have perished in the flames, while about fifty inmates had very narrow escapes from a similar fate. Were it not that most of the students of the convent had gone home the loss of life would probably have been greater.

The students were to have returned today. The convent is situated on the shores of the lake, about one mile and a half east of the summer and fishing resort called the Hotel Roberval, and of the village proper. Shortly before 6 o'clock the villagers were alarmed by seeing a reflection from the neighborhood of the convent.

At first it was supposed the fire was in the church, about half a mile from the convent. Naturally the greatest excitement prevailed, which was augmented when the alarmed villagers hurried to the scene and found the flames bursting from the convent building. Ordinarily there are about thirty nuns in the institution and about fifty pupils.

Nuns Smothered by Smoke.

The village has no water works, and the work of saving the contents was therefore difficult, while the flames had made such headway that their extinguishment was an impossibility. Many of the nuns and pupils slept in a domitory on the second story and these managed to escape; but others occupied a dormitory on the fourth floor at the north end. There was a fire-proof tower near this, but the rapidity with which the flames spread prevented the nuns from reaching it. They were smothered by smoke. The religious titles and names of the dead respectively are as follows: Mother St. Francois de Paul, Eliza Gosselin, of St. Jean Chrysostome; Mother Providence, Emma Letourneau, of Quebec; Mother St. Ursule Corinthe, of St. Foye; Mother Anna, Laura Hudon, of Herbertsville; Mother St. Antone de Padua, Catherine Boulte, of Deschambault; Mother St. Dominque, Marie Louise Girard, of Roberval; Mother St. Louise, Rose Gosslin, of St. Jean Chrysostome.

Probable Origin of the Fire.

Another nun was badly burned in trying to extinguish the fire. The convent and the school are nothing but a mass of ruins. Just how the fire started is not known certainly, but the day being the feast of Epiphany it is supposed that a lighted sandle near the cradle of the "infant Jesus" ignited the draperies and floral ornamentations, and in an instant the whole place was a mass of flames. The fact that parts of the convent were uncompleted caused the fire to spread more rapidly. The monastery was a stone building five stories high and 120 feet frontage, and was built eight years ago. The Ursuline nuns of Quebec, by whom it was controlled, are the oldest cloistered order in Canada, and it was in a cavity made by the bursting of a shell within their convent at Quebec that General Montcalm was buried after his death upon the plains of Aabraham.

BY FIRE, WATER AND BLAST.

Twenty-four Other Lives Lost at Home and Abroad.

Sistersville, W. Va., Jan. 7.—Two men were killed and two injured by the explosion of a boiler of the Fisher Oil company yesterday. The killed are: Sam Bigler, the boss, of Matamoras, O.; Milliam Austin, driller, of Warren, Pa. Injured: James Nolan, may die, and Charles Hinkle.

Pickens, S. C., Jan. 7.—The dwelling of Rev. M. L. Jones was destroyed by fire about 9 o'clock at night and two of his children were burned to death—his 12-year-old son Elbert, and his 15-year-old daughter Mary. They had been left at home alone, and were burned in their beds.

Brest, Jan. 7.—The steamship Belgique, while bound from Antwerp for Bayonne, France, was wrecked Tuesday night on Catshead Rock. Fifteen of the eighteen persons on board were drowned.

CASE OF THE MEADOWCROFTS.

Reasons Why Governor Altgeld Commuted Their Prison Sentence.

Chicago, Jan. 7.—The latest case of executive clemency in this state was that of the Meadowcroft brothers, bankers, who were convicted in the court here of receiving deposits right up to the hour of failure. In commuting their sentence to sixty days in jail Governor Altgeld says he acts on the advice of the trial judge and states attorney. The judge says he did not recommend clemency. His letter to the governor says:

"It was shown at the trial that at the time of death of the father of defendants the bank was insolvent." He further says: "No moral turpitude in the sense as usually applied to criminal cases was shown at the trial, nor was it shown that the defendants used the funds of the bank in illegitimate speculation, of for any purpose outside the scope of legitimate banking, or that they flagrantly abused their trust." The governor says that when the two young men took the bank they supposed it to be perfectly solvent, but at the expiration of three and one-half months it was discovered that much of the paper which the bank held, and which had been taken in by the father of defendants, had become practically worthless.

Weyler Arrives in Havana.

Havana, Jan. 4. — Captain General Weyler is back in Havana. He left camp at Bayate at 6 o'clock yesterday morning, arriving with an escort of cavalry at Artemisa at 12 o'clock and at Mariel at 3 o'clock. He immediately left there on the cruiser Legazpi, arriving in Havana at 8 o'clock last evening.

LAWMAKERS AT WORK.

Synopsis of Proceedings in the Senate and House.

Washington, Jan. 6.—Neither house did much business on reassembling after the holiday recess. In the senate Peffer introduced a bill to "improve the banking business," and Shoup one as to alien ownership of land. Call introduced two resolutions, one asking the president for information regarding the conviction of Sanguilly at Havana, and the other ordering Olney to demand Sanguilly's immediate release. Peffer spoke on his proposed monetary comission. The bill to reduce the cases in which the death penalty is inflicted under United States laws was passed.

In the house a resolution was adopted inquiring why patents were not issued to certain railway lands in Kansas sold by the Union Pacific railway to settlers. The Loud bill restricting the matter that can be sent by second-class mail was debated without action.

Washington, Jan. 7.—In the senate the bill to grant $1,500 to ex-Consul Waller was indefinitely postponed; a resolution was adopted calling on the interior department for a statement of subsidies paid the Pacific railways; Call spoke on Cuba and read a letter from a prominent American declaring that Charles Govin, an American citizen, had been chopped to pieces by the Spanlards in Cuba. Call's resolution calling for information about Americans imprisoned in Cuba was agreed to. The proposal to ask clemency for Mrs. Maybrick, in a British prison for poisoning her husband, was indefinitely postponed.

The house passed the Loud postal bill restricting matter to be carried second class in the mails. Some other business of no general intest was transacted.

Washington, Jan. 8.—The senate yesterday received a number of petitions as to Cuba and for and against the Loud bill. Mills introduced a resolution declaring it the right of congress to recognize new governments, recognizing the Cuban republic, and appropriating $10,000 for a minister at the capital thereof. A number of bills of minor interest were passed and the free homesteads bill was discussed without action. Morgan introduced a bill providing that the government fund the Pacific railways debts, take over the roads and run them until the bondholders were paid. Adjourned to Monday.

The house debated the Pacific railways funding bill all day without action except some minor amendments.

Washington, Jan. 9.—The house put in the day on the Pacific railways funding bills, the feature being a vitriolic speech by Johnson of California in favor of the bill and excoriating Editor Hearst, of the San Francisco Examiner, and Mayor Sutro, of that city. The reply by Cooper of Wisconsin was equally red-hot. A night session was held, but nothing was done for want of a quorum.

Washington, Jan. 11. — The house Saturday closed the debate on the Pacific railways funding bill. But one amendment was adopted of minor importance. No other business was transacted.

TRAIN RUNS INTO A STREET CAR.

Six Persons Serious Injured, Three of Them Possibly Fatally.

Minneapolis, Jan. 11.—At 7:45 p. m. Saturday a Great Western passenger train ran into a suburban street car, injuring a number of passengers, one of whom may die. The injured are: W. W. Riddle, professor of mathematics, State university, seriously injured about head, probably fracture of skull, may die; E. S. Quay's Man Beats Wanamaker.

Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 6.—The Republican joint caucus at 9:40 last night nominated A. Boies Penrose for United States senator to succeed Cameron, on the first ballot. The vote was: Penrose, 133; Wanamaker, 75; Cameron, 1; Representative J. B. Robinson, 1; Judge Charles E. Rice, 1. Absent or not voting, 4. In a speech to a meeting of his supporters last night Wanamaker declared it his purpose to keep up the fight against Qauy for the latter's defeat if he runs for senator in 1898.

Split in Delaware.

Dover, Del., Jan. 6.—The Delaware legislature was organized yesterday amid confusion and turmoil. The seven Kent county Republicans, against whose contest for seats the court of errors and appeals Monday decided, were denied recognition, and after fruitless protest the Republicans left the hall and organized a "rump" house at the Hotel Richardson. There they elected Dr. T. C. Moore speaker and Charles Hastings clerk. After notifying the senate that they were ready to receive any communication from that body, and receiving no reply, the body adjourned to meet next Friday afternoon.

State Will Lose Nothing.

Madison, Wis., Jan. 11.—The Commercial bank of Eau Claire, which went into voluntary liquidation Wednesday was a state depository, and had in its possession about $13,000 of state funds. The state is a preferred creditor, and will be paid in full. The money is amply secured by a bond.

One man has paid for an extra edition of 10,000 of the November, 1896, Lodge Lamp.

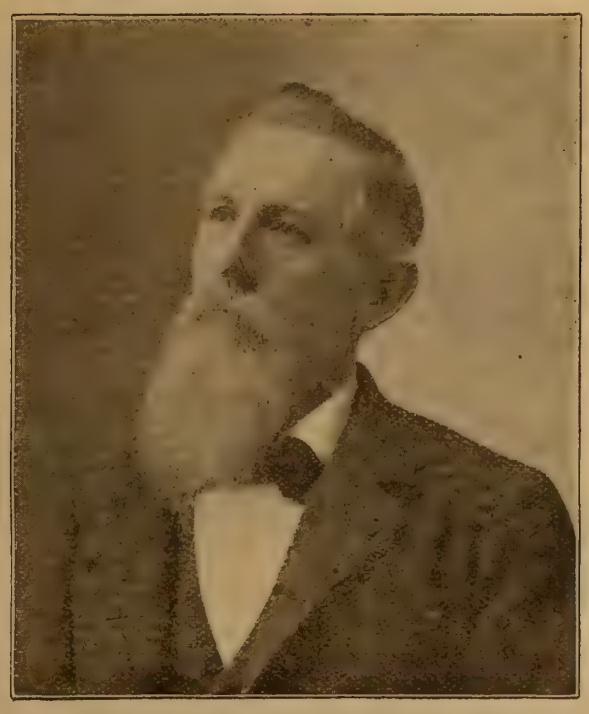
Secretary Phillips presented the work of the Association to the College Church, Wheaton, on last Sabbath, previous to the collection which that church takes up annually for this cause.

The Hartford Theological seminary have kept a file of the Cynosure for years, and we have just received the grateful acknowledgment of Mr. A. T. Parry, librarian, for last year's gift to their reading room. Large gifts to this fund would pay the donars as well as the recipients.

The "Reading Room Fund" for the placing of the Cynosure in reading rooms of colleges, seminaries, and Y. M. C. A.'s is a more important fund than the one sending the paper to ministers, and in both ways our secretary and publisher is doing all that he can with the means at hand.

We exhort our readers in Minnesota to prayerfully consider the means by which they can make their coming State convention at Willmar the best in the history of the State. And let them keep in mind the date, Feb. 23, 24. Write in reference to it to Bro. Wm. Fenton, 74 S. Robert street, St. Paul.

The Christian Citizenship League is organized for thorough work to prevent what has so long been the curse of Chicago, the election to office of corrupt officials. Rev. Chas. S. Bullock, one of the vice-presidents, says: "We will seek to bring into harmonious action the young people's societies of the several churches, especially the numbers who are voting young men. The city will be laid off in districts for the purpose of holding citizenship rallies to be addressed by prominent citizens. We will publish without comment the record of every candidate that is nominated, by whatsoever party, giving his business and the reputation he sustains in conducting that business. Where we consider a candidate bad we will recommend the other man to the voters if his record is satisfactory."



S. C. HART.

We are glad to show here the honest face of the author of the interesting sketches of early Kansas history which have inspired our readers for so many weeks. These sketches, they will be sorry to learn, are drawing to a close. Letters received from many of our readers indicate that they have deepened in their hearts the appreciation of the liberties which these Kansas pioneers sacrificed so much to procure. They have also opened their eyes to the secret lodge as the hiding place and bulwark of these conspirators against liberty. If it had not been for the refuge and instigation afforded by the Masonic lodges of Missouri, the border ruffian outrages in Kansas would have been impossible.

S. C. Hart's parents located in what was then Kansas Territory early in the fifties, and were natives of Pennsylvania and Virginia. They were in the hottest of the Kansas border conflict, and young Hart had many vivid experiences in those struggles he is now recording. He was only fifteen and too young to enlist when the war broke out, but served the army as cook in several important expeditions. He experienced some thrilling adventures and marvelous escapes in the Guerrilla warfare of Missouri, some of which we may narrate in tha Cynosure. After the war, while engaged in business pursuits in Kansas, he was solicited to join the Masons. But hearing of the murder of Morgan from those who had witnessed the trial of the conspirators, he became an outspoken Anti-mason. In his efforts to throw the light upon these dark-lanterned institutions he has been mobbed, and beaten, and slandered at the hands of Freemasons, but has lived through it all, and has seen most of his persecutors called to their final account.

In 1884, S. C. Hart moved to Lecompton, where there was no lodge or joint, and where his children could enjoy the advantages of the Lecompton University. About that time the division in the United Brethren church took place at the instigation of the lodge power, and the liberal or lodge element at Lecompton, as almost everywhere else, took all the church property and left the radicals to build anew. True to principle, the Harts espoused the cause of the poor and struggling minority. A remnant was saved out of the wreck which grew to a membership of over a hundred, and by much sacrifice built a church edifice. Mrs. S. C. Hart has finished her third year as pastor of this congregation. They have suffered much for their principles, and feel the worse for the wear, but have come out of it all with a home of their own, a clear conscience, comparative happiness and ten children.

Every charitable Association is crying out in unison and sympathy with the people because of hard times. Our work was never in greater need than at present. Let as many pledges be paid now as can be, and let every one help a little and the work which God is blessing will not lack.

There is a promise of blessing not only to the State of Missouri, but especially to the city of Kirksville, in the coming convention on the 4th and 5th of February next. Let prayer be made for the places where these meetings are held. There is an important State Normal school in that city; hence let us ask God to make the convention a great blessing to the students, and through them to the State.

If the contributions will warrant the payment of the traveling expenses of both Pres. Blanchard and Dr. Swartz, they will be present. So far the pledges will only warrant the attendance of one of them. We have the promise of an address from Rev. J. R. Wylie, and also hope that Bro. M. N. Butler will find it possible to be present. Eld. A. B. Lipp, Rev. J. T. Cullor, and others of Missouri's veterans, belong in the front ranks, and are expected to be present without any doubt. An agent from the N. C. A. headquarters will also be present.

Edwin D. Wheelock, president of the Christian Citizenship League, said in an address: "The Civic Federation of Chicago spent a large amount of money in cleaning the city's streets, and has done a great amount of work on other lines, for the doing of which city officials are elected and paid. The Citizens' Association has been actively engaged in attempting to enforce the law against selling liquor to minors. The Hyde Park Protective Association, the Society for the Prevention of Vice and other organizations are working to enforce various laws or prevent certain abuses. The startling fact concerning these organizations is that not one of them would be necessary if honest officials were elected. They are all doing work which is distinctively the duty of paid public officials."

THE FORCE OF PRAYER.

BY REV. S. THODEY.

"More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of."—Tennyson.

"Lonely wanderer, while you stray
Through the world's uncertain way,
In the dark and cloudy day,
Cast on God your care;
He whose very name is love,
Whom no change can ever move,
Deigns to bid you from above,
Try the force of prayer.

"Prayer has won the ear of heaven,
Prayer the bonds of death has riven,
Prayer 'gainst Satan's wiles has striven,
Broken many a snare;
Prayer has stayed the mid-day sun,
Prayer the victory oft has won,
And the coils of hell undone:
Try the force of prayer.

"Burdened sinner, though you know
Sin embitters every woe,
And you dread the gulf below,
Yield not to despair;
Jesus pleads before the throne,
Once for all he did atone,
Now he makes your cause his own.
Try the force of prayer.

"When the cares of life abound,
Earthquake shocks prevail around,
Knell to knell repeats the sound,
Tears, for tears prepare;
He who walked upon the sea
Rules the storm for thee and me,
And will surely succor thee:
Try the force of prayer.

THE BIBLE AND FREEMASONRY.

AN ADDRESS BY REV. J. H. LEIPER, OF PHILADELPHIA, BEFORE THE PENNSYLVANIA STATE ANTI SECRET CONVENTION AT OAKS, NOV. 18, 1896.

It has always been the policy of Satan, when he could not by one fell stroke crush a good cause, to resort to trickery and deception. A notable example of this was in his effort to break the power of Moses in the presence of Pharaoh. Moses performed a series of miracles by the power of Jehovah. But Pharaoh called in his smart magicians who, by their sleight, so closely imitated the miracles of Moses, that the king, unwilling to believe that Jehovah was superior to the gods of Egypt, hardened his heart and refused to let the people go.

When the divine Son of God came on the earth to redeem mankind, Satan knew him, if the Jews did not, and very soon undertook his old trick of deception, and men possessed with demons appeared in many parts of the country. This he did to mistify the minds of the people as to the fact of the divinity of Christ. Christ turned sparkling water into sweet unintoxicating wine at Cana of Galilee. The manufactors of rotten barley juice and "forty-rod" whisky are now claiming Jesus Christ as their forerunner.

Of course Satan is their instigator in this blasphemous claim. The slaveholder of the past was wont to claim Bible authority for that oppressive and degrading institution. But it remained for Freemasonry to lay its unholy, heathenish hands on some of the most sacred things of God and befoul them with the superstition and blasphemy and infidelity of the lodge. There are many illustrations of the truth of this statement which can easily be known without becoming a member of the fraternity.

It has been claimed that Freemasonry is as old as the race of man. The first lodge, then, must have been constituted and held in the Garden of Eden. There may have been some difficulty in officering the institution thus early. No lodge is properly constituted without a "Master," "Senior Warden" and "Junior Warden." Now Adam would be Senior Warden; Eve, Junior Warden (a dire case of necessity making female membership indispensable); and under the same unpleasant necessity Satan would have to be allowed to preside as Master. Thus a precedent was established of which Masonry has never been able to rid itself. I do not insist that this is veritable history. It savors strongly of Masonic tradition. But laying aside all sarcasm I indite Freemasonry with the following charges,

1. It is guilty of the crime of sacrilege. The office of priest is the most sacred ever created. We read Heb. 5:1, "For every high priest from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins." vs. 4, 5, 6. "And no man taketh this honor unto himself but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest, but he that said unto him, 'Thou art my Son, today have I begotten thee,' as he saith also in another place, 'Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchisedec.'"

So sacred is this office that no one under penalty of death dared usurp the functions thereof. Saul thought because he was king, and was on the eve of a battle, he would dare to offer a sacrifice, no priest being present. From that moment God forsook him. No man was ever rightly clothed with the office of the priest except as a type of Jesus Christ, our Great High Priest.

The entire worth of Christ's mission to this world depended on his priesthood. It was not as king or prophet that he offered up himself a sacrifice and made an atonement for our sins, but as the Great High Priest. It was in this capacity that he suffered all the way to the cross, in Gethsemane, before Annias and Caiaphas and Herod and Pilate. It was as priest that he gave his back to the smiters, his cheek to them that plucked off the hair and hid his face from shame and spitting. It was as priest that he suffered himself to be nailed to the cross and endure while there from men and devils more of shame and insult than was ever written. As priest, after six black hours on that awful cross, he "cried with a loud voice and gave up the ghost." When on the morning of his resurrection Mary would have embraced his feet, he said: "Touch me not, for I am not yet ascended to my Father. "The reason, as some think, being that he must first report on high to the Father the completion of his great work on earth, as Aaron went alone into the "Holy of Holies" on the great day of atonement.

As our Great High Priest he stands day and night in the awful presence of God "making continual intercession for us." Yet with all these solemn facts, these holy and heavenly associations centering around the profoundly sublime office of the priest, as we look in a Masonic Manual we find this sacred word and this divine office used with the utmost familiarity, and in the most sacrilegious relations. If burlesque had been the intention they could not have accomplished their purpose more certainly. What can the perpetrators of this daring wickedness expect at the hand of the outraged "Lion of the tribe of Judah" when he breaks forth in his wrath in the day of his vengeance?

That the reader may know that I am not putting this too strongly, let him procure Mackey's "Book of the Chapter" and turn to Section VI, Constitutional Rules, page 248, and he can see that in twenty-seven rules the term "High Priest" occurs seven times; "Grand High Priest" and "Grand or Deputy High Priest" three times and "Past High Priest" twice. But this is only an index to the wholesale use of the sacred name and office as seen in their voluminous ritual all through the Manual.

Very prominent in the ritual of the Royal Arch degree will be found a repetition of the crime of sacrilege in which the "Burning Bush" and the "Ark of the Covenant" and the "Tetragrammation" occupy prominent places as they name it; that is, the four letters Y H U H, which are the Hebrew consonants of what, when anglicized, is JEHOVAH. These Hebrew characters are sometimes engraved on a triangular plate or seal and called the "Ineffable name." Thus they commingle their own sacrilege with Jewish superstition, and palm it off on a thoughtless crowd as a great and secret mystery.

Nothing seems to be too high and sacred but this old sunworship modernized will reach forth its reckless hand and prostitute it to their heathenish purpose. How intelligent men, even ministers of the Gospel of Christ, can participate in such wicked mummeries is one of the mysteries. Can we pray for them as did the dying Saviour for the mob at the foot of the cross, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do?" May God open their eyes to see and their hearts to know what they are doing.

2. Another charge we are constrained to lay against Freemasonry, they expunge the name of the Saviour of men from his own Word. On page nineteen, Mackey's Manual, 1 Peter 2:5, 6 is quoted, leaving out the phrase "by Jesus Christ." Again, on page 103, 2 Thess. 3:6-16 is quoted which contains two such phrases but which are both omitted in the Manual. I do most solemnly call upon the members of the craft to take their Bibles and turn to and read Rev. 22:19: "If any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book." I have only mentioned a few of a large number of Scripture perversions, interpolations and garblings, glaring blasphemies to be found in this Manual; but enough has been said to prove that Freemasonry weighed in the balance of its own authorized and published ritual is essentially unbiblical and un-Christian. It has been charged that Christ is not mentioned in the prayers of the Masonic lodge.

The Manual quoted contains the published prayers the "Chapter" and not one of them contains the name of Christ who said, "If ye ask anything in my name I will do it." John 14:14. "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." John 14:6. I do not wonder that the name of Christ is omitted from the Masonic ritual because the institution is essentially heathenish and anti-Christian. But I do wonder how the professed friends of Christ can attempt to justify their membership therein. The voice to them from God is found in 2 Cor. 6:14th to 18th verses inclusive. O men, read it, heed it, and obey at once.

ONE BOAST OF FREEMASONRY.

BY REV. P. B. WILLIAMS.

One great boast of the Masonic order is, that it is universal. "From East to West and between North and South Freemasonry extends, and in every nation Freemasonry is found." On page 17 of "Masonic Jurisprudence," by Mackey, in a footnote under "Landmark First," we read:

> The fundamental principles of Freemasonry are, it is true, the same now that they were in the very beginning of the institution and must always remain the same, and yet there can be no doubt that, like every other science, Freemasonry is progressive in its character. It must of necessity be influenced by the progress of the age.....For proof of its passing from merely a social institution to a scientific and philosophical association, look to the Grand Lodge proceedings of 1815 and of 1858.

If we accept the statements on page 15 of Chase's "Digest of Masonic Law," we will find that from the time of the abduction and murder of Captain Wm. Morgan, universal Masonry was almost universally extinct. Chase claims that after 1826 there was no Grand Lodge formed till Florida in 1830, and then Arkansas 1832, and then none till 1843 in Wisconsin.

At this time Masonry should have been wiped from the face of the earth, had it not been for Odd-fellowship coming up and helping to bolster it up. The implements of Masonry are universal, except the Bible, and it may be supplanted by the Koran or "a book of the law" of the land in which Masonry exists. The conditions of membership, I presume, are universal.

One declaration of the candidate for Masonry in every land is a universal falsehood: "Do you solemnly declare upon your honor, that unbiased by friends, and uninfluenced by mercenary motives, you freely and voluntarily offer yourself a candidate for the mysteries of Masonry?" Answer, "I do."

When they say "I do," they lie like thieves. The spirit or philosophy of Masonry is universal. They persecute, punish and kill in all lands and all ages, whenever an enemy can be silenced in this manner without too much danger to the individual Mason, or the order in general.

If Masonry is what it claims to be and is universal, there would be an excellent opportunity for it to show its hand for "good works," by suppressing their Turkish brethren in stricken Armenia for killing the Christians. Suppose the Christian Church had such universal power as Masonry claims, and she should stand by and witness Christians murdering Freemasons; she would certainly be censured.

I am reasoning on the basis now of the universality of Masonic power. In this country, one Mason can run a whole community; get elected to any position. Somehow, as P. T. Barnum, said, "Americans love to be humbugged." Many of them are in bondage, and in love with their bondage.

Masonry universally knows no government but the government of Masonry; and as Mackey puts it, "knows no religion but the religion of Masonry." How Christian men can get the consent of their minds to join and practice Freemasonry, is more than I can see. They do not pause to think or investigate.

The Bible severely condemns such a relation. Human reason disagrees with it. The relation of the Christian to such an institution cannot be defended. A man who is connected with such an institution must either come out, according to Divine command, or they will "go out into outer darkness," as per Christ's statement. It is a matter of choice with each. Kill sin out, or sin will kill us. "Turn or burn!" "Oh, that men would be wise!"

IF I ONLY KNEW.

BY REV. D. B. GUNN.

Said a young man with whom I was reasoning, "If I knew that prohibition would ever be secured and we would be free from the saloons, I would vote the ticket every time." It was on the day of the late election, and he had just been to the polls and voted the straight ticket of a license party. A great many others thought the same thing and did in the same way that he had done, and are continuing to do it from year to year, and because of that fact I am writing these lines. They say that the saloons are a great curse and ought not to exist, but their votes say a very different thing.

How very short-sighted and inconsistent all such persons are. It is strange that they do not see that it is just that way of doing by those who really hate drunkenness, which prevents prohibition from becoming a fixed fact in our land; and just so long as they continue of like mind and to do in that way, so long they themselves prevent the entire banishment of open drunkard-making factories, which even they would hail with delight. May the day soon come when they will see that they, by their own inconsistent course, are perpetuating the saloon curse.

Verily, this want of applied Christian principle, their lack of right action and of faith in God for victory in a righteous cause, are responsible for the legalization and perpetuation of the liquor traffic, and the dreadful misery, poverty, crime, and all of the evils which result from it. Upon the same course of reasoning the merchant might say, if I knew that I should sell my goods and realize a profit, I would invest money and replenish my stock in trade; but failing to do so, lose his business and deprive his family of the means of support. The farmer could say, if I knew that I should secure a crop, I would plow, seed and cultivate my ground; but doubting favorable results neglects to do so and gathers no products with which to feed his family or his stock.

So, too, the minister of the Gospel would say, if I knew that my preaching would be effective and result in the promoting of piety among Christians and win sinners to Christ, I would preach and labor faithfully; but as there is an uncertainty about it I will do something else; or he spends his time idly, neither studying, preaching nor toiling as his commission lays him under obligation to do; so the cause of Christ declines before his own eyes, the people of God sleep and idle their time away all around him, and sinners go on down to hell unwarned, and the blood of souls is found upon his shirt.

What would be done in the world if only that was undertaken which there was a positive assurance of success in doing? What would the churches of Christ accomplish if there was no faith for the winning of victories and the achievement of successes on the part of their members? What a sad spectacle, if there was a complete lack of principle to actuate and stimulate those whose duty it is to put forth right efforts, and engage themselves in holy and moral enterprises, which are demanded by the crying necessities of the times in which we live, and the threatening condition of things that exist around us.

This same, "if I knew," is a very great stumbling-block in the way of many a short-coming mortal, with want of ringing words and righteous efforts, is giving sanction to the high sounding, great pretending "secret empire" of our day and all the "deeds of darkness" which are concocted by secret orders, and eminate from them. The concerted influence and united efforts of unfettered Christians, the ministers of the Gospel, the members of Christian churches who are free from the chains and fetters of lodgery, would be sufficient, were they faithfully put forth to make secretism hide its bald head in shame and drive legalized drunkard-making to the wall, to consign them both to oblivion where they belong.

THE PRICE OF LIBERTY.

Six thousand years of sorrow have wellnigh run
Their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world. And what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest.

In order to present an unbroken chain of events, useful as correct history, and to prevent confusion in the minds of the readers, much of interest, happening outside of the regular field of conflict, has been omitted and will now be supplied before the regular conclusion of the series.

Early in 1856 a party of men from the South entered Bourbon Co., Kansas. They were agreeable and circulated freely among the kind and unsuspecting settlers, making inquiries as to the quality of soil, ascertaining how well they were armed, and secretly noting their political faith. In July they began to arrest the Free State men thus listed, taking them into Fort Scott near the Missouri line, a Pro-slavery headquarters, where they were held prisoners, while Pro-slavery men took possession of their claims and chattels.

In due time pretended Pro-slavery friends would advise one after another to flee the Territory as the safest way out of the difficulty, and very confidentially would tell them that they could get them released on that condition, having an influence with the "powers that be." In this way they got rid of most of this class of settlers without resorting to overmuch bloodshed. This was becoming monotonous to this class of adventurers, and having been recruited to a hundred men, Texans and Georgians, they were spoiling for a more exciting kind of fun. So in August the whole band started up toward Osawatomie in search of fresh Free State game.

For many miles their march was without incident, when all at once a small force under Captains Shore and Anderson loomed up before them. Shots were exchanged and they fled precipitately, leaving two wounded behind them. Shore and Anderson pursued them a short distance, paying them leaden compliments; but fearing ambush so near night, they returned. But they imagined they were being pursued all the way and never stopped till at midnight they entered Fort Scott, yelling at the top of their voices that the Free State men were upon them and the town would be burned.

At this the people jumped out of bed and fled in all directions for safety; women and children crying, groups collecting and praying, while many took shelter in the bushes out of town, where some remained till daylight. In consequence of this scare many thereabout moved their families out of the Territory. The Free State men, who had been held prisoners at Fort Scott and confidentially advised to leave the Territory in 1856, returned in 1857.

Preliminary to demanding their claims they organized into a "Wide-awake Society," in opposition to the dark lantern society of the Pro-slavery men. They then notified the Pro-slavery men to relinquish the property wrongfully held. In case this was not done, the former owners would move on their claims anyway, when each claimant would usually muster all the force possible and wage a feudal contest till one or the other was either killed or dispossessed; the former owners usually coming out victorious.

It was not long, however, till they were again arrested, tried before the Pro-slavery courts and again dispossessed. This was too exasperating, and they concluded to institute a squatter sovereign's court for the adjustment of claims. Prominent among its members were Capt. Bain, P. B. Plumb, Jim Lane and Major Abbott. This court met at Capt. Bain's house, called "Bain's Fort," where they tried and dispossessed the Pro-slavery claim-jumpers and reinstated the former owners again, thus violating the Pro-slavery laws.

In December the Pro-slavery power sent out an expedition from Fort Scott, under United States Deputy Marshal Little, to break up this court of Squatter Sovereignty. As Little approached "Bain's Fort" he was met by a committee composed of Major Abbott, General Blunt and others who notified him that if he advanced beyond a certain designated point he would be fired on. They were informed that if the court did not immediately surrender he would blow it to ——

The committee returned and the court prepared for defense by punching the chinking from between the logs, while some took a position of defense behind the corners of the cabin outside. Seeing their preparations, Little made a dash across the dead line and received a volley that wounded four men and several horses; at which he fell back. A second attack was made and repulsed also.

Little then returned to Fort Scott after reinforcements. Surmising this, the court adjourned to a Baptist church some miles away, and when Little returned he found the fort evacuated. The court was reinforced to 300 men, and continued till its business was finished. Shortly after adjournment one of Abbott's men met one of Little's men, named respectively Weaver and Rhoades. Rhoades was drunk and assaulted Weaver with a deadly weapon, whereupon Weaver shot him fatally. Rhoades was buried with Masonic honors, after the ordinary resolutions of respect by the lodge.

From now on they killed each other in Linn and Bourbon counties frequently in retaliation, and this section had now reached a state bordering on a reign of terror. S. C. HART.

PRINCIPLE VS. POLICY.

This subject is suggested in connection with the leading article in last Hope, and the prophet's statement that when God's judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness. — Isa. 26: 9. The question is, What is righteousness? It is safe to say it includes right being and right doing. Separately considered the former is the more important, for it refers to the nature and constitution of man, and the action is the fruit of the condition. Right being is to be a good tree, and right doing is the fruit of the tree. We have the highest authority for saying that a good tree cannot bring forth evil fruit, nor a corrupt tree bring forth good fruit. When men are not right they may seek to justify themselves in doing either right or wrong from policy; but righteousness will make them do right out of a pure heart, from principle.

The wise man said, "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Prov. 14: 34. If nations were right, the judgments of God would not come upon them. The judgment or wrath of God is the legitimate result of the evil course men pursue, whether as individuals or as nations. The time of trouble coming on the nations is the heading up of the evil in their make-up and method of dealing. The financial crisis is the ripened fruit of the principle of competition. That principle is the opposite of the "Golden Rule," given by our Lord.

Competition means every man for himself, or every man against his neighbor, — a state of things which precedes the golden era of righteouness and peace on the earth. See Zech. 8: 10. It is based in selfishness, the ruling principle in the animal kingdom. It is necessary that men should be made to see and feel the natural results of this selfishness, to learn the hopelessness of a permanent society built upon competition. Realizing the fruit of the old way of selfishness, which fruit is God's wrath or judgment, they will be led to choose the better way of co-operation, based upon the heavenly principle of love and benevolence. For such a day of righteousness and peace and gladness our Lord taught his disciples to pray in these words: "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." Surely no Christian will claim that such a prayer is vain. It must be a lack of faith in our Lord that makes some say, "Ah! things always have been so; men always have been selfish, and they always will be." They think it is too good to be true that heaven's spirit of love and kindness will overcome and supplant in the earth the spirit of selfishness and strife.

Even many who have taken the name of Christ seem to think all he can do for men is to gather out a few and give them a home of glory in heaven. Do they forget that his mission is to remove the curse from the earth? Have they forgotten the glad song of the angels when announcing his birth: "Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace, goodwill toward men?"

In view of such a statement, may we not be confident as to the object of Christ's work, and properly regard the prayer, "Thy will be done in the earth," as a prophecy of what will be? Nothing that ought to be is too good to expect. What ought to be will be, because the Father of infinite wisdom, love and power is working all things after the counsel of his own will (Eph 1: 9 11), to bring it about. This is why it is declared that "when his judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." Isa. 26: 9.—The World's Hope.

A MASONIC MYSTERY.

LIGHT WANTED FR M THE EAST.

The Boston Daily Herald of Dec. 26 gives quite an interesting report of the recent visit of the ex-Queen of Hawaii to Boston. After a description of her general appearance, and of course her dress—for our present-day reporters appear to think this the most important part of a woman, whether she be queen or peasant—follows with this astonishing statement:

She also wore a badge of the Mystic Shrine, which was suspended from a gold chain. This badge was presented to her when she returned from her tour in 1887, when she was initiated into the mysteries of Masonry.

Now every intelligent reader of the Cynosure will agree with your correspondent that here is a Masonic mystery worth looking into. It will also explain the following communication which was sent to the Herald, but politely rejected by that paper, which evidently is not desirous of "light from the East" or any other quarter of the compass on such "Mysteries of Masonry:"

EDITOR OF THE HERALD:—The ex-Queen of Hawaii, now visiting Boston, enjoys a distinction much more rare and unique than that of having worn a crown, if the report given in your issue of the 26th is correct. After stating that she wore a badge of the Mystic Shrine, which was suspended from a gold chain, it is added: "This badge was presented to her when she returned from her tour in 1887, when she was initiated into the mysteries of Masonry."

Now only a Knight Templar Mason, or one of 32 degrees, can belong to the Mystic Shrine; and we believe there has been as yet no side-degrees added for women. There are other reasons, which cannot be stated without gross offense to decency, why it is impossible that Queen Lilinokalani can ever have been made a Mystic Shriner.

The former difficulty, that only Masons can join the order, might be answered by the remarkable assertion that on returning from her tour of the United States, in 1887, she was "initiated into the mysteries of Masonry," were it not for the inconvenient fact that according to all Masonic law, written or unwritten, no woman can legally be made a Mason. One of the "ancient landmarks of Masonry," as given by that standard authority, Mackey, in his "Masonic Ritualist," p. 242, is that "every candidate for initiation must be a man, free born, and of lawful age." The same law is laid down by one of the highest official authorities in the order, Daniel Sickels, who says in his "Abiman Rezon and Freemason's Guide," p. 19, that "the person who desires to be made a Mason must be a man."

If it is objected that Hawaiian Masonry may be different from American or English Masonry, the last and most important of the "ancient landmarks," as given in the "Masonic Ritualist," is that they "can never be changed;" and directly following, Mackey adds, that to these laws "the body of Masonry," as it has been called, "it is not in the power of man, or body of men, to make the least innovation." Everywhere this is acknowledged as a fundamental law in Masonry, and we cannot imagine it set aside for a moment, even to honor the deposed Queen of Hawaii.

If it be argued that she must have joined the Eastern Star, or some other order of Adoptive Masonry, listen to Rob. Morris, another standard authority, in his "Practical Synopsis of Masonic Law and Usage:" "In none of them (orders of Adoptive Masonry) is it proposed to bring females nearer to Masonry, or to communicate any Masonic secrets to them."

Now it is true there have been a few authentic instances—so few they could be counted on the fingers of one hand—of women who have been made Masons. But it was always for the reason that they in some way contrived to overhear or witness the secret ceremonies, and being discovered in the act, were made to take the regular Masonic oath with all its attendant penalties, "ever to conceal and never reveal" what they had witnessed, as the only (Masonic) alternative to taking their lives. But hear Morris once more in the same work from which I have before quoted:

"If by accident or improper conduct on the part of Masons, a female comes to the knowledge of any Masonic secrets, she is not thereby to be admitted into the lodge, nor can the brethren communicate with her upon Masonic subjects. Any lodge violating this rule would forfeit its charter; any brother infringing upon it would subject himself to certain expulsion."

So even if Queen Lil has been "peeping," it will be seen that no lodge could legally make her a Mason. And now the questions agitating your correspondent's mind are these: Is there not danger that many women, not posted in Masonic law, will ask, "If the ex Queen of Hawaii can be 'initiated into the mysteries of Masonry,' why not other members of the sex?" And is there not reason to fear that emboldened by this extraordinary statement, multitudes of fair hands will be heard knocking at the doors of Masonic lodges, to the confusion of the craft, who will be forced to ungallantly say "No?" and perhaps be put in the awkward position of having to explain the grounds of the denial; for there are always some unreasonable women whom this little monysyllable utterly fails to satisfy.

Will some member of the order kindly give us "light from the East" on Queen Lilinokalani's Masonic record? ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

REFORM NEWS.

BUSY WEEK IN PENNSYLVANIA.

WASHINGTON, D, C., Jan. 13, 1897.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am experiencing one of the vexations of life that comes from a lack of promptness. Had parties done as they agreed, I should not be thus delayed. These parties may have been hindered in turn by some one else. Oh, if every one would try to be prompt in fulfilling their promises how much easier things would move. I leave (D. V.) to-night for Johnstown, Pa., where I am advertised to speak to-morrow evening in the German Baptist Brethren church.

Last Sabbath morning I preached the Word in the People's Congregational church, this city. I took as my theme, the first petition of the Lord's Prayer. In the sermon I pointed out some of the institutions that not only refuse to hallow God's name, but rather dishonor that blessed name. It was clear that whenever we use that blessed prayer we pray for the destruction of the lodge. I think the truth was well received by most present. This church is of comparatively new origin. I think it was organized in 1890. They have a new house of worship valued at $30,000 or more. The spiritual interest was good. Several of the children in the Sabbath-school arose when the superintendent asked for a manifestation by those who wished to be Christians.

In the evening I visited the Central Union Mission. The full amount of good accomplished by this agency will never be known on earth. Night after night the truth is presented, and perishing ones rescued. Our brother Bailey is still at the head. He feels the opposition of the lodge in many ways, but remains true to his convictions. There were probably one thousand present at the Sabbath evening session. Your agent was honored, as usual, with a seat on the platform.

A warm welcome awaited me in Baltimore, Monday evening. Rev. Tressel, pastor of the St. Peter's Lutheran church in which I spoke, had thoroughly advertised my coming. A select company gathered at the hour appointed. There was at least one judge and several ministers in the audience. Quite an interest was manifest. Questions were asked in such number that I missed the 10:20 train, and did not reach home until one o'clock the next morning. This time of returning home would, no doubt, have suited the lodge devotee better than myself. A collection of $6 63 was kindly given by these friends.

Much of my time during the week has been taken in sending out the Pennsylvania State petitions. These petitions have been sent out with the prayer that God will greatly bless this effort in showing the people that a great wrong is being done; a wrong that may be righted. If all work together much good may be accomplished. Already letters come from enthusiastic friends who are securing signatures. Let all do the best they can and report.

We are securing lists of names of pastors in the State to whom petitions will be sent as fast as the money is provided. Will not those who will aid in this, report as soon as possible, that we may know what may be done? I shall necessarily be from home much of the time, but will receive frequent word from the Washington office, and direct in the sending out of petitions. How prospers the canvass in your section, friends? Shall I not hear from all? Address, 215 Four-and-one-half St., N. W., Washington, D. C.,

MARVEL NOT IF THE WORLD HATE YOU.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Jan. 15, 1897.

DEAR CYNOSURE READERS:—Grace, mercy, peace, joy, love and courage be with you all.

Bro. Phillips wants to know if there are not some rich men in St. Paul to help us. There are plenty of rich Christians here; but they heap to themselves teachers having itching ears, and they turning their ears from the truth, are turned to fables, "even the fables of the old ancient serpent worship." For example: They pay one six thousand dollars a year. He is an oracle indeed in the clouds of flowery rhetoric. Soon after he came to this city your humble servant called upon him to find out what he thought about Freemasonry.

He said to me, "There is a man in the city by the name of Fenton, who has disgusted us all in this matter of opposing secret societies by what he says about them; he has insulted Dr. Carson (who is a high Mason), and the doctor ought to prosecute him for libel, and have him shut up in the penitentiary. If what Fenton says about Masonry is true, Masons are lying hypocrites; but some of my dearest friends are Masons and they are ministers of the Gospel also; and I know that they are not hypocrites. But this Fenton is a low, mean fellow not worthy of the notice of a noble man like Dr. Carson. Nobody has any confidence in Fenton."

And so he went on. When asked if he knew the secret obligations of Masonry, he replied, "No." When he was shown a copy of the Masons' own book by which they work in the lodge while conferring the degrees, Ecce Orienti, he replied, taking it into his hand, "I know all about that." And his is one of the churches that applied for police protection against the distribution of Anti-masonic literature in the public streets.

It is, perhaps, the largest wealthy church in the city. I have tried to get wealthy members of that church to subscribe for the Lodge Lamp; but not even an appeal to patriotism could move one of them to subscribe in defence of rights of citizenship that have been outraged by secretism in the postoffice department. Devil worshipers may sit in the pews of such churches as Dr. Egbert's is, sip the wine, eat the bread and go to hell, for all that such pastors care.

Indeed they will, as we have seen, call upon the city police department to prevent them being warned against the eternal damnation revealed in God's Word, against such demon worshipers as Masons and Odd-fellows are. So far from preaching the Gospel, they preach to conceal the Gospel and snare the people in the devil's nets, the secret lodges. They "smooth down the stubborn text and Snugly keep damnation out of sight.

But I believe we are going to have a State Convention. For there is more than one Elijah today among the 7,000 that have not bowed the knee to Baal, and some will come to the help of the Lord against the mighty—the mighty are on the Lord's side; our Lord is the Almighty, and the god of the Freemason and the Odd-fellow shall never succeed in dethroning God and wrecking this universe as the Masons propose to do. Glorious times such as eye hath not seen and ear hath not heard awaits God's people, and all others shall be cast into hell. W. FENTON.

BUSY WEEK ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

SEATTLE, Wash., Jan. 12, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since my last letter I have spoken at Preston, King county, Wash., on the night of the 4th. I had a small audience, it being quite stormy and dark. Those present gave good attention. The few ladies present were most ill at ease. Some of their nearest relatives were lodge men. I was entertained here by Bro. Newkirk and his good wife. I obtained one subscription for the Cynosure and two for the Lodge Lamp.

The next morning I walked with Bro. George Stephenson to Fall City, where I had a comfortble home with him till evening; then I spoke at Fall City to another small crowd, but quite appreciative. Some lodgemen were out, but none undertook to defend the lodge. The Odd-fellows of this place have made a record in the past that does not commend them to the best people for patronage. Three subscribed for the Lodge Lamp and the same number for the Cynosure. I returned and stayed with Bro. Stephenson.

The next afternoon we walked to North Bend via Snoqualmie Falls, the most beautiful falls I have seen. The water from three good sized streams comes plunging over 380 feet, which makes a constant roaring, heard many miles away. There is a constant rainbow when the sun shines. No one can describe the beauty. Just above the falls, one mile, is said to be the largest hop field in the world. It has between four and five hundred acres. There was no appointment for me at Snoqualmie, so I had one night's rest. At North Bend I was very kindly entertained by Eld. W. M. Stephenson and family. They are all in hearty sympathy with the N. C. A. work, and know how to make the agent feel at home.

The next night I spoke at North Bend to the best audience I met on this trip. One subscribed for the Cynosure and one for the Lodge Lamp. At each point I felt that I would like to stay and preach Jesus to the people and get better acquainted, but duty calls away. So I returned to Seattle and spoke Sabbath morning in the Free Methodist church, and at night in the Seattle Seminary to an excellent congregation. I am always glad to get to worship with these dear people. One professed salvation Sabbath night. I go to-night to Edmonds. P. B. WILLIAMS.

FROM OUR FOREIGN WORK.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS TO SECRETARY PHILLIPS.

LONDON, England, Dec. 4, 1896.

Freemasonry is spreading rapidly over here in Great Britain in its influence over the poor churches. It boasts in newspapers of this fact publicly, knowing how little the public understand of its real origin, pretensions or workings.

A Christian worker from South Africa said that he was Grand Master of the Freemasons, and he believed that he had greater influence for God in the lodge from the fact that when members drank too much he had only to lift his hand and the drinking ceased. He said that he had agitated the question in the Salvation Army of allowing a lodge to be attached to them, but up to the time in which he spoke of it the consideration of it was postponed by them. Oh, may the Lord open eyes to loyalty to and fraternity with Jesus.

An elder in a Scotch church testifies: "Since the Masonic lodge was started in this place our spiritual church membership has suffered. My friend, an elder in my church, who used to be zealous in open air work, prayer meetings and other church work, suddenly backslid, telling me that it was better to leave church work to the minister. I went to the minister to ask him the reason for this change, but he told me I had better mind my own business. The date of my brother's declension in spirituality was the date at which he was initiated into Masonic membership. The uninitiated here know nothing about Masonry, and numbers of young men are being absorbed, thinking it to be only a benevolent society." I thank God that I have been prevented by the Holy Spirit from entering it.

In the town of ———, a young man had been working in a mission, full of zeal for Christ. Hoping to improve his social position, as it would seem, he joined a Masonic lodge, and from that time he left all church work and ceased attending any mission. When he was urged to come back to Jesus, he always said that he had taken the oaths, and that once a Mason, always a Mason, and that no one had ever seceded.

Oh, my dear readers, is it not better, like this young man, to leave all church work when you join Satan's kingdom, and not contaminate the flock of Jesus Christ's little ones? Few are satisfied here with remaining in the minor societies, such as the Rechabites, Foresters, etc., but sooner or later they are found to have joined the Freemasons. Lo, this great order seems to be the common parent of many families. Everywhere it is working havoc. Ministers are not only creeping in, but in many cases publicly defending Masonry as a help to morality.

NATAL, South Africa, Dec. 15, 1896.

I am anxious to get a supply of anti-secrecy literature for distribution here in South Africa. There is a vast field in the English Cape Colony and Natal and in the Transvaal, and, so far as I know, no one as yet has undertaken to spread the light, at least to any extent. [There are two other missionaries who are doing something. Mrs. Bridgeman, of the American Board, is especially interested. Who will assist us by donations to our foreign work?—ED]

CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM PRESIDENT THOMPSON.

TARKIO COLLEGE, Mo., Jan. 14, 1897.

MY DEAR BRO. PHILLIPS:—I must beg your pardon for a long delay in answering your letter of Dec. 28. Now that I have gotten to it, I regret to have to say that it will not be possible for me to be at the meeting at Kirksville at the proposed time. I know Prof. Simpson Ely, and am very glad to know that he is opposed to secret societies. I should be happy to meet with him and the others whom you mention but it cannot be.

Regretting that the amount is so small, I inclose a dollar for carrying on the work. May God prosper the organized effort in opposition to organized selfishness.

Very sincerely yours, J. A. THOMPSON.

GENERAL SECRETARY PHILLIPS AT ROCHELLE.

A GOOD TIME WITH OLD PARISHIONERS.

ROCHELLE, Ill., Jan. 13, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The unexpected, and yet the much appreciated visit to this city of the Rev. Wm. I. Phillips, secretary and treasurer of the National Christian Association, of Chicago, brought with it fond recollections of past ministerial duties well performed while he was pastor of the Church of God at Lindenwood, and other outlying appointments in Ogle county. Many of his parishioners of seventeen years ago are now residing in this city, and welcomed this visit with a cordiality and appreciation that made his short stay among us both pleasant and profitable.

Bro. Phillips as of yore was at his post of duty at the half-past nine o'clock Sabbath-school at the Methodist Episcopal church, where our worthy brother was recognized by the writer, while he was waiting to see if he would be recognized. But the well-known phiz, however changed by time or purpose, could not cover up that well-known kindly expression made so familiar with the many former associations.

The "Gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost," the subject of the lesson, which was so familiar to Bro. Phillips by his historical and experimental knowledge, gave an inspiration to me as teacher, that is known only by those who in humility are trying to teach the word of truth. The invitation so cordially extended to Bro. Phillips by the superintendent was accepted with the warning of the danger that might result from the granting of such privileges to an almost entire stranger; but being assured that there were no fears entertained, Bro. Phillips briefly stated the office work of the Holy Spirit, and the hindrances in the way of the Spirit's more perfect work. Among the many which were named was the filthy habit of using tobacco, and the debasing use of intoxicating liquors; and the lodges, also, were not exempt as a great hindrance to the operations of the Holy Spirit.

The preaching services in the forenoon and at the afternoon services at the Y. M. C. A. rooms were also enlivened by words of cheer from our good brother. The union evening services at the Presbyterian church closing the Sabbath day, we shall remember as a day in which we enjoyed the good cheer and association of our former estimable pastor, and hope more such occasions may be in store for us in the no distant future.

A. COUNTRYMAN.

A CRY FROM THE EAST.

TESTIMONY OF A UNITED STATES CONSUL.

ERZERUM, Turkey, Nov. 14, 1896.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I want to make an appeal to you, and, through you, to others, on behalf of the thousands of children made orphans by the massacres of last year. A conservative estimate places the number at fifty thousand. Think of it! fifty thousand children, and in most cases without a male relative in the world; their fathers, mothers, and all belonging to them, slain, and their only hope of living, the charity of strangers—thousands so young and helpless that of necessity they must die, but thousands that can and should be saved—thousands of boys and girls thrown upon the streets, and hundreds of girls outraged and then cast adrift.

In passing through villages burned and almost destroyed you meet girls weeping and shrieking, "We are defiled! we are defiled! Our fathers and mothers have been killed, and we are become vagrants! What shall we do? Whither shall we go? To whom shall we turn for protection? Help us or we die!" Our missionaries in Erzerum, Van, Bitlis and Harpoot can give hundreds of these girls homes where they will be carefully brought up and taught an occupation that will make of them good and useful women, thus saving them from the brutality of man. Thousands can be assisted in other ways. I am a poor hand at begging, but you can see the awful, pitiful condition of these children, and I know you will do what you can to save them.

Most sincerely yours,

LEO BERGHOLZ, U. S. Consul.

COMING MISSOURI CONVENTION.

DE WITT, Mo., Dec. 29, 1896.

DEAR FRIENDS:—In regard to the anti-secrecy convention to be held at Kirksville, Mo., I feel very deeply interested in the matter, and would give my aid if it were possible for me to do so. But if we can do no more than this, we can pray God to help his children in this glorious work. It sometimes seems to me as if the "seat of the beast" cannnot be very far away from this place, and his whole kingdom is full of darkness, and if a convention could be held at Kirksville, some ray of light from it might shine out even to us in De Witt; and as much as it is under lodge rule now, we hope it may be given to Christ.

The lodge here controls the churches, the schools and politics; and we may say there is but little buying or selling save by those that have the mark of the beast. We are apt to think the greatest evil is that which touches us most. It may be so with myself. My father was a seceding Mason, or had in some way displeased them. I never knew how it was, but I have known of the persecution and have felt its cruel stabs cut deeper than to the bone. My father, while living, not only himself suffered, but his family, and especially those members of it who tried to aid him in his trouble.

In the first place the Masons by their artful scheming managed to deprive him of his property. Here is where the battle for life began. But the ruin would not have been so complete had they even then let us alone in our poverty. What we have suffered is what first brought us into sympathy with the National Christian Association work. I sent for the Cynosure to see if other people's experience correponded with ours. I found that we were not alone in tribulation, for others have suffered in the same way.

I never knew that there was such a paper as the Cynosure till I by chance saw a notice of it. But I supposed we were alone, of all the families of this enlightened land, were persecuted, afflicted and tormented. A pleasing warmth came to my heart when I found out my mistake, that we were not alone, but hundreds were with us. To know this was like an angel of God strengthening me. It was not the National Christian Association that first made me acquainted with the wonderful mystery of Freemasonry, but it was the Masons themselves that let me into the secret of their workings.

My first clue was this, the people who were the cause of our losing all our earthly possessions were every one Masons. I can call each by name. This is what first caused me to see the source from whence all our ills came; and when any wrong has been done us it has always been my inquiry in regard to those who have injured us, are they Masons? I have thus found where the foe is.

There are many things among their secret arts and practices that we know to be true, yet we cannot prove them to be so. These we pass by unmentioned. In regard to the subject of Masonry, my father was always very reticent. He would not talk about it. But one time when some mysterious thing had happened, I said this is from the Masons, and we have suffered long enough. I will expose them. His reply was, it will only make matters worse. He looked so troubled and pained that I never referred to the subject again.

But what has hurt me more than anything else is to know that this mystery of all iniquities is upheld by those who stand high in the church. This has caused many weak in faith to stumble; the reason that if the principle of Masonry be bad, would so many ministers of Christ and intelligent Christian men uphold it?

But again, can anyone that is a Christian fellowship with infidels and profane, with murderers and pagans and every other abominable thing found in the lodge? Are they indeed Christians? If they are, they would be apt to leave the lodge by the shortest route, even though the penalty might be the throat cut, and reputation spattered by lodge filth, which lodge devils know so well how to use.

Though the faithful workers in the cause of right may succeed in tearing the mask away from that demon of Masonry and its foul face is revealed, I am convinced it will not be destroyed till our Lord comes. It will then be consumed by the "Spirit of his wrath, and destroyed by the brightness of his coming."

AMANDA SANDERSON.

JUSTICE TO THE NATION'S DEFENDERS.

CHICAGO, Jan. 14, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is amusing to notice the desire of some journals, published we suppose with a design to instruct the people, to eulogize patriotism by decrying the equity of pensions to the old soldier. The statement that the government has paid the soldier what it agreed to, and that is all that entire justice could require, seems in ordinary commercial transactions between men to be correct, but the case of the soldier with the government is very different.

In the latter case, the government compelled the services of the soldier at a stipulated price, in the fixing of which the soldier had no dictation. The price was fixed at the early stage of the war, and at that time expressed a certain unit of purchasing power, and was paid by the paper promise of the government. As the war progressed, the soldier's services to the government became more valuable, but the purchasing power of the paltry $16 per month received by the private, decreased until it was worth but little more than $5 50 as a factor of purchase. In addition to the mere commercial side of this contract, this same soldier had to hold himself in readiness to die, that the government employing him might live. And in almost every case he contracted bodily infirmity which prevents him from competing with the push of business life, and also has shortened his prospects of life.

Now the man who merely put his gold into the treasury of the government, received its secured promise to repay him in a ratio of nearly $3 to one that he put in, besides he received a rate of interest payable in gold, greater than any paid by any nation in Europe. If this treatment of the bond-holder was only just, surely that extended to the private soldier was not, and the miserable cowards who spend so much surplus energy in croaking about the old soldiers' pensions, styling these men beggars, coffee-coolers, bounty jumpers, etc., could not be induced to stand for five minutes where the soldier stood for all that he received for the three years' of service.

PLANS FOR M'KINLEY'S INAUGURATION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 11, 1897.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I had the following reflections after reading Miss Flagg's article entitled, "McKinley and the Presidency," in the October Home Light, of Boston: To make sure of a large attendance at the inauguration of McKinley on March 4th next, I would suggest that he be clothed in the same style and manner as when being initiated in the Master Mason's degree; probably the same dirty, filthy clothes and hoodwink could be procured. And that he be sworn into office by the same Worshipful Master. And furthermore that he be compelled to take the oath of that degree with the additional clause that he will not only protect the female relatives of Master Masons from insults, but all other women as well. Then at night at the Pension Office ball (or fandango) he and Hobart should consent to be publicly initiated in the Mystic Shrine, on a stage built for the occasion, as a further evidence of his love for the institution of Freemasonry. And with liberal advertising and acres of standing room provided for the show, enough tickets could be sold in advance to provide for paying the national debt, and help to build up a firstclass navy. He is the man, and the question is, will he do it?

P. E. WELLER.

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

JASON F. AMES, DEC 12, 1896, WAUBEEK, WIS.—Nearly every Cynosure seems better than its predecessors. My heart is with you in the conflict.

IRA METTLER, OCT. 3, 1896, CRESTON, ILL.—I would be glad to be more liberal in my gifts to so just and needful a cause, but at present I am so situated that I can't satisfy my own feelings in regard to this great conspiracy against the rest of mankind.

T. K BUFKIN, DEC 5, 1896, PASADENA, CAL.—I have been taking the Cynosure for over twenty years, and do not feel like discontinuing it at this stage of the fight in so good a cause as it is so nobly maintaining. The cause grows no less terrible; the work must continue. Times are hard, but I will try and remit at as early a date as I can.

MRS GEO C. TEMPLE, NOV 9, 1896, MILFORD, MASS.—I didn't subscribe for the paper in the first place, some friend sent it to me so I have no use for it. "God is shown me that I ought to pray for them dear people that is in those lodges instead of ridiculing them for some of them is deacons in the churches, also that we might have more love." Please stop the paper at once.

REV. D D FETTERS, NOV. 27, 1896, MISSAL, ILL.—Some time ago I became a three months' subscriber to the Christian Cynosure, and suffer me to say, that the paper henceforth is a welcome visitor to my reading room. It and the Christian Conservator should go together in every United Brethren family. May God help you to turn on the light. Yours for light and a pure Gospel.

REV. LEVIN WILSON, JAN. 12, 1897, CYNTHIANA, IND.—We have lodges of darkness in plentiful numbers, and of various types, all agreeing in holding their meetings after night, and in rejecting the Lord Jesus Christ. The membership is composed of ministers, church members, doctors, teachers, gamblers, visitors of whisky houses and saloonkeepers. In short, some are moral and some are immoral; neither seemingly have the preference.

OUR WEEKLY SERMON.

BY REV. J B. GALLOWAY.

But above all things, by brethren, swear not, neither by heaven, neither by the earth, neither by any other oath; but let your yea be yea and your nay, nay; lest ye fall into condemnation." Jas. 5:12.

'Tis not the many oaths that make the truth;
But the plain single vow that is vowed true.

Shakespeare here gives beautiful utterance to a great truth, which chords well with our text. We are aware that some good Christian brethren look upon this text as prohibitory of the oath. It is not our purpose to discuss the question which is here implied, but to take for granted that the Bible sanctions the oath lawfully used. We believe with all Christians that the oath is greatly abused; but what Divine ordinance is not abused by erring man?

1. As to its lawful use. The law demands that we shall not bear false witness against our neighbor. This makes a witness directly responsible to God for his testimony. Perjury is thus made a crime to be punished by law, and the atheist may be justly excluded. Thus a safeguard is thrown around the witness-stand in our courts of justice.

In the oath God is called to witness as to the truthfulness of the testimony, but God is witness whether called upon or not. In the oath we simply acknowledge this great fact: In all the important affairs of life man longs for assurance.

The oath tends to this. Even God condecends to meet this desire, by confirming his covenant with an oath. An oath in order to be lawful must: (a) Be administered by one having due authority. (b) The engagement entered into must be clearly understood by the parties. (c) It must be concerning that which is right in itself.

2 As to unlawful oaths. (a) It will be admitted by all that our text condemns profanity in all its forms. The most senseless and inexcusable of all sins. (b) The oath should never be resorted to in small or trifling matters. (c) The oath should never be administered by, or received from, one who is not legally authorized to administer the same. (d) An oath to perform unknown duties or to obey a code of unknown laws, is an abomination. Lev. 5:4

The last two counts have an especial bearing upon Masonry and other secret orders. 1. In Masonry the Worshipful Master has no rightful authority to administer the oath. Masonry is not in any sense a divine institution; neither is it a part of either church or state. If, therefore, it has authority it must be from beneath, as it cannot be shown to be from above.

2 It is a well known fact that the candidate for Masonic degrees swears to obey, to him, a code of unknown laws. Masons themselves realize the force of this objection, hence, the Master blinds the mind of the candidate with the following soapy words:

I assure you on the word of a man and a Mason, that there is nothing in the obligation that will interefere with your duties to yourself, your family, your country or your God. Are you willing to proceed?

Of course the hoodwinked and morally blinded candidate says, "Yes." But how, in the name of common sense, does the Master know that the said oath will not conflict with this man's views concerning family, God or country? There is a wide range of views on these subjects among men; even treason to all of these is no uncommon thing with multitudes of men. The fact of the matter is about this: Masonry conflicts with nothing except disloyalty to itself. This may be seen from the decisions of its own courts; and by its efforts to clear the guilty in the tribunals of the State.

3. Our text surely forbids the multiplicity of oaths. Here again the secret orders are condemned. In Blue Lodge Masonry there are perhaps not less than thirty distinct oaths; and when we add to these the penalty in each degree, we put the capstone upon the structure, on which may be written the name, blasphemy!

If there is another institution on the face of the earth that better deserves the name, let it be shown. How is it possible for the men of the mystic tie and the sacrilegious oath to escape the condemnation written in the text.

I will close with a query from De Quincey: "Then, also, when wickedness is so easy, why do they take all this trouble to be wicked?" "The how and the why are alike mysterious to me."

YOUR SUMMER SKIRTS.

How to Renew Petticoats Which Have Seen Service.

The wear and tear of warm weather leaves only too visible traces in the wardrobe, and petticoats in particular have a hard time of it.

On a damp, muddy or dusty excursion the dress is raised out of harm's way, but the petticoat takes its own share of hardship, with the addition of what belongs by right to the dress skirt. It is spotted by water, stained by mud and grass, permeated by dust, and, however carefully it may be brushed daily, unless it is of a kind that can be washed its beauty is soon a thing of the past. Silk petticoats suffer most in the campaign, although delicate shades of alpaca and moreen do not come forth scathless.

As for lace trimmed ones, they ought to be kept from the outset for house and piazza wear. The delicate, bell shaped, much beruffled petticoats of lawn or cambric that have figured so well under sheer organdie gowns will answer quite as well for evening wear during the winter if they are carefully laundried, provided that the lace has not been torn.

If it has, it should be replaced, torchon or valenciennes being the most desirable variety to use. The frayed and discolored ruffles of the silk petticoat may be ripped off and replaced by fresh ones, not necessarily of the same color, the garment itself well shaken and pressed with a warm flatiron before the new frills are added.

These may be of plain silk if the skirt is figured, or vice versa if harmony of color is preserved. Moreen and alpaca petticoats must be well shaken, brushed and aired and the edges rebound or freshly faced. If the material has been wet, it should be pressed.

How to Choose Poultry and Game.

Young poultry may be distinguished by the pellucid appearance and peculiar feel of the flesh and by the flexibility of the breastbone. The feet and bill of a young goose are yellow. They turn red as the bird grows old. If fresh, the feet are supple. If stale, they are dry and stiff. Young ducks feel tender under the wings; the web of the foot is transparent. Tame ducks have yellow legs; wild ducks reddish ones. In pheasants and quail yellow legs and dark bill are signs of a young bird. Pigeons should be fresh, fat and tender, and the feet pliant and smooth. The eyes of prairie chickens are full and round when young, and the breastbone is soft. Snipe and plover may be chosen by the same signs. Partridges taint first in the crop. If the bill is black and the legs yellow, the bird is young. If the bill is white and the legs have a bluish cast, the bird is too old for the table. The capon is known by a short and pale comb, a thick rump and breast and a fat vein on the side of the breast. When young, the spurs will be short and the legs smooth.

How to Tell the Quality of Drinking Water.

A simple test to ascertain the quality of drinking water can be made by filling a decanter half full, tightly corking it and then violently shaking it for a minute or more. On uncorking it, if the slightest disagreeable odor develops, there is some kind of pollution in it.

How to Prepare Cauliflower Au Gratin.

Boil the cauliflower, drain, lay in a dish and pour over it a cup of drawn butter well seasoned. Sprinkle with four tablespoonfuls of grated cheese and brown by holding a redhot shovel so close to the cheese that it singes and takes fire. Blow out at once and send to table. If the juice of a lemon and a half teaspoonful of French mustard are added to a cupful of drawn butter and it is then poured over the boiled vegetable, it is called "cauliflower with sauce tartare."

How to Make Candied Lemon Peel.

As lemons are used, drop the yellow rind into a weak brine in a glass jar. When a dozen are thus pickled, they are freshened by putting them into cold water and letting them scald, changing the water once or twice to extract the salt. Boil them in the last water till they are thoroughly tender and drain; then make sirup enough to cover them out of slightly more than a pound of sugar and a pint of water, using always the same proportion of pint for pound. Cut the peel into pieces about half an inch square and drop them into the boiling sirup, which is allowed to cook slowly till the peel looks translucent; then keep them slowly steeping till the sirup has almost dried out of the peel, spread on plates, sprinkle with more sugar and put in a cool oven to complete the drying.

How to Cook Carrots.

Peel and scrape some carrots and divide each into four quarters. Boil in salted water till tender and drain very dry. Dissolve some butter in a saucepan and add the pieces of cooked carrot. Shake constantly and after five minutes serve very hot with good brown gravy or dry, as taste dictates.

How to Prevent the Burning of Viands In the Oven.

Keep a small pan of water in the oven, refilling as often as necessary. If the oven is very hot, fill with cold instead of hot water.

How to Alight From a Carriage.

Grasp the dress lightly at about the knee, standing steadily on the right foot. Point the left foot sharply and bend the left knee, letting the weight of the body steadily down thus toward the street level, the prettily pointed toe and trim ankle being daintily in evidence. Directly the left toe touches the ground let it take the weight of the body with a pretty springiness. All the beauty of the move depends on the steady lowering of the body on the right foot and the pretty pointing of the left foot. If you need steadying, you may grasp the inside of the carriage with the hand nearest. The usual way of alighting from the carriage is to extend a flat foot and come down on it, while the grip on the side of the carriage is so tight that the whole body is swung around awkwardly.

The Christian Cynosure.

INFLUENCE OF REFORM LITERATURE.

We are in the world's reading age. The written word goes farther and exerts a greater influence than the word spoken. The most effectual means of advancing the anti-secret movement is by the circulation of its literature. Would that the friends of the cause could realize how the demand for this literature is constantly increasing. Our General Secretary Phillips is daily sending it out in response to appeals from almost every State in the Union, and from missionaries across the seas. But many of these appeals cannot be met for lack of funds. Much more would be contributed for this work if the friends would reflect on the multiplying and far-reaching influence of this literature. It was beautifully illustrated by the following extract from an eloquent sermon preached in the Wheaton College chapel several weeks ago, by Rev. E. B. Wylie, of the Summerdale Congregational church, Chicago:

"A good influence is always in a process of expansion, which goes on after death. Shakespeare is wrong when he says that the good a man does is often buried with his bones. The truth is a good deal of a living thing which never dies, and is never buried. A man may serve his generation with fidelity and in the course of time fall on sleep and be buried, and perhaps forgotten. But his influence once set in motion is as endless as the eternal years. Every good influence ever set in motion is still at work in the world.

"To illustrate how Christian influence augments and expands, let us follow a few facts which some one has traced out with special care. Toward the close of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, an obscure Puritan minister, whose name was Edmund Bunny, fell in with a book written by a Jesuit. This book he read and was deeply impressed. He thought it contained too much truth to be lost. Taking it he cut out the objectionable matter and handed it to a printer. Years after an old torn copy of this edition found its way to a humble cottage in Shropeshire. Here it staid till loaned to Richard Baxter's father. Richard, then a boy fifteen years old, read it and it pleased God to make it the means of his conversion. Baxter became a Christian worker, and wrote one hundred and sixty-eight books. One of these, 'His Call to the Unconverted,' twenty-five years after its author's death, fell into the hands of a young student at St. Albans, and resulted in his conversion. That student was Philip Doddridge. He also became a Christian worker, and educated young men for the ministry.

"He also wrote the 'Family Expositor.' Some of our sweetest hymns were written by him. And he also produced his 'Rise and Progress.' Thirty years after his death a copy of the latter book found its way into the hands of a young English statesman, rich, eloquent, accomplished. He read it and was impressed. He examined the Scriptures for himself. The result was the conversion of William Wilberforce, a name fragrant through all time. He in turn wrote a book, 'Practical View of Christianity,' of which more than a hundred editions have been published; a book which has been read where'er the sun doth his endless journey run, and which Edmund Burke spent his last two days in reading.

"The book had been published but a few months when it fell into the hands of a young curate, who became so engrossed that he finished it at a single sitting. That young curate was Leigh Richmond, who has been speaking in the simple story of the 'Dairyman's Daughter' to the millions for more than a century. In a letter to Wilberforce he acknowledged that the first sacred impression which he ever received as to the spiritual nature of religion, he received from that book.

"But this is not all. Wilberforce's book crossed the Tweed, and some fourteen years after its publication, fell into the hands of a young Scotch clergyman, talented, learned, eloquent. He read it while prostrated on a bed of sickness. 'It wrought,' said he in a letter afterwards, 'a great revolution in all my opinions about Christianity.' This young man was Thomas Chalmers, who has been called the Demosthenes of the evangelistic pulpit. He was the leader of evangelical reform in Scotland; his stirring eloquence has thrilled the hearts of thousands, and his literary works are found in every theological library in Christendom.

But this is not the end. We have traced the influence of Bunny's little book in one line of its march through a century and a half, and seen how it contributed its share in producing a Baxter, a Doddridge, a Wilberforce, a Richmond and a Chalmers; but who can measure the influence of Chalmers? This illustration of how Christian influence rolls on, wave after wave, is only one of a thousand which are similar.

A MODERN JEREMIAH.

Every day last week at the noon hour a mass meeting of the ministers of Christian workers of the city was held in the Y. M. C. A. hall. The large attendance and earnest praying spirit which pervaded these meetings indicated an unusual spiritual awakening. The meetings were preparatory to general revival services to be held in all the churches. The spiritual deadness of the churches has filled many pastors and others with alarm.

There was quite a sensation at the Tuesday-noon meeting, caused by the testimony of Evangelist Malcolm McNeil, chaplain and superintendent of the Chicago Sailor's Institute and Mission. He said that ministers, in order to secure a revival in their churches, must purge them of Freemasonry. It is time to consider the text, "Therefore, whatsoever ye have spoken in darkness, shall be heard in the light; and that which ye have spoken in the ear in closets, shall be proclaimed upon the house-tops." He said he had been an honored Mason for twenty-three years, and knew what he was talking about. He considered it one of the greatest hindrances to a revival of true religion.

More than a hundred present punctuated Bro. McNeil's remarks with loud amens, while a number of ministers sitting near him tried to silence his testimony, and one sitting behind him tried to pull him down by taking him by the coat-tail. It was easy to see that the Masonic ministers present were greatly disconcerted. The chairman, Dr. Johnson Myers, tried to pour oil on the troubled waters by saying, in substance, that our first concern should be to get the Freemason's heart filled with the Spirit, and then he would rightly deside the secret lodge question.

Scarcely any of the city pastors seem willing to tackle this evil, it is so wide-spread, deeply rooted and powerful. And is it not vain to expect a general revival of religion in our churches while they are so pervaded with this false religion of the lodge? How was it in the times of Jeremiah? It is not difficult to imagine a mass meeting in Jerusalem in one of the public halls in which the city pastors were discussing by what means they could secure a revival. After many speeches, Jeremiah rises and warns them of the false religion of Baal, which they must banish from their churches if they would secure a revival, and escape the threatened judgments of God. He was loudly denounced as a fanatic and calamity howler, and soon the king at the instigation of these Baal worshipers had Jeremiah thrown into a miry dungeon.

But instead of the revival, which these false prophets had been expecting, there came the Assyrian army and besieged their city, and leveled its walls, and destroyed its Temple and finest buildings, and took their king and people captive to Babylon for seventy years, during which time their land was desolate. And have we not reason to fear that fearful judgments will fall upon this city and land, unless the people turn from the modern Baal worship of the secret lodge?

ANIMALS THAT SHOULD BE LOOKED AFTER.

We are glad to note that Geo. T. Angel, the humane editor of Our Dumb Animals, in his last issue does not overlook a class of animals whose rights the Cynosure has been pleading for so long. He says: "It seems to us that the constantly increasing outrages by students in many of our Protestant universaties and colleges (and probably comparatively few of them ever get into our newspapers) will go far to help build up our Roman Catholic universities and colleges, where no such outrages are permitted or ever take place.

"And it seemes to us that unless some new influences are brought to bear, the time will come when some of our thinking millionaires will stop giving to institutions which send out (with better men) so many educated devils.

"And it seems to us that the time will come when the leaders of political parties will consider that public demonstrations of rowdy students in their political processions may be as dangerous to their party success as was 'Rum, Romanism and Rebellion Burchard' to the chances of Blaine against Cleveland."

HOW FREEMASONS HONOR THE BIBLE.

The American, an A. P. A. organ of Omaha, Neb., in its issue of Nov. 13, publishes a sermon preached in the Castillar Street Presbyterian church of Omaha, by the pastor, Rev. J. M. Wilson, D. D. It was preached before the Nebraska Lodge, No. 1, A. F. and A. M., and is a very excellent sermon from the text, Heb. 12:24, "Ye are come to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant." The minister gives due honor to Christ as Mediator and King.

Yet the preacher strangely overlooks the fact that Freemasonry greatly dishonors Christ by excluding his name from its ritual and prayers, and even strikes it from portions of his Word. It would be well if Dr. Wilson would weigh the article in this issue, by M. N. Butler, which we will call his attention to. He evidently needs to be better posted. Dr. Wilson says in his sermon:

"Again, He has spoken unto us in those last times in the Word of Scripture. His message began to be delivered in His earthly ministry and is completed and confirmed by His apostles. In matchless style, in simplicity of statement, in clearness of thought, in tenderness of emotion and in certainty of knowledge, He has made known to us in Gospel, Epistle and Revelation the mysteries of His kingdom. Beautiful is our English Bible, and here is Christ, the exalted Mediator, speaking to you. I am glad that Masons honor the Word. You believe with me that 'its entrance giveth light.' What is it that has made England great? What is it that has made the United States great? Only one answer: the English Bible. Put that Bible in the hands of the people, as the immortal Tyndale purposed and prayed, and ignorance, anarchy, priestcraft, superstition and tyranny must give way. That is the sword by which the millennium of peace and righteousness will be established.

"But as an exalted King, this Mediator has given to His subjects a supreme commission: 'Go, disciple all nations.' This is His chiefest work in this day and generation. And it is here that the objects of Masonry and the church of God stand out distinctly. Your work is education, friendship, benevolence, and in these ways you seek to lift up humanity. The work of the church is partly these, but first, fundamentally and ultimately, to bring sinners to trust in the Lord Jesus Christ and obey his commandments.

There need be no conflict; there should be no confusion. The church of Jesus Christ is to preach his Gospel, administer his sacraments and teach men to observe his commandments, and when Christ is so held up he becomes to us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption."

DR. DOWIE ON THE EASTERN STAR.

Dr. Dowie in his afternoon sermon in Zion Tabernacle on Sabbath, Dec. 27, held up a ritual of the Order of the Eastern Star as one of many trophies captured from the enemy. He said: "To me this is a very interesting thing. I have a very large number of rosaries, prayer-books, books of Roman Catholic devotion down at the Home. I think I have here in this box five rosaries, besides scapulars, agnus deis and litanies of the saints, and so on; these have been given up within the last few days by persons who have been recently converted and baptized from the Church of Rome, and who have no farther use for them.

"But here is another phase of the same thing, the Order of the Eastern Star, whatever that may be. We have had a number of demissions from that sent in to us, certificates that they have called for their demission. I do not know who put this up here to-day, but it is the badge of the order and its printed ritual. The lady is on the platform. Stand up and show yourself. [The lady rose.]

"Was that yours?"

"It was mine."

"Did you use this heathen prayer-book?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, now, did you ever notice that Jesus was not in it?"

"I have never noticed particularly. I never felt at home in the lodge. I used to have a happy home, but since my husband joined the Masons, and I joined the Eastern Star, I have had a very unhappy home, and I thank the Lord he has found me and led me into a better path."

"And you have seen his star in the east?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you have come to worship him?"

"I have come to worship the Lord."

"Is your husband out of it yet?"

"Oh, I pray for him every day."

"Is he here to-day?"

"I wish he was. I would get up and speak just the same."

"Amen. May the Lord bring him out of that."

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Mrs. Wilber F. Crafts, World's superintendent of the W. C. T. U. Sabbath school department, addressed the Washington W. C. T. U. recently.

—Rev. Chas. Clyde, a staunch friend of our cause from Valencia, Pa., was a welcome visitor at this office last week. He was enroute to preach at Glenwood, Minn.

—Mary E. Wilkins is engaged in writing a series of striking sketches of New England neighborhood life for The Ladies' Home Journal They will portray a small community's social indulgences, sketching the old-fashioned quilting-party, the time-worn singing-school and an apple-paring bee.

—General Secretary Phillips has for several months been under an unusually heavy strain in managing the financial interests of our Association during these times of financial depression. His correspondence, too, is constantly increasing. Let our readers remember the heavy burdens he is bearing, and give him a large interest in their prayers.

—The Wheaton College church has no very rich people among its membership, and most of them are in moderate circumstances. But its annual report in our judgment highly commends this church when it shows its benevolences to have been over $1,500, and its entire home expenses were less than its benevolences. Few churches can show such a record.

—A report having been published in a Washington paper that Lady Pauncefote, wife of the British Ambassador, had joined the practice of the continental European diplomats and was holding Sabbath afternoon receptions, that lady promptly caused the following notice to be inserted in the "society column" of the most widely read Washington paper: "Lady Pauncefote does not receive Sabbath afternoons."

—Mrs. Sarah L. Warren Carpenter, of Aurora, Ill., died Jan. 10th. The funeral was at Warrenville, Jan. 12th. She was the wife of Abel E. Carpenter, a brother of Philo Carpenter, Chicago's pioneer settler, and the donator of our N. C. A. headquarters. She came to Chicago in 1833, and was the first woman school teacher in Chicago. She taught for three years in the English and classical school opened in that year by G. T. Sproat.

—Chicago is much in need of an ordinance like the following adopted by the Pennsylvania Legislature in 1887: "Any person or persons who shall put up in any public place any indecent, lewd or obscene picture or character, representing the human form in a nude or semi-nude condition,.....shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars, nor more than three hundred dollars."

—Rev. J. M. Wylie, of the Drexel Ave. R. P. Mission this city, who is deeply interested in the anti-secret cause, has made our office several visits lately. The editor enjoyed the privilege of occupying his pulpit last Sabbath. Bro. Wylie has undertaken to build up a church in Chicago on the social evangelistic basis. He proposes to make his pulpit an exponent of every social and moral reform. Rev. Edwin B. Graham, editor of the Midland, has an appointment to speak at this mission Friday evening next week.

—We have received a copy of a "Metrical Tune Book," of which Mr. T. B. Arnold, a member of our Board of Directors, is the author in connection with Philip Phillips and J. G. Terrill. Bro. Arnold is also the publisher. The price per single copy varies from 75 cents to $1.25, according to binding. It has been adopted by the Free Methodist church as their Church Hymnal; and it is in our judgment the best book for general use in church, prayer meeting, Sabbath-school and revival services which we have ever examined of human composition. It is just about the right size and weight. Has enough of the old familiar hymns with a goodly number of new ones to make it a choice selection. Among the writers of words and music we notice those of our friends Rev. J. D Wyckoff and Rev. O. S. Grinnell of Wheaton, Ill. We advise anyone desiring a church or Sabbath-school hymn book with music, to write to T. B. Arnold, 104 Franklin St., Chicago, Ill., for a sample copy.

TAKE NOTICE.

Our Publisher announces this week, that for this year the clubbing price for the Christian Cynosure and the Weekly New York Tribune for 1897 is $1.75 for the two papers.

A SAD BEREAVEMENT.

Bro. H. M. Hugunin, of this city and former editor of the Cynosure, suffered last week a great bereavement in the death of his only remaining son, Clifford Augustus Hugunin, which occurred at the Cook Co. Hospital, Monday evening, Jan. 11. On Thursday his body was laid to rest beside that of his mother in the beautitul Mound Cemetery at Racine, Wis. The deceased was 44 years of age, and the only surviving member of Bro. Hugunin's family. We know our readers will not forget to pray that the Comforter may be with him in his loneliness and sorrow.

LETTER FROM BRO. H. M. HUGUNIN.

MY DEAR FRIENDS OF THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Believe me, I hold in the highest appreciation the sympathy and kindness that prompted you to so materially befriend me in my great sorrow and necessity by your freewill offerings. May God amply reward you for the consolation and comfort that you brought to me. It is a practical Christianity that deeply touches my heart, enlarges my affection for the people of God, and draws me closer to the blessed Saviour whose love is boundless, and who has in all my afflictions shown me that he is indeed mighty to save. Without his grace I never could have borne this sudden and severe bereavement. With his grace and your unselfish liberality, I am to-day indeed walking in his light, enjoying his peace and abiding in his love.

Gratefully yours, HENRY M. HUGUNIN.

A SKETCH OF MY LIFE.

BY ELDER S. C. KIMBALL.

CHAPTER XLVIII.

A call was immediately issued for a State convention to be held at Lake Village, now Lakeport, Nov. 23 and 24, 1875, to expose the evils of oath-bound secret societies, and to form an association auxiliary to the National Christian Association. This call was signed by fourteen ministers and twenty-two laymen.

Among these signers, J. Franklin Brown, Simon Rowe and Ebenezer Smith deserve special mention for long and faithful service in the anti-secret cause. Some think the devil's throat can be cut with a straw, but that is not my opinion. As chairman of the committee I had the laboring oar in arranging for the convention. I engaged Elders J. P. Stoddard and D. P. Rathbun for leading speakers, and secured the Baptist church for the meetings.

The gentleman who acted for the Baptist church in making the contract said, as the lodge people were somewhat sensitive, he would rather the place of holding the convention should not be definitely named until we issued the notice of the meeting. I said all right, so it shall be. At the proper time I published the call and caused posters to be put up at Lake Village, and as widely as possible.

In a few days after, I received a letter from the committeeman of the Baptist church, with whom I had contracted, saying that we could not have the Baptist church for our convention, because the lodge people were making such a stir about it.

Rev. King S. Hall was pastor of the Baptist church at that time. I was busy teaching at Strafford, thirty miles away, but the only thing to be done was to hitch in my horse and go to Lakeport to secure a place for the convention. No church was available. As a kind providence would have it, an old friend, a native of my own town, Hopkinton, David B. Story, kept the Lakeport hotel. He made no pretense to religion, and was a Freemason, but he was a gentleman.

I stated the case to him plainly. He said without hesitation: "You can have the use of my hall for the two days and first evening, but the second evening it is already engaged." I thanked him and went on my way rejoicing to find a shelter for the last evening. I secured the Advent Christian church for the last evening. This was done with difficulty, as a prominent owner in the house was a lodgeman. Justice requires me to record that in my twenty years' conflict with the secret empire, no denomination of Christians has stood by and aided me like the Advent people and their ministers. They will not regret this when the Lord comes.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

CHARACTERISTICS OF ONE POPULAR LITERARY WOMAN.

Pretty Visiting Costumes—The Buffalo Scribblers — Woman's Emancipation. Trimming Mother's Hat—They Mean Business—A Debutante's Reception.

Lack of nationality in her work and in her personal characteristics inclines us to place Joanna E. Wood among the cosmopolites. Of Scottish birth, Canadian education and American literary training, she is a person of such wide sympathies that no other classification would readily suggest itself.

While she was yet an infant her parents came to this country and chose for their home a picturesque spot on the heights at Queenston overlooking the Niagara river. Here Miss Wood's childhood was spent, and no doubt the splendid natural environment among which she was reared played no small part in forming the future writer. Her education was received at the St. Catharines Collegiate institute, a school which in its 69 years of existence has trained scores of those who are now Canada's best known men and women.

To write was Miss Wood's ambition from her earliest years, and very thorough has been her preparation for her chosen work—so thorough that it was only after much study and hard reading that she thought of giving her writings to the public. For a long time they were shown only to her elder brother, who had been her constant critic. In fact, it is to him that Miss Wood ascribes her subsequent success, for in spite of his severity with her literary faults it is to him that she owes all her stimulus and inspiration. But life, even more than books, she has studied in a most systematic way.

The Buffalo Scribblers.

The Scribblers' club of Buffalo is an organization of professional and amateur writers, probably the best known of the latter being Anna Katharine Green, formerly of Brooklyn. Many of the professionals represent Buffalo dailies, while the amateurs are women of social rank and connected with various philanthropic, educational and charitable organizations. This fraternizing of talent is productive of much good, the amateurs being just the kind of friends required by young women employed in newspaper work, for, while many of the latter have never lowered their standard of refined expression, others cannot resist the temptation to write smart things at any cost.

Such a club as the Scribblers' gives an opportunity for the women of leisure and wealth and the women who have taken high rank in authorship to combine their influence and provide a safeguard, by their friendship, for those who may need it. A noteworthy fact of this fellowship is the grateful affection shown by the younger members toward those whose influence has been helpful to them, some of the most successful referring their achievements rather to the guidance of some friendly and eminent literary woman than to the possession of native talent.

The Scribblers are not without aims other than that of mutual advancement. They have founded an art scholarship, providing funds to educate a young girl for this profession, and as their membership increases they expect to find a larger field for work. They have no permanent quarters, and need none, for they have a standing invitation to use a private parlor in any of the leading city hotels. Their meetings are held fortnightly, and their programmes cover a most interesting variety of subjects, amusing as well as instructive.

Woman's Emancipation.

Woman's emancipation was for many years a sentimental vagary. Now it is an accomplished fact. This is not so much due to advanced ideas as to the labor saving inventions of the age, most of which have emanated from the creative brain of men.

Our grandmothers planted their own flax, spun their own thread, wove their own cloth and shaped their own garments. Before the days of sewing machines they stitched unceasingly, and to know how to sew was a necessity rather than an accomplishment. Now the whiz of the treadle is heard in every home, and the busy seamstress accomplishes in a day what she could not have done in a month.

Wringers, patent soaps and stationary tubs have released the aching arms of the laundress from the drudgery of washing. The housemaid lightly runs her sweeper over the carpet and disdains to handle the honest broom. The cook turns up her nose at the homely kitchen range and boils and bakes by gas or electricity. The dairymaid's occupation is gone, as the cream is separated and the butter churned by machinery. The busy housekeeper need no longer put up her fruit and pickles, as that is done at the factory.

In fact, in this mechanical age human hands seem almost superfluous and the labor saving devices so numerous that women are no longer bound, like Ixion, to the wheel of household drudgery.

The once busy housekeeper, released from the thraldom of baking, sweeping and washing, has leisure to keep herself posted about current events, the newest book and the latest fad in art, music or fashion. The old regime has passed away, and women, no longer hampered by household cares, stand forth the peers of their husbands and brothers in education and enlightenment.—Godey's Magazine.

The Rights of Widows.

Mrs. Rudolph Blankenburg of Philadelphia has been recently elected president of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffragist association. She has drawn up a bill which will be presented to the legislature in favor of the rights of widows. As the law is now, the widow may receive only one-third of the joint property of her husband and herself and the income of only one-third of the real estate for life—that is, provided the husband has made no will. If the wife owns property and fails to make a will, the husband is entitled to all the personal property and the use of all the real estate during his life. Mrs. Blankenburg wants a great change made.

Reading Women Mean Business.

The Reading (Mass.) Chronicle does justice to the earnest work of the women of that town. It says:

The ladies of Reading will never rest contented until their sex is represented on the municipal boards of the town. They will keep everlastingly at it until their aim is accomplished.

Last year they put forward Mrs. Ellen M. Bancroft as a candidate for a position on the school board and Mrs. Gertrude K. Hussey as a trustee of the public library They failed of election by a small margin of votes. These ladies were again indorsed at a meeting at Mrs. William Carter's Thursday afternoon.

The ladies are even more aggressive this year than last and will probably suggest a candidate from among their number for the overseers of the poor.

This departure is probably due to the agitation that was occasioned by the discussion in The Chronicle regarding the conduct of affairs at the town farm. For some time past, if not always, the selectmen have been also elected to serve as a board of health. There are many reasons why this should continue to be so. The two boards have very much in common in a financial and executive way, and it might be unwise to divorce them.

The Chronicle concludes with a suggestion for the election or appointment of an advisory board of women whose duty it would be "to advise with the overseers, keep an eye on the town farm, report on the outside poor and in a general way to interest themselves in the department." But we hope the women will decline a position of responsibility without power. Women are eligible as overseers of the poor and should be chosen as such.

La Grande Francaise.

Of Mme. Furtado Heine, known as La Grande Francaise, who died recently, the London Globe says: "She was the widow of M. Charles Heine, the millionaire and cousin of the famous German poet. During the empire Mme. Heine was a leading figure in Parisian society, but in latter years she seems to have derived more pleasure in utilizing her wealth in alleviating the sufferings of the afflicted rather than in attending the gatherings of fashionable Paris. To her belongs the credit of having established several blind asylums and orphanages. When a disaster occurred and funds were needed, she was always to the fore with a large subscription."

Cora Stuart Wheeler says, in The Ladies' Home Companion, that nothing has been more largely instrumental in smoothing away the irritation left by the civil war than the mingling of northern and southern women in the conventions of club federations.

Paris has a woman's club where homeless women can spend their evenings and get their meals. There is a good library, and for 60 francs a year a woman may become a member. All the employees about the place are women.

An excellent holder for a handkerchief is now formed as a clasp, with a safety pin attachment which is fastened to the belt or waistband. It is made of gold or silver, enameled or otherwise ornamented.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

Topic For the Week Beginning Jan. 24. Comment by Rev. S. H. Doyle.

TOPIC.—Our failures and successes.—Luke v, 1-11.

The idea suggested in the topical reference is failures and successes in Christian work, especially in the work of trying to lead souls to Christ. It is the story of the second calling of Peter and Andrew, James and John. Although they had toiled all night and caught nothing, at Jesus' command Simon launched into the deep and let down the net and it was filled.

1. Failures. On his way from Cana to Capernaum, Jesus enters the ship of Simon Peter and preaches to the people. He then commanded him to launch out in the deep and let down his net. Simon replied, "Master, we have toiled all the night and have taken nothing." Failure! How these few words picture before us the condition of many who are fishing for men! It tells the story not simply of a night's work, but often the story of weeks, months and even years. It is a story of toil, toil, toil, but nothing caught. The fish are wary. They avoid the net, and, heartsick and discouraged, we feel like giving up. But the remainder of this incident inspires us to renewed efforts even in the face of apparent failures.

2. Successes. To his statement of fruitless toil Peter added, "Nevertheless at Thy word I will let down the net." What a wonderful result followed! "And when they had done this, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes, and their net break." They called their partners to help them draw in their net, and their ships were filled. This was the result of obeying Christ. Success is sure to crown our efforts if we keep ourselves right with God and do as God wants us to do.

There are many discouragements in Christian work. We often feel like giving up. Many Christians are dead, and it takes six pallbearers to carry their corpses. The world is careless and indifferent and turns a deaf ear alike to warnings and entreaties. The more we toil and labor the worse, often, it seems to get. But in the face of all these things the command is, "Launch out into the deep and let down your nets." If this method has failed, try another. If the fish will not come to the net, take it to them. "Be not weary in welldoing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not." There are many encouragements. Christ inspires us by His own toil and labor. In the gospel He has given us a net abundantly able to attract and to catch the souls of men. He has promised to be with us and has sent His Holy Spirit to comfort and to sustain us. It is ours to toil and labor patiently, watchfully, skillfully, prayerfully, hopefully, and the result will come. "He that is for us is greater than all they that are against us."

Bible Readings.—Math. xxiv, 11-14; Mark xiii, 1-14; Luke ix, 57-62; John xvi, 33; I Cor. xv, 58; xvi, 13; Gal. vi, 9; Col. ii, 4-8; II Thess. iii, 12, 13; I Tim. vi, 12-16; II Tim. iv, 7, 8; Heb. iii, 6; x, 36; II Pet. iii, 14.

Man's Dependency.

Christ put forth no philosophic theories of life. He made no guesses as to its purposes and its outcome. He spoke in clear words and with authority, as a messenger of divine truth would, and He told of man's dependency on God, of death and judgment, of heaven and hell. The church must do likewise. A presentment of the gospel which does not hold in the foreground man's accountability is incomplete and truncated Christianity. It misleads and deceives.—Most Rev. Dr. Ireland.

True to Her Trusts.

It is one of the glorious things that can be said of the true church of Christ that she is true to the trusts reposed in her. No organization can be glorious that is untrustworthy. It is a blot upon character that no greatness of numbers or wealth or enterprise can ever remove. Dishonesty in peasant or prince is a blight that even the world abhors. But integrity marked on character is everywhere a passport to public confidence.—Christian Instructor.

Clear Conscience and Bravery.

How bravely a man can walk the earth, bear the heaviest burdens, perform the severest duties and look all men in the face if he only bears within his breast a clear conscience void of offense! There is no spring, no inspiration, like this—to feel that we have omitted no task and left no obligation undischarged. This fills the heart with satisfaction and the soul with strength.—Hebrew Standard.

Christian Endeavor Briefs.

Australia's delegate to the San Francisco Christian Endeavor convention has already been appointed. He is Rev. Silas Mead, president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor of Australia.

A unique but melancholy service was done by some Christian Endeavor young men of Yarker, Ont., in digging the grave for the burial of a young man whose parents could not afford the expense.

Eight prisoners in the Louisville jail were baptized on a recent Sunday. The men, one of them a murderer, had been led to Christ through the services held by a Christian Endeavor society of the city.

Twelve girls comprise a Junior Christian Endeavor society in an industrial school for girls in Toronto. Last year these children gave $30 for missions, all raised by their own efforts.

A library containing 200 volumes has been placed in the United States Marine hospital at Detroit by a few Christian Endeavor societies.

The town of Alvin, Tex., with less than 2,000 population, has four Young People's and three Junior Christian Endeavor societies, with six churches and seven Christian Endeavor societies.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

CLUBS FOR BOYS.

How Some of the Youths of New York Who Work Intend to Improve Themselves.

A unique boys' club has been started in the slums of New York. Clubs for the benefit of poor boys are not new. Many such have been established by churches and charitable societies, designed to counteract the dangerous influences of the street by offering resorts at once attractive and refining, and such efforts are worthy of all commendation. But the new boys' club is different. It is not dependent on charity, public or private, for its maintenance. It is run by the boys themselves.

This club is composed of a number of ambitious working boys who desire pleasant and elevating surroundings for their leisure hours. They have made their moral requirements just as high as those which obtain at the St. Nicholas and the Knickerbocker, and their membership list is already full.

Their rooms are located in the basement of 200 Eldridge street, in one of the most crowded quarters of the city of

New York. The place is tastefully and comfortably furnished with tables, chairs, bookcases and some gymnastic apparatus. There are water color pictures on the walls, handsome rugs on the floors and cozy corners fitted up with divans and cushions. The older boys—though all are under 16 years of age—are daily adding other comforts and attractions and spare no efforts to keep the smaller lads off the street as far as possible.

Numbers of boys who do not belong to this club have become deeply interested in its methods and have begun the formation of similar clubs elsewhere. Their plan is to create a series of them throughout the tenement district in which the idea originated, these various societies to be associated somewhat after the manner of the chapters of a college fraternity.

Each club must be strictly self supporting, but as the members are not overburdened with cash care will be taken to keep the dues down to a very low figure.

David Willard, the president of the Eldridge street club, says: "Every boy who works for his living is anxious to elevate himself if opportunity is afforded him. Many poor boys, reared in crowded tenements amid all the sordid surroundings of the slums, have had their natural inspirations toward better things suppressed by brutal or ignorant parents. To these the club idea appeals strongly, and they enter with eagerness into all plans for rational amusement and recreation. This kind of association will serve to develop their minds, elevate their morals and strengthen their characters and will do much to fit them for useful citizenship."

Certainly this is an experiment the development and outcome of which philanthropists must watch with keen interest.

Two Workmen.

The following story from Wide Awake is not new, but its truth is vouched for, and its lesson is so clearly taught and so important that it is worth repeating:

Two men once stood at the same table in a large factory in Philadelphia. Having an hour for their nooning every day, each undertook to use it in accomplishing a definite purpose; each persevered for about the same number of months, and each won success at last.

One used his daily leisure hour in working out the invention of a machine for sawing a block of wood into almost any desired shape. When his invention was complete, he sold the patent for a fortune.

The other man, what did he do? Well, he spent an hour each day during most of the year in the very difficult task of teaching a little dog to stand on its hind feet and dance a jig. To be sure he succeeded, but what then? At last accounts he was working ten hours a day at the same trade and at his old wages, blaming his luck for the hard fate that kept him poor, while his fellow workman had become rich.

Find the Hidden Name.

Each line of the following sonnet contains in regular arrangement one of the letters in the name of a famous American. The letters follow one another in mathematical succession. See if you can pick them out and find the man's name:

A man who was in peace and war a chief
Above the pettiness of party strife,
A brawny, kindly one of simple life,
A brave and noble soul who gained relief
For thousands of his fellow men in grief
And slavery, and who when war was rife
Called mighty troops that marched by drum and fife
To free black slaves. His public life was brief,
But great in deed and word and gentleness.
A statesman born near the Ohio's shore,
Of humble ancestry, who worked his way
By strictly honest means to great success.
